"I believe there is great hope for the law, particularly the law of a republic . . . That hope is embodied in a view of law that transcends the old idea which says the law is nothing but the command of the sovereign. In a republic . . . every command of the law should be seen as a question.

"A Socratic philosopher of the law, Scott Buchanan, has stated this thesis to show how 'law teaches those who obey it' (Mr. Wofford adds also those who disobey it). Buchanan says, 'Laws are questions asked by God, history, nature, or society to be answered by men individually and collectively. This formulation penetrates to the heart of human freedom. It says that no law, not even divine law, cancels out human freedom; the answer can be Yes or No or something else. It also tacitly warns of the consequences of the answer. But primarily it forces the human being to think about ends, or purposes."

The law, then, is no mechanical thing passed by a legislature or council which good citizens have no choice, however bad, but to obey. To the contrary, each citizen must ask himself of every law, is this a law I should obey? Is it a just law? Is it so unjust that from the beginning I must disobey or can it wait the process of parliamentary reform? Is the process of parliamentary reform hopeless or is it so slow that "justice delayed becomes justice denied?"

In this view, when one holds a law to be unjjust and openly disobeys it, asking for the penalty of the law to be placed on him, he is not an anarchist but is following

". . . a natural and necessary part of the great due process of our law, that process of persuasion through which we govern ourselves. Civil disobedience is a kind of persuasion of the last resort, within the boundaries of law, sometimes the only kind available.

"Is this anarchy? I hope not, for I agree with Justice Brandeis that our government is 'the potent, omnipresent teacher that teaches the whole people.' The law will play its full role as teacher only when we look upon it as a question. For it is the voice of our body politic with which we must remain in dialogue . . . Civil disobedience is one way in which we can exercise the choice that law gives us."

To put forth the proposition that civil disobedience, the willful and persistent breaking of man's laws with a cheerful acceptance of the penalty for such violations as not being necessarily anarchistic or irresponsible, presents man with a frightening question and one that is expressed often: "Then this means every man can decide what laws he will keep and what laws he will break?" The answer, frightening and freighted with responsibility as it is, is "Yes." Unless a man is willing to hand his conscience over to custom or to the state, the responsibility is solely the individual's and the only authority to which he can turn is his conscience. Mr. Leslie Dunbar spoke seriously and soberly of this responsibility to Earlham students in a convocation address:

"The idea of civil disobedience was born when men began to feel that they possessed and were possessed by souls to which they had to be true. From this realization came the theory which we call natural law, and came also the idea of the free, responsible individual and his natural rights. This has brought hardships as well as its glories, its pains and burdens as well as its satisfactions. For if the old idea of the free, responsible individual means anything, it means this: that each of us, every day, when confronted by the commands of the law, asks, 'Will I' or 'Won't I obey?' . . . This is an awful weight, a crushing responsibility if we take it seriously. And we have seen men flee that responsibility, seek escape from that freedom, yearn desperately to give it up, and to find security in the comfortable, protective embrace of a social and political order which fashions all one's values.

"Nor is there any aid for the individual . . . The responsibility is solely the individual's, and the only authority to which he can turn is his own conscience. It is he who must decide that his conscience directs so clearly and forcefully that he can presume to speak for God before other men . . . And with the same seriousness, those who violate manmade law in order to obey conscience have the responsibility, first, to understand what a weighty responsibility it is to appear as God's interpreter and, second, to see celarly they are constrained to act."

Even though we grant the right to civil disobedience be grounded in Christian and democratic tradition and practice so that the automatic angry response of "anarchist" is unwarranted, some will still raise the question: "But are they justified at this time and in this place to break our laws?" And the answer for many will be: "I cannot justify their acts. They are irresponsible."

May I offer for your consideration further word from Mr. Dunbar as he faced this problem himself:

"I cannot . . . justify the acts . . . in disobeying the law. I think no man can, for even an attempt to do so is an invasion of the autonomy of the individual, who himself has the choice to make. It is he who must undergo the tension, weighing in the scales the legitimate claims of the social order and the directives of his own conscience. All that another can do is give material aid and comradely comfort.

"This much one man can say to another. If he cannot advise him when to obey and when not to obey the law, if he cannot even endorse his decision when it is acted on, he can at least say to him this: The civilization that we have and enjoy and boast of, with its freedom and its gentleness, its richness of knowledge rests on the shoulders of an amazingly few individuals who, in their time, saw what there was to do and chose to do it. That when freedom fails, no man does escape. That some of us who live today in freedom do so because some men—some few men — have interposed their lives and their security for the rest of us, and have been the atonement for humanity."

This is written, not to lift all the persons involved in the present wave of civil disobedience to the high status of sainthood, nor to imply there is nothing but religious and democratic purity in their motivation or action, but to put our situation in the perspective of religious and democratic tradition and practice that we might do more than react angrily with invective.

It would be a tragic misuse of our present crisis if in our anger and hurt or even if, in calm and reasoned disagreement over the necessity for and methods used at the present time, we failed to face our own responsibiilty and refused to ask: what can we do? There are many, who in their pique and anger, are doing just that. All their moral indignation is expanded in castigating the demonstrators rather than facing the moral problem before us.

Can we not say that whatever our attitude toward the demonstrators, whether we approve or disapprove, or with Mr. Dunbar feel we have no right to justify or condemn, each in his own way must act. Uninvolvement for one who cares is unthinkable now.

Surely, I nor anyone else can tell another what to do. This is a matter for every man's conscience. But some suggestions may be made. There are those who with good conscience cannot work for a solution of the problem by breaking the law or passing a law. Persuasion is their way. For some, it will be economic persuasion. If so, then the list of offending businesses can easily be gotten and one can refuse to cooperate in continuing injustice by withdrawing trade. If one believes only in moral suasion, then one can speak to those who need to be persuaded. One can go further and present themselves for service but politely leave when service is denied. The Human Relations Committee, a special committee appointed by the Merchants Association, and the Ministerial Association have all through persuasion brought some changes. They have all reported failure to make further progress since last summer and have given up in these efforts. It is my belief that there could be further progress by persuasion if students and citizens of Chapel Hill accepted their personal responsibility and acted as individuals refusing to delegate to others what they should do themselves.

There are others who believe, as does the Mayor's Committee on Human Relations, that persuasion has been faithfully and energetically tried and only a public accommodations law will bring fair treatment to all our citizens. Last summer the Aldermen tabled a motion to deal with the problem by a public accommodations law. The motion was tabled to give a special committee of businessmen appointed by the Mayor an opportunity to exhaust all persuasive means. They failed. Monday the tabled motion will be brought before the Aldermen again. Is this not the time for each of us who believe a public accommodations act would be a step in the right direction to let this be known? How does the conscience of the community get expressed if individuals will not act?

Individuals have a tendency in Chapel Hill, as elsewhere, to sit out these troublous periods. We have our desires and hope, but we leave it to officials and organizations to deal with them. Justice Holmes once said, "I think that, as life is action and passion, it is required of a man that he should share the passion and action of his time at the peril of being judged not to have lived." Let us not fail to share the passion and action of our time. Your conscience and concern may lead you to act in one way or another, but the present crisis faces each of us with the question: What must I do?

Finally, let me suggest, in this crisis we must ask the impossible of ourselves. Whoever we are, participators in civil disobedience, one who believes "voluntary" desegregation is the way, one who believes law is most important or even one who believes in segregation — we must try to remember we are all human beings. In controversies between human beings, whether social, political or religious, men have a hard time doing that. Those who have poured chlorox and ammonia, used broomsticks and feet to kick protestors, have forgotten the demonstrators are human beings. And those of us, who are on the other side, may all too easily forget the segregators, for all their inhuman actions, are human, too. Even among those whose aim is racial justice, bitterness and anger when they disagree over methodology can be strong.

We are probably in for more, not less, conflict in Chapel Hill—conflict between those who practice civil disobedience and those who segregate, conflict even among those working for the end of segregation. But wherever we stand, whatever our judgment and conscience lead us to do or refuse to do, we must try to remember we are all fallible, erring, selfish and fearful human beings. One need not act with less conviction—he will need to act with less self-righteousness; one need not act less vigorously—he will need to act with more love; one need not act with less self-assurance—he will need to act with more humility and less angry judgment as regards his fellow man.

To people in controversy, the Apostle Paul once wrote, "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye who are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, lest ye also fall." He was never quite able to do that himself, but it never prevented him from keeping such a goal before him. The measure in which we are able to remember we are all human beings will to a large degree determine the quickness with which we emerge from this crisis and the genuine progress we make because of it.

New Wine Savors Well — Reviewer

By NINA KING

"New Wine," published by the UNC Westminster Fellowship, begins its second year of existence with a new printed format and an ambitious subject. In keeping with past policy and future plans, the current 50-page issue is devoted to varying viewpoints on a single subject—Race. Last spring's magazine tackled Sex, and two forthcoming editions will treat of Death and War.

The drawbacks of such an approach are obvious. It is impossible in such a tiny space to touch on even a fraction of the facets of these monumentally complex problem. Nor does "New Wine" presume to do so. As editor David Dillard's preface indicates, the primary aim of the magazine is "to provide a starting point for frank discussion, dialogue, and debate," rather than to synthesize all aspects and viewpoints or to proselytize for one particular overview.

Nonetheless, the general tone of the various articles does reflect a philosophical common denominator—an essentially Christian, humanitarian and liberal orientation. Of the 14 articles and reviews, only one, "Race, Education and Christianity" by W. C. George, presents the conservative, segregationist viewpoint. This cannot be attributed to the fact that "New Wine" is a "Christian Journal of Opinion," for, as all white Baptists know, Martin Luther King is not the only preacher in the South. Nor is the possible lack of articulate, literary - minded segregationists in Chapel Hill any real justification, for many of the included articles are reprints from other journals. "New Wine" 's objective goal would have been greatly served by the inclusion of more presentations —reprints if necessary—of the conservative viewpoint.

The opening article, "Freedom and Responsibility in Religious Perspective," was written by A. Knighton Stanley, director of the United Southern Christian Fellowship at North Carolina A. & T. In spite of a rather uninspired style, Mr. Stanley's article is a fascinating application of the existential concept of freedom as man's basic right to choose "himself," his own image, in relation to the problem of segregation. In Sartrian terms, the horror of this absolute freedom lies in the correspondingly absolute responsibility which accompanies it. From Mr. Stanley's point of view, Christianity serves as the ultimate definer of this existential responsibility. The existential evil of segregation lies in its denial to the Negro of his God-given right to choose his own image. Working from this starting point, Mr. Stanley successfully justifies defiance of the man-made system without forgetting the responsibilities which accompany this freedom to deny.

In contrast to this reasoned philosophical approach is the article by Barbara Deming, sometime CORE worker, which follows it. Entitled "Notes after Birmingham," Miss Deming's story is a first-hand account of the emotions of a white participant in the Birmingham nightmare.

"Property Rights and Human Rights" by Robert Phillips, is an effective delineation of one man's coming to terms with the complex problems at the core of public accommodations conflicts throughout the nation. Does the law have the right to qualify, for any reason whatsoever, the use which an individual makes of his own property? Given a weak and qualified majority affirmative (the nationwide acceptance of such governmental rights as that to control the distribution and manufacture of liquor, for example), the problem of the limits within which such control may be exercised is undoubtedly the single most important question facing the American liberal today. Mr. Phillips' personal solution does not involve a clear-cut line beyond which the legal authority may not step (though it is evident that he finds public accommodations laws justifiable). It does, however, provide a context within which the problem may be approached, a view of property rights as distinct from human rights best expressed in a quote from Walter Lippmann:

"Private titles of ownership are assigned by law-making authorities to promote the grand ends of civil society. Private property is therefore a system of legal rights and duties. Under changing conditions the system must be kept in accord with (those larger ends of society.)"

Under the general heading, "Would you Want a Daughter to Marry a Negro," are presented three answers—by John Clayton of the UNC RTVMP Department, Markus Barth of the Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, and UNC sophomore James Parker (whose article is definitively entitled "My Sister Did.") In spite of a variety of approaches and tones, the three answers rest on the same rather incontrovertible premise — that the foundations of a desirable marriage are love and respect. Within this context, skin color becomes a definitely secondary problem.

In the section "Genetics and Race," Canadian neurologist Wilder Penfield and UNC professor of anatomy and anthropology William S. Pollitzer confront UNC's own scientific bigot (or misunderstood prophet, depending on one's prejudice), W. C. George. This is, of course, a subject almost impossible for a layman to intelligently criticize. Pollitzer and George work from equally impressive statistics towards completely divergent conclusions. The layman attempting to find a similar path to conviction is bound for confusion. Cerebral cortexes (or cortices?) and cultural anthropology aside, the problem for the average man is an ethical one, and it is within this context that he must make his decision.

Two interesting Negro viewpoints are presented in the section "On Being a Negro Today." Evangeline Darity, UNC graduate student, is a liberal, educated Negro out of the mainstream of the current Negro movement. Edwin Okoroma is a Nigerian exchange student whose forthright description of the duality of his own position in the U.S. lends immediacy and emphasis to the diplomatic corollary to the American race question.

The remaining pages of "New Wine" contain a discussion of "The Black Muslims in North Carolina" by Wayne King, a thought-provoking review of Baldwin's "Letter from a Region in My Mind" by Robert W. Spike, and a less inspired discussion of Griffin's "Black Like Me" by Robert Reddick.

Available at Lenoir Hall, Y-Court and several other outlets on campus and in Chapel Hill, the Fall issue of "New Wine" is an impressive addition to the college magazine field.

WUNC To Air Race Crisis Discussion

Deadlock in Chapel Hill, a documentary presenting the most comprehensive picture thus far gathered on the desegregation crisis in Chapel Hill, will be presented on WUNC radio Sunday evening at 8.

The documentary contains the voices and sounds of pro-and anti-desegregation efforts in Chapel Hill since last spring. It includes actual recordings of public meetings on the issue, sounds of violence at the sitins, voices of demonstrators and segregationists, and statements of public officials, including Mayor Sandy McClamroch, Aldermen Giduz and Robinson, Human Relations Committee head Mrs. George Taylor, Merchants' director Joe Augustine, CORE leaders John Dunne, Quinton Baker, and Pat Cusick, and others. Ministers of various denominations and various congregations are also heard in this documentary.

The material, which presents the sounds and facts and opinions of all who wished to be heard — deliberate effort was made to interview persons of all attitudes and opinions — is especially significant at this time, in view of the planned vote Monday night by the Board of Aldermen on a public accomodations law. WUNC radio is heard at 91.5 on the FM dial.

Stevens Looks At Bowl Trip

By HUGH STEVENS

Memories of a Gator Bowl:

If you haven't peered bleary-eyed through a train window at the sun rising from a South Georgia swamp, you haven't lived.

At least that's the way it seemed to many of the thousands of Gator Bowl fans, including myself, as we rolled across the Southland in the various special trains Dec. 27 on our way to see our Tar Heels square off against the Air Force.

For many, if not most, the train trips were a combination of New Year's Eve, the Fourth of July, and Mardi Gras. Before the iron horses had hardly commenced their journeys southward from Raleigh or Rocky Mount or Greensboro, the jubilant fans (most of them alumni) began to whoop it up in festivities that were—well, festive.

We didn't all go by train, of course. Some, amazingly, piloted their automobiles through the alcoholic haze. Others winged in on charter on commercial flights, several walked or bummed their way, and some simply found themselves in Jacksonville on the morning of the game without any clear recollection of how they got there.

Whatever the method, though, they really arrived. They marched from the train singing "We don't give a damn for the Air Force Academy, we're from C-a-ro-li-na." They alighted from airliners decked out in Carolina blue sweaters, vests, and stetsons. They charged from taxicabs with pennants, banners, lapel buttons, and amazingly healthy lungs. In droves they swamped downtown Jacksonville, to the delight of merchants who had prepared special Gator Bowl prices.

The Robert Meyer Hotel, UNC alumni headquarters, was the scene of joyous reunions between friends who hadn't seen each other for at least 24 hours. Wives in mink propped up their celebrating husbands, and an impatient seven-year-old demanded, "Daddy, who are all these people?"

After breakfast the rampaging Tar Heel faithful began a mass migration toward the shining new Jacksonville Coliseum, where a "brunch" and a giant pep rally were scheduled at 11 a.m. The "brunch" was non-existent, and some enterprising soul was charging 50 cents admission to the pep rally, but the faithful came anyway.

Former governor Luther Hodges put in an appearance, but he was somewhat overshadowed by an intoxicated alumni in an enormous hat who led a couple of raucous cheers. He was a tough act to follow, but the UNC band and cheerleaders proved equal to the task. They whooped it up noisily, including a round of boos for an Air Force colonel who put in an appearance.

Long before gametime, the bowl began to fill, and the Florida sun made a valiant effort to burn away the high cloud cover. As the temperature inched into the upper 60's, shirt sleeves became the order of the day.

The game, or more precisely, the massacre, was almost anticlimatic in the wake of the pregame revelry. By halftime, when the Gator Bowl Queen (a real knockout) adorned the field and the UNC band put on the same old halftime show (Volga Boatmen, Trumpeter's Holiday, etc.) for what must have been the twentieth time, the contest was in the bag. The usual tense excitement associated with a Big Game gave way to a glow of pure contentment.

When the final 35-0 was on the scoreboard and time had ticked away, the Tar Heels swarmed onto the field to congratulate the players, Coach Hickey, and most everyone else. Afterward they headed for any one of a hundred parties to celebrate Carolina's first bowl victory.

Some of us attended the very impressive awards banquet to see Ken Willard inducted into the Gator Bowl Hall of Fame. The inch-thick sirloins went down easiily, and it was good to be a Tar Heel when that huge trophy was presented to Hickey. Even when the banquet ended, it just seemed natural to hang around soaking up the victorious atmosphere.

All good things must come to an end, though. My last memory of Jacksonville is of trying vainly to doze off in spite of a florescent light which persisted in shining in my eyes, and hearing the final shouts of those climbing aboard who had partied too much and too long.

It had been a great game, a great party, a great day. But most of us had extended ourselves too far, trying to be a part of it all. And as the darkened train huffed out of the dreary station and rumbled homeward, the tired Tar Heels slept.

1964: YEAR OF DECISION

Well sir, here we go into 1964, which shows every sign of being quite a distinguished year. First off, it is the only year since 1954 which ends with the Figure 4. Of course, when it comes to Figure 4's, 1964, though distinguished, can hardly compare with 1444 which, most people agree, had not just one, not just two, but three Figure 4's! This, I'll wager, is a record that will stand for at least a thousand years!

1444 was, incidentally, notable for many other things. It was, for example, the year in which the New York Giants played the Philadelphia Athletics in the World Series. As we all know, the New York Giants have since moved to San Francisco and the Philadelphia Athletics to Kansas City. There is a movement afoot at present to move Chicago to Phoenix—the city, not the baseball team. Phoenix, in turn, would of course move to Chicago. It is felt that the change would be broadening for residents of both cities. Many Chicago folks, for example, have never seen an iguana. Many Phoenix folks, on the other hand, have never seen a frostbite.

There are, of course, certain difficulties connected with a municipal shift of this size. For instance, to move Chicago you also have to move Lake Michigan. This, in itself, presents no great problem, what with modern scientific advances like electronics and the French cuff. But if you will look at your map, you will find Lake Michigan is attached to all the other Great Lakes, which in turn are attached to the St. Lawrence Seaway, which in turn is attached to the Atlantic Ocean. You start dragging Lake Michigan to Phoenix and, willy-nilly, you'll be dragging all that other stuff too. This would make our British allies terribly cross, and I can't say as I blame them. Put yourself in their place. What if, for example, you were a British costermonger who had been saving and scrimping all year for a summer holiday at Brighton Beach, and then when you got to Brighton Beach there wasn't any ocean? There you'd be with your inner tube and snorkel and nothing to do all day but dance the Lambeth Walk. This, you must agree, would not help make you NATO-minded!

I appeal most earnestly to the residents of Chicago and Phoenix to reconsider. I know it's no bowl of cherries going through life without ever seeing an iguana or a frostbite, but I ask you—Chicagoans, Phoenicians—is it too big a price to pay for preserving the unity of the free world?

I feel sure that if you search your hearts, you will make the right decision, for all of us—whether we live in frostbitten Chicago, iguana-infested Phoenix, or narrow-lapelled New Haven—are first and foremost Americans!

But I digress. We were speaking of 1964, our new year. And new it is! There is, for one thing, new pleasure in Marlboro Cigarettes. How, you ask, can there be new pleasure in Marlboros when that fine flavorful blend of tobaccos, that clean efficient Selectrate filter, have not been altered? The answer is simple: each time you light a Marlboro, it is like the first time. The flavor is such that age cannot wither nor custom stale. Marlboro never palls, never jades, never dwindles into dull routine. Each puff, each cigarette, each pack, each carton, makes you glad all over again that you are a Marlboro smoker!

Therefore, Marlboros in hand, let us march confidently into 1964. May good fortune attend our ventures! May serenity reign! May Chicago and Phoenix soon recover from their disappointment and join our bright cavalcade into a brave tomorrow!

Tar Heels Have Backs To Tough Duke Wall

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

DURHAM—It's a rough situation on the verge of disaster when you're 1-2 in the league and about to meet the country's ninth-ranked team, an undefeated one in the conference, on its home floor.

But that's exactly the position UNC and Coach Dean Smith find themselves in this afternoon after the loss to Wake Forest Thursday night. The Tar Heels play at Duke Indoor Stadium (on a floor where they have not won since Feb. 4, 1960) at 2:00 in the second of the regionally televised ACC Saturday games.

And they play a Blue Devil team which has beaten them four straight times, won 23 consecutive league games, is 9-3 this year and has lost only to three of the NCAA's top ten teams, (Kentucky, Michigan and Vanderbilt).

"We're in a bad spot, all right," Smith said yesterday before bringing his team here to work out at the stadium before watching the UNC - Duke frosh game last night. "And this is one of the toughest games any club in the country has to play this year—Duke at Duke."

Duke's last outing stopped Clemson—something UNC couldn't do—Wednesday, 81-75. But while the Devils were idle Thursday, they were probably the biggest winners after Wake's 80-71 win over Carolina. For the defeat left UNC with two league losses (the same as Duke's other strong challengers, Wake and Clemson) while the Blue Devils are 5-0 in ACC play.

Smith, a bit disconsolate, was nevertheless optimistic about the Heel chances today. "We don't like to learn things the hard way but, if anything, the defeat Thursday will psychologically help us against Duke.

"We couldn't get into our offense against Wake, we never did get going, the only thing good about it for us was the effort. The rest was disappointing, but this is a good group of kids. They'll bounce back."

Duke's many - pronged attack includes an established college super-star, two six - ten plus giants, quick guards and tremendous depth.

"They are a better rebounding team than Wake, a better shooting team, and they have that good bench," Smith says. "But we'll be better too. I guarantee we'll get into the shuffle and improve our working the ball this time."

The game, an 8,800 sellout two months in advance, may feature a scoring joust between UNC's fabulous Billy Cunningham and Duke's outstanding shooter, Jeff Mullins. But, again, it may not.

For the Blue Devils have, in Hack Tison, as hot a performer as the ACC has seen in the past few weeks. Tison (6-10), who looked great at times last year, has looked greater in the last four games when he has opened Coach Vic Bubas's eyes with 83 points, 27 of them against strong Kentucky.

The spurt has lifted his average to 12.8, second on the team to Mullins. The latter (6-4), an exceptionally quick and strong player, is the type of guy who can break up a game fast. His average, 35th best in the nation, is 23.2, and he leads the team in rebounding with 96 total.

The two usually start at forwards with Jay Buckley (6-10) at center. But when Mullins moves to backcourt, Bubas may bring in one of two sophomores that have helped him out of some holes this year. The up-front soph is Jack Martin (6-6) whose average just does trail Buckley's. It is 10.1 to the big senior's 11.4.

When Mullins stays at a forward, Duke can alternate four guards, just about equal in all phases of the game except experience.

They are Buzzy Harrison (6-3), Ron Herbster (6-2), Denny Ferguson (6-0) and soph Steve Vacendak (6-1). Harrison, a veteran who started on last year's third-place NCAA team, is averaging 8.2, Vacendak, 6.1, and Herbster and Ferguson, about three apiece.

Brent Kitching (6-7) is another reason Duke's bench is strong—he is one of its best rebounders.

The Tar Heels, mistakenly named by the Associated Press yesterday morning as the country's field-goal percentage leaders (N. C. State is), looked confused on offense against Wake Forest, and the defense, of course, could not save them against the 55.4 shooting average of the Deacons.

Cunningham, at 25.3 before the game (22nd nationally), got 27 and support from Mike Cooke (15) and Ray Respess (10) in the loss. Cooke, weak from a bout with the flu, should be okay today, and Carolina needs his long-range bombing even to come close.

Charlie Shaffer will probably start with Cooke in backcourt, with either Bob Bennett, who had a miserable time at Wake, or Billy Galantai up front at the fifth spot.

Bill Brown and Ray Hassell supply the UNC guard help with Bryan McSweeney, Carolina's best defensive man, being also its fifth front court player.

Hot-handed Bobby Lewis, who got 40 points, was also the iceman as the two teams came down the wire. UNC, fighting back from a nine-point deficit, took its first lead of the night with 1:50 left. Donnie Moe scored then on a beautiful feed by Danny Talbott to put the Tar Babies up, 79-78.

Optimistic Hickey's Contract Extended Through '67 Season

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Football coach Jim Hickey was awarded a new three-year contract Friday. The contract will go into effect when the present one expires a year from now—taking Hickey through the 1967 season.

"I am very pleased with the new contract," said Hickey yesterday afternoon. "I guess it's natural to be pretty happy when you get a contract extension such as this."

The quiet man who came through with a big won and lost record this fall predicted a bright future for Carolina's football fortunes.

"We lose some mighty fine boys this year, but we've got the nucleus of a good team coming back," said Hickey. "The main thing we've got to get is more help at the tackles." At this position, UNC loses three of its top four through graduation. Cole Kortner, Vic Esposit and Gene Sigmon leave: John Hill returns.

"So far we haven't done as much recruiting this year as we would have liked to, but starting right now we'll be very busy on this.

"Overall, I think we have a better back-log of football players here at Carolina than we did a few years ago. I don't say we'll improve on this year, but the outlook for the next few years is good."

Hickey

Hickey, who has been at the helm of UNC's football ship since he was elevated from the ranks of assistant coach following the death of Jim Tatum in 1959, brought Carolina through its best gridiron season in 15 years this past season. The Tar Heels' 9-2 record included two UNC firsts—an ACC title (shared with N.C. State) and a post-season bowl victory—and it brought Hickey's five-year record to 25-26.

Chancellor William B. Aycock and Athletic Director Chuck Erickson made the announcement after a meeting of the Executive Committee of the school's Board of Trustees yesterday in Raleigh. The contract was approved by CU President William Friday and the trustees.

Tankers Host VPI—Expect Victory No. 7

By PERRY McCARTY

Carolina's Blue Dolphins hope to add their seventh victory in as many outings, when they face VPI this afternoon at four in Bowman Gray Pool. The visiting Gobblers should provide only moderate opposition.

Coach Pat Earey praised his swimmers for being ready early in the season on the strength of a determined effort. This plus outstanding individual performances give the tankers a perfect 6-0 mark prior to today's meet. The enthusiasm generated by hopes for an undefeated season has carried over to th post-holiday workouts.

Earey plans to experiment with a shuffled lineup in today's meet. Several of the number two and three men in each event have come along nicely and should be ready to provide much-needed depth by the time of the all-important N. C. State, Maryland, and ACC meets. Then too, most of the front line are committed to certain events. By using them in events other than their specialty, Earey hopes to present a more balanced attack.

Sophomore breast stroker Rick Forum and Pete Werthen, freshman freestyle ace, both participated in the Collegiate Swimming Forum held in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., during the recent holiday. Forum has been particularly impressive since his return.

Matmen In Blacksburg Today

BLACKSBURG, Va.—North Carolina's wresting team brings a 2-2 record to this mountain town today. The occasion is a four-team meet with Ohio State, N. C. State and host Virginia Tech.

For Coach Sam Barnes' UNC matmen, this is the second trip into this state this week. On Monday night the Tar Heels defeated VMI, but the next night it was Virginia that came out on top.

After today one more meet remains on the Carolina grapplers' pre-exam schedule. East Carolina visits UNC next Saturday night—the first home match of the season.

Soaring Clark Seeks New Mark In Track Opener

RICHMOND, Va.—North Carolina high jumper Tom Clark will be out to break his own record today at the Chesterfield Invitational—the opening indoor meet of the season for Carolina.

Strangely enough, Clark, whose 6-6 leap last year set the Invitational record, didn't win the event then. He was tied by Maryland's Jim Bland; and when both boys missed at 6-7, Bland was awarded the win on fewer misses.

Saturday, Clark rates as a heavy favorite to take the title and the record. He's soared six feet, nine and a quarter inches since this time last year—and he's a guy still on his way up.

Two Chapel Hill Women Injured In Accident

A four-car accident on the Durham Boulevard resulted in injuries to two Chapel Hill women yesterday about 4 p.m.

Eunice Atwater, 23, of 509 Church St., was treated and released at N. C. Memorial Hospital after receiving head and knee injuries. Her sister, Faye Atwater, 26, also received treatment for minor injuries.

The two women were hurt when their car was struck from behind by a car driven by Lisbon Johnson, 56, of 110 St. Graham St.

Johnson said he was following a line of traffic which came to a sudden halt in front of him, and he was unable to stop in time to avoid the Atwater car.

The Atwater car was knocked forward into another auto, which in turn struck the car ahead of it. There were no injuries in the last two cars, whose drivers were not identified.

Johnson was charged with following too closely.

Patrolman Arthur Summey, the investigating officer, estimated the total damage at $1,500, mostly to the Johnson and Atwater vehicles.

DTH Survey Shows Unequal Service At 25% Of 116 Places

By SUZY STERLING

Discrimination in service exists in one form or another at 25 per cent of 116 service and accommodations facilities in Chapel Hill, a Daily Tar Heel survey disclosed yesterday.

The survey was based on interviews with managers and employees at eight types of retail facilities listed in the Yellow Pages of the town phone book. Businesses included barber shops, beer and ale service, billiard parlors, drug stores, grocers, hospital facilities, ice-cream parlors, motels, restaurants and service stations.

The survey did not include employment or housing discrimination.

The Daily Tar Heel survey could not be meaningfully compared with a similar survey last August by the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association because the Association did not keep records of its survey, which included several categories of retail business not included in the DTH survey.

However, executive director Joe Augustine said the Association surveyed some 250 retail establishments and found 5-8 per cent of them discriminated in service to Negroes.

Augustine said the Association's survey was hurriedly conducted at the request of The Chapel Hill Weekly, and Mayor Sandy McClamroch.

"We probably missed quite a number of retail businesses Augustine said. "We just called the places where we knew there was some question."

The findings of the Daily Tar Heel survey follows:

Of nine barber shops, eight do not serve Negroes. The ninth is a Negro barber shop which also has white customers. The survey did not include the non-segregated, University-affiliated barber shop in Graham Memorial. To accommodate both races, special barber training would be necessary, spokesmen for the white-only barber shops said.

Three of Chapel Hill's five motels do not accept Negro lodgers. The other two are predominantly Negro, but do have some white patronage.

Thirty-two per cent of the local restaurants maintain discriminatory policies of some type. The discrimination ranges from stand-up or back-door service to complete refusal of Negro customers. One of these restaurants noted that they would only serve Negroes who are University students.

Of nine establishments listed in the Chapel Hill Telephone Directory to serve beer and ale, five do not have equal service. Two of the remaining four do not have seating facilities. One maintains the policy of standing service only. Of the other five who claim total integration, one manager said that "No one has tried to sit down—we'll settle that when we come to it."

Carlton's Rock Pile is the only one of 21 local grocery stores which does not permit a Negro to make a purchase.

Only two of the 37 local Service Stations reportedly have different rest-room accommodations according to race.

At N. C. Memorial Hospital, Director E. B. Crawford, Jr., said "we have two floors with predominately Negro patients" and "as a general rule we don't man for the other hospietal facility listed, Gravely Sanatorium, said segregation is not enforced by policy but often exists by custom.

Of the two local billiard parlors, one has a separate annex for Negro customers. The other is predominantly Negro but has white customers.

Of the three ice-cream businesses, one maintains discriminatory policies. At Brady's Frozen Custard Drive-In, Negroes are only served at the back window.

MEXICAN VISITORS

Twenty-five professors from Mexico will visit UNC Jan. 20-22 as a part of the Inter-Institution Affiliation Program.

The visitors will attend classes in the University and in nearby public schools. At 4 p.m. Jan. 21, a seminar will be held in Peabody Hall.

Wednesday the Mexicans will present a ceramic tile marker to be installed by the Tree of Friendship, which was planted by last year's visiting group. The tile will read, "Arbol de la Amistad — Planted by Escuela Normal Superior de Mexico."

In addition to University activities, the group will take a tour of industries in Durham, and confer with school officials in Chapel Hill.

Nineteen of the visiting professors will be from the Escuela Normal Superior in Mexico City, and the remaining six from other teacher education institutions.

DURHAM—Once upon a time there were these two basketball teams, the Evil Giants and the Good Guys. Now the Good Guys had delusions of grandeur, see, and they said to themselves, "We will go to the land of the Evil Giants, we will use stealth and trickery, and we will kill the Evil Giants."

So they went.

But in the land of the Evil Giants, the Good Guys met with disaster. They weren't stealthy or tricky—they were clumsy and careless. And the Evil Giants, who were led by the biggest Evil Giant of them all (his name was King Hack), took away the Good Guys' big gun, their only weapon, and beat them.

Moral: the Good Guys don't always win, and the Evil Giants are looking tougher than ever.

The Evil Giants, of course, are the Duke Blue Devils, who pummeled the UNC Good Guys, or rather, Tar Heels, here Saturday by 84-64. Led by tough Hack Tison and a lesser giant called Jeff Mullins, the Duke five outclassed a flat Carolina team that made numerous errors.

In fact, the Tar Heels threw away the ball 19 different times on traveling violations, bad passes, etc. Billy Cunningham himself made almost as many mistakes as the near-flawless Duke team, losing the ball eight times to the Blue Devils' nine.

Cunningham, who was probably miserable enough after eight errors, was razzed unmercifully by the partisan crowd. Every time he touched the ball, a flurry of boos, catcalls, and whistles filled the Indoor Stadium air. "Come on, All-American," they shouted, "show us your stuff!"

Cunningham didn't show a lot of All-American potential with his 4-for-18 shooting performance and a couple of ridiculous fouls.

When he fouled out with more than six minutes remaining, the ribbing continued. As Billy slouched on the bench in disgust, a Duke fan incurred his ire, and the Kid rose in a defiant pose. Apparently, though, he gave it a second thought, and dropped back into his seat to watch the game.

There was one All-America present, though, in the form of Jay Wilkinson, the Duke football sensation. At halftime, he was presented with a trophy as the outstanding player in the ACC for 1963, causing many to wonder "where's Lacey?"

Big Jay accepted the award, and another All-America plaque, with polite humility. "I realize the wonderful opportunity I have had to attend Duke these last four years, to have participated in athletics, and to have played for Coach (Bill) Murray."

At that point, a voice high up in the Duke student section rang out, "We want HICKEY."

The majority, though, rose to applaud Wilkinson.

Wilkinson was followed at halftime by the Duke Pep Band, a splendid organization that leads the Duke team onto the floor and continues to create large volumes of noise during every home game.

They, along with the Duke cheerleaders, managed to stir up the crowd with little trouble. A large sign in the crowd read "Go, Tar Heels, Go — Go to Hell." When the cheerleaders took a breather, the crowd continued on its own with some pretty rousing stuff. "Go to Hell, Carolina," they shouted, while a foghorn-voiced student razzed Billy.

Meanwhile, the UNC cheerleaders were awfully alone, and they got lonelier as the Blue Devils poured 'em in.

Their loneliness reached its apex with the appearance in the Duke line-up of Ted Mann Jr., son of the Blue Devils' sports publicity director.

When Mann enters a game, it is a sign that Coach Vic Bubas is either supremely confident of victory or has thrown in the towel. The big, awkward gorilla got almost as many hisses as Cunningham, but exceeded the fans' expectations by scoring one point. On the sidelines, his father wheezed and coughed and looked slightly embarrassed. Meanwhile, the Duke faithful decided they had seen enough and began heading slowly toward the exits.

State College Alums Seek To Break From Greater University

Also Ask For Name Change

The State College Alumni Association has launched a drive to break up the Consolidated University and make each of UNC's three branches autonomous.

The drive, which has been quietly under way since last fall, has two aims:

—To change the name of State, now officially North Carolina State of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh, to "North Carolina State University." The name of the Consolidated University would be changed to "The Consolidated Universities of North Carolina." The State alumni suggested that UNC at Chapel Hill remain the University of North Carolina, and the University at Greensboro either retain its present name or be re-named. Other branches that might be added to UNC in the future "could be appropriately named."

—To split the present 100-member Board of UNC Trustees into three sections, with each section representing a unit of the University. Each of the three sections would have 32 members selected by the Legislature for 8-year staggered terms, and each section would select four of its members to serve on the Trustee Executive Committee. If and when other branches were added to the University, they also would have a section to represent them, with equal membership on the Executive Committee. The appointees to the respective trustee sections would come from whatever source the General Assembly considered best.

Each trustee section, as proposed by the State alumni, would be responsible for its respective branch of the University. The three autononomous boards would, in effect, end consolidation.

The State Alumni Association's Board of Directors unanimously adopted the name change proposal and the plan to split up the trustees on Dec. 14. But it wasn't until this past Friday, when the Trustees Executive Committee met in Raleigh, that the drive to end consolidation became generally known.

News releases of the proposals were mailed Friday by Charles Reynolds of Spindale, chairman of the State Alumni Association.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday said that Edmund Aycock of the N. C. State Alumni Association had called him on Dec. 20 asking for an appointment to discuss the proposals at the Trustees' Executive Committee session which met in Raleigh Friday.

Friday said he granted Aycock's appointment request, but that Edmund Aycock and Charles Reynolds, chairman of the N. C. State Alumni, Association evidently decided to release the proposals to the press before discussing them with the Executive Committee.

Friday said the earliest possible time the N. C. State Alumni proposals could be brought before the Executive Committee would be March 13.

"The proposals are now a matter between Mr. Aycock, Mr. Reynolds and the Board of Trustees," Friday said.

Picketing Resumes After Short Lull

Anti-segregation protests resumed here last night after a five-day lull with picketing at five segregated businesses. Demonstrations in support of a public accommodations law will continue today with a march from Durham and Chapel Hill and an afternoon rally, CORE leaders said Saturday.

About 25 adults, including six University faculty members, picketed for two hours last night at the Tar Heel Sandwich Shop, Clarence's Grill, Colonial Drug-store, Leo's Restaurant, and the Pines Restaurant.

No incidents or arrests were reported.

Chapel Hill students and townspeople are expected to meet at Eastgate Shopping Center this afternoon and join a march to the First Baptist Church here.

Members of the Durham CORE and NAACP chapters plan to march to Chapel Hill this morning, starting at two points in Durham—the campuses of Duke University and North Carolina College at 11:30 a.m.

James Farmer, 43-year-old CORE leader, will speak at a 4:30 rally in the First Baptist Church on Roberson St., after attending a strategy meeting with local integration leaders.

Other speakers include University Writer-in-Residence John Knwles and CORE national chairman Floyd McKissick of Durham.

WUNC radio will broadcast a special documentary on the town's racial crisis tonight at 8 p.m.

CORE officials said transportation to Eastgate will be provided for all those interested at 2:30 from St. Joseph's Church on Rosemary St.

Of Accommodations Law

Little Chance For Passage

By JOEL BULKLEY

Chances for passage of a public accommodations law for Chapel Hill appear extremely dim.

The Board of Aldermen is expected to take action on the proposed anti-discrimination ordinance at its meeting Monday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall.

News Analysis

The ordinance would bar racial discrimination in all local retail establishments doing business with the general public.

No town in North Carolina has yet adopted such an accommodations law.

Firm lines on the controversial proposal have been drawn since early last summer, with many local civic and business groups voicing their opinions.

The Aldermen voted 4-2 June 25 to postpone indefinitely action on the ordinance proposed by the Mayor's Committee on Integration, the Human Relations Committee, a local ministerial group and the now-defunct Committee for Open Business.

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Assn. had earlier gone on record opposing the measure, saying it believed the accommodations law "would not be in the best interest of this community."

More than 200 persons jammed the Town Hall, with 25 persons rising in debate at the June meeting with at least that number expected tomorrow night.

By postponing action on the law, the Aldermen avoided what they viewed as a "certain legal battle" over the ordinance.

Later in the summer the Aldermen requested the University's Institute of Government to make a study of the possible ordinance.

Indications are the report will support, in substance, an opinion from the State Attorney General's office that the Town does not have the legal authority to enact such a law. Mrs. Margaret Taylor, chairman of the Human Relations Committee, said the Institute of Government report, generally took the position of the Attorney General on the ordinance .

The Attorney General's office has said in an advisory opinion, that Chapel Hill does not have legal authority to enact a public accommodations ordinance and in the absence of such authority would need a special act of the State Legislature.

UNC Law professor Don Pollitt, an expert on constitutional law has contended, however, Chapel Hill has the necessary authority to enact such a law, and cited accommodations laws in other states and cities that have withstood court tests.

George Esser of the Institute of Government said the report indicates "the probable attitude of North Carolina courts toward a municipality using its general welfare power for the purpose of passing an accommodations law."

The general welfare powers clause, "to pass all ordinances necessary for the betterment of the town," has been carefully analyzed in the report, Esser said.

The question remains, however, how these powers have been interpreted.

The report examined the extent to which a municipality might extend its power to include the power to pass the law.

John Sanders, director of the Institute, said yesterday the report had been completed and turned over to Town Manager Robert Peck for distribution to the six aldermen. Neither Peck nor any members of the Board were available for comment.

Support for the law has been given by the local chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality, the Human Relations Committee and the Chapel Hill Ministerial Assn. The Ministerial group will present the Aldermen with a petition bearing about 1800 signatures in support of the proposed law. The signatures were gathered last week during a telephone campaign. A copy of the petition appears in today's Chapel Hill Weekly.

Last June Aldermen Roland Giduz, Joe Page, Gene Strowd and Paul Wager voted for tabling the measure. Aldermen Hubert Robinson, the Botard's only Negro member, and Mrs. Adelaide Walters voted against postponement.

The same 4-2 vote is epected tomorrow night.

The Aldermen And The Golden Rule

Monday night the town's Board of Aldermen is slated to consider a Public Accommodations ordinance that would ban discrimination in retail business establishments licensed to serve the public.

The ordinance should be passed because it is right and because it is needed. Every argument that has been used against passage has been shown to be invalid at best, and a rationale for race prejudice at worst.

The most respectable of the arguments against passage of a Public Accommodations ordinance is that the town does not have authority to pass such a law. An Institute of Government study is expected to support this position.

Yet, in the final analysis, no one can say with certainty that the town does not have the authority. And we submit that in the presence of such uncertainty, it is both right and proper that the town pass the law and let the courts decide this legal point.

Doing this would put the town on record in favor of equal treatment of all its citizens. Doing this would strike a heavy blow at the visible traces of segregation which daily humiliate not only Negroes, but many, many whites. Doing this would allow Negroes and whites the freedom of association which the Constitution supposedly assures them.

Doing this would provide hold-out businesses with a reason to integrate. Doing this would assure such businesses as have and would integrate that they will not lose business, if only because the more prejudiced of their customers will have nowhere else to go.

But mostly, doing this would be right, as a Public Accommodations ordinance would implement the Biblical admonition to "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." We would not want to be refused service because we are white; let us not continue to condone policies of refusing service to Negroes because they aren't.

Tempering Applause With Hope

Our feelings of congratulation at the appointment of Prof. Wayne Danielson as the new dean of UNC's Journalism School were tempered by Danielson's initial comments.

We are among the persons who know Dr. Danielson both personally and professionally, and who have a high regard for him. He is both an excellent teacher and researcher, and should be a fine administrator.

However, when Dr. Danielson said he planned no major changes in the school, we blanched a little. When he indicated that the emphasis in development will be in the area of graduate studies, we blanched even more.

We will take his word for the need for more graduate courses in journalism. But we don't accept his implicit premise that no action is needed at the undergraduate level. We know better.

To begin with, it is currently possible for a person to graduate from UNC with a degree in Journalism and yet write no more than some 40 news stories, none of them necessarily printable.

This is because only one of the four courses required for graduation is directly concerned with newswriting, the heart of journalism. Of the other three required courses, one—"History of Journalism"—is superfluous and should be replaced by a course more useful to the aspiring journalist.

The point to be made, therefore, is that development of the Journalism School ought to be two-pronged, with emphasis on the undergraduate curriculum.

Part of our applause at Prof. Danielson's appointment is directed to the hope that he realizes this and acts accordingly. His success as Dean should then be complete.

Way Out In Carolina

Bargain, By Lew Barton

(Editor's Note: Mr. Barton is a blind Chapel Hill poet. The work is from his book, "Way Out in Carolina".)

When Fran came home from Vassar—Wow!—
She wore the strangest grin!
She would not slop the old, black sow
Nor mend her busted pen.
She spoke the darndest, queerest words,
And, brother, say!—What airs!
She spoke of plants and bees and birds,
And spouted "world affairs."
Her old flame, Buster, came to court,
Just like he used to do.
You shoulda heard that filly snort
When he said, "I love you."
She stuck her nose up. "Now just wait!"
When he begged her for a kiss,
Said she, "I never osculate."
Cried Buster, "What is this? . . .
Five years I slaved to help your paw
Keep you financed in school!
You said I'd bee his son-in-law . . .
Now, you just act the fool . . ."
"Oh, please don't me so nauseate!"
Fran held her nose and cried.
"With what can you negotiate
To win a Vassar bride?"
"I don't know what the heck you mean,"
Fran's had-been lover cried.
"Not after all the work I've seen . . .
I ought to tan your hide!"
"You wouldn't dare!" our Frances screamed.
Her paw just flashed a grin.
"I guess too long we've worked and schemed . . .
All right now, boy . . . Begin!"
Now, Buster draped her o'er his knee;
His palms flew hard and fast.
He injured Fran's poor dignity
Till she cried "'Nough!" at last.
"Don't weaken now! That's where I failed!"
Her paw spoke low and mean.
"Oh, my poor child!" Fran's mama wailed.
"The likes I've never seen!"
"I'm sorry, Fran," the farm-hand sighed,
"This edicating's right.
You made a bargain—then you lied."
He pulled her clothes real tight.
Well, every ordeal has to end,
And Fran's was through at last.
The men exchanged a glance and grinned;
The women? . . . Upstairs, fast!
"I guess I'll go now," Buster whined.
"The damage has been done."
"Jest stay as long as you're inclined,
No weak heart ever won."
But Buster turned and drooped his head . . .
No use to hesitate . . .
Then . . . "Darling, wait! Let's osculate!"
A voice behind him said.

Texans Eye LBJ

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press International

President Johnson says he meant it when he promised to carry on John F. Kennedy's civil rights program.

He said it most emphatically Wednesday in his State of the Union message. By now the word must be out in the South: "Mebbe Lyndon ain't gonna be as easy on us as we thought."

Johnson's message committed him without qualification—without any avenue of retreat—to a 1964 civil rights bill to abolish not merely some but ALL racial discrimination. That means accommodation in public places. Moreover, Johnson said this was a moral issue. There is no area of compromise on a moral issue. The South's first President in more than 100 years is firmly committed now to an all-out congressional battle for an all-out civil rights bill to which he may expect all-out Southern opposition.

These facts are likely to come as an unhappy surprise to many white Southerners. Perhaps not typical of the South but surely of great political significance was a year-end editorial in the Cuero (Tex.) Record, which appeared under the signature of publisher Jack Howerton.

Cuero is in the big-man, big-hat, big-spread country of south Texas where they have known Lyndon Johnson long and well. Publisher Howerton's editorial indicates that he would have been for Sen. Barry Goldwater against John F. Kennedy.

He wrote that the nation was in safer, stronger and much more experienced hands under Johnson than under JFK, remarking, too, that Johnson's friends were chagrined and disappointed when the Texan accepted second place on the 1960 ticket. And, publisher Howerton adds this politically significant observation:

"President Johnson has acted during the first five weeks of his administration exactly as we had expected he would.

"He has gone all-out in his support of the Kennedy legislative program during the period of eulogy and mourning. He also has conferred with leaders of every minority group and has sent each and every one of them away reasonably contented and happy. That is Lyndon Johnson's method of doing political business.

"He is for everybody and everything and the tone of his political speeches is always fitted to his audiences whether they be liberal or conservative. At the same time, Lyndon Johnson possesses an abundant knowledge and judgement and good common horse sense and he hopes that those with whom he talks will understand that there are many differences of opinion and interest from people of different sections and that compromises and revisions are necessary to secure passage of controversial legislation.

"We predict that many of Mr. Kennedy's legislative proposals, including the so-called civil rights measure, will be considerably toned down with many objectionable provisions eliminated under Mr. Johnson's skillful guidance. Unless we are badly fooled and unless he goes too far to the left in his effort to appease minority groups, we intend to support President Johnson for election to a full term in November although we still greatly like and admire Sen. Goldwater."

Perhaps for Barry Goldwater all is not yet lost in Texas.

When ALL Can Laugh

By PERRY YOUNG

All our life we've sung the good old songs and played the familiar tunes.

The first was probably "Swannee Ribbuh . . ." and that's the way our own white Uncle Remus taught us the words.

In our fourth year, Mama carted us off to Mrs. Donohue's for piano lessons and we learned a one-finger version of "Old Black Joe."

Then . . . it was along about third grade . . . when the Woodfin Woman's Club had a fund-raising drive, somebody with imagination figured a comic wedding would bring everybody out, entertain us all and fill up the Woman's Club coffers.

So we rehearsed for maybe a week . . . Mom was the big fat mother-in-law, brother Bob was the cigar-smoking preacher, and, well, we were a long-legged "flower girl."

It was more fun than we had ever known and it looked like Hazel Metcalf, the groom, would never get into her costume she was laughing so hard.

We put cold cream on our faces first and then one of the women in charge helped us spread the black stuff out of a tube all over the cream—except for big circles around our eyes and mouth.

There was a big basket of onions and hollow eggs for the flower girl and we scattered them, as rose petals, where the black-faced bride would walk.

The school auditorium was packed . . . at fifty cents a head.

Brother Bob really stole the show. They had made his lips look extra thick and pink and put a sunflower in his plaid coat's lapel.

When the wedding party had all made it down the aisle in varying ridiculous struts, Brother Bob came front and center . . . reading from a big Sears and Roebuck catalogue.

"We is gathered heah in the sights of all our enemies . . ." and then he staggered. At sixteen, he was hardly prepared for inhaling so strong a cigar. The people thought it was all part of the show, though, and they laughed and hollered till he straightened up and asked "this heah couple if they're ready to step into holy macaroni."

Well, the women couldn't have guessed our popularity and three more showings gave them enough for whatever the club was cleaning up. In fact, the Woodfin Men's Club got into the act the next year and put on a full-scale minstrel show which played for a whole week.

There was one old fellow, who had been in some Broadway plays way back, we remember in particular. He was bald, so they had to black his head as well as his face. "Swan-nee Swan-nee . . . how ah loves yuh, how ah loves yuh" he sang, and tap-danced all around the stage.

That show was an even bigger success and when the old man got sick two years later, they put it on again and gave all the money to him for doctor bills.

Some of the big high school boys who sang in that show were even able to get into the Jaycee minstrel up town.

After that second year's show, Mrs. Blackwell, our fifth grade teacher, said she just laughed and laughed. She said we'd just have to begin reading about Tom Sawyer and nigger Jim every day after big recess. Most of us had only seen a few Negroes up town or down at Martel Mills. But it was a funny book, the way nigger Jim talked and all . . . like Uncle Remus and little Black Sambo.

With a warm and fun-loving background such as this, we unconsciously flinch every time we hear how Stephen Foster's songs are rewritten; how Huckleberry Finn is banned; how demonstrations now block the minstrels we used to see and black our faces in.

Last week, for example, we read with horror that the Congress of Racial Equality would form a human barricade to the 64th Mummers' parade in Philadelphia if the comics came in black-face masks.

The parade was postponed because of bad weather on New Year's Day. And there were only a scant 50,000 (instead of the usual one million out to see the Mummers.

But the Associated Press news report carried two significant phrases on the parade. The mummers strutted, sang and entertained, it stated, with their "usual" hi-jinx. And in the Negro section of town, the people "smiled and appeared to enjoy it."

The comic faces were red and yellow and green and no man felt the scapegoat because his own characteristics were being ridiculed.

And this is what those of us who were reared on Uncle Remus and "Lize and Rastus" jokes must realize: that our old-fashioned black-face comedy is simply immoral and unhealthy ridicule of a people now willing to bleed and die for the dignity our humor has denied them.

And when we realize this, the laughter will naturally be louder, because ALL of us will be able to laugh.

Urge Aid

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The Student Council of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation on the campus of the University of North Carolina would like to express its earnest hope for the speedy passage of a public accommodations law in Chapel Hill. The student leaders of the Hillel Foundation are actively concerned in supporting the current efforts of the Negroes in our community to achieve freedom and equal rights.

We believe that the integration of all services and accommodations in Chapel Hill is vital toward our progress as a liberal community. We hope that the Mayor and the Board of Aldermen will act in such a way as to restore human freedom and dignity and at the same time restore the liberal posture of Chapel Hill which has been so badly damaged by the failure to move forward toward complete elimination of discrimination in our community.

As a symbol and expression of our direct support of activities on behalf of integration, the Hillel Foundation has cancelled its normal Sunday afternoon program on January 12, the College Bowl Inter-fraternity competition which was to have taken place at 3 p.m. In place of this program, the Hillel Student Council urges all of the members of the Hillel Foundation and all enlightened people of the community to join in the march on behalf of civil rights and the program to follow at which time James Farmer will speak. The Hillel Student Cabinet feels it essential to free this time on Sunday afternoon from any conflicting program in order to support the march.

The Hillel Student Council will continue to actively involve itself in deliberations about the the current racial crisis and will endeavor to rally public opinion toward the passage of laws and ordinances necessary to ensure equal human rights for all in our community.

Shock

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The wretched deed committed by Lee Harvey Oswald was indeed shocking. Yet, in thinking back, it seems almost saintly when compared to the amazing and unbelievably gross action of the waitress at Watts' Restaurant who straddled the head of a prone demonstrator and urinated on him. What goes on in the depraved minds of such people (like Oswald, Eichmann, John Wilkes Booth, Hitler) no one will ever know. Yet, it is too bad that the "Watts' Waitress" never met Lee Oswald—they would have made a dashing couple! Congratulations also go to the restaurant; I only hope that its food is not comparable to its personnel. Oh, but excuse me!! I am sure that by now this lovely young belle has been locked up for indecent exposure or some similar charge since certainly neither the Chapel Hill police nor the Orange County Deputy Sheriff's office would condone such an action. In fact, she is probably well on her way to the nearest mental institution, where hopefully there is nothing more than furniture on the floor.

Edward P. Morgan: Conservation

SEATTLE, Wash. — It never fails. Every time I cross the country, the great majestic sweep of America fills me with awe and pride — and apprehension. Perhaps no nation on the face of the earth has been blessed with more of Nature's treasure and yet we have not husbanded the riches prudently nor have we hesitated to deface the breathless beauty of the land, whether for timber or the location of a hot dog stand.

Not everybody has been a plunderer, though wanton litterbugs do seem to be beyond count. And responsible citizens in cities and towns across the republic, minority though they be, are quickening the battle to preserve our natural resources and bring some harmony instead of greedy exploitation to the development of cities and suburbs. They can't win the battle alone, however. Indeed they are certain to lose it unless more people rally to their support.

There is one stark fact which should startle us all into action. President Kennedy uttered it on his last trip through the West, his so-called conservation tour, in September, on which he chuckled perhaps more heartily than anybody else over such unlikely labels as "Paul Bunyan," "Johnny Appleseed" and a "latter-day Teddy Roosevelt" which the press, with tongue in cheek, pinned on him. Yet he deeply loved his native land and his concern for its future was contained in one set of statistics he kept repeating from Pennsylvania to Palm Springs: There are 190,000,000 people in the United States today and by the turn of the century, less than 37 years away, the population will swell to the staggering figure of 340,000,000.

How will the still lovely city of Seattle cope with its share of this swarm? By more hideous bridges across Lake Washington feeding into real estate developments that are planned to do more for the developers than for the civic pride and convenience of Seattle as a whole? How will the nation's capital itself, which began from the graceful gleam of urban planning in Major L'Enfant's eye, save itself from the utter chaos of ugliness induced by the eagerness of promoters, the venality of political hacks in surrounding counties and the slovenliness of Congress in governing—if that's the word—the District of Columbia?

Happily, the Kennedy administration gave much impetus to sensible thinking on these vital matters and the Johnson administration shows signs of following suit. One of the New Frontiersmen most appreciative of the richness of our land and sensitive to the urgency of conserving it is a native of the wide open spaces of Arizona, Secretary of the Interior Stewart Udall. Udall has recently published a book entitled "The Quiet Crisis," which deals excitingly with the heritage of the American land plus the problems of now and tomorrow.

Author Udall, nature lover and scaler of mountains from Fujiyama to Kilimanjaro, brings the whole issue into sharp focus in the foreword of his book where he relates two events called to his attention "which seemed to sum up the plight of modern man: the first was a press report which indicated that T. S. Eliot, the poet, was a victim of London's 'killer fog' and lay gravely ill; the second was a call from a preservation-minded citizen of New Hampshire who informed me," Udall said, "that Robert Frost's old farm—fixed for all time in memory by the poem 'West-running Brook'—was now an auto junk yard.

"The coincidence of these two events raised questions in my mind," Udall wrote: "Is a society a success if it creates conditions that impair its finest minds and make a wasteland of its finest landscapes? What does abundance avail if we create an environment in which man's highest and most specifically human attributes cannot be fulfilled?

"Each generation has its own rendezvous with the land, for despite our fee titles and claims of ownership, we are all brief tenants on this planet . . . We can misuse the land and diminish the usefulness of resources, or we can create a world in which physical affluence and affluence of the spirit go hand in hand.

"History tells us that earlier civilizations have declined because they did not learn to live in harmony with the land. Our successes in space and our triumphs of technology hold a hidden danger," the Secretary of the Interior warned in "The Quiet Crisis:" "as modern man increasingly arrogates to himself domination over the physical environment, there is the risk that his false pride will cause him to take the resources of the earth for granted—and to lose all reverence for the land.

"America today stands poised on a pinnacle of wealth and power, yet we live in a land of vanishing beauty, of increasing ugliness, of shrinking open space, and of an over-all environment that is diminished daily by population and noise and blight."

This is the current "Quiet Crisis" of which Stewart Udall writes, adding, with hope, that "it is not too late to repair some of the mistakes of the past . . . if we understand the history of our husbandry, and develop fresh insight concerning the men and forces that have shaped our land attitudes and determined the pattern of land use in the United States." There is a big lesson here and Americans need to do a heap of homework on it, from the Bering Sea to Miami Beach, from Waikiki to Bangor, Maine.

'I Quit'

Medical Team Agrees Smoking Causes Cancer

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A blue ribbon jury of medical scientists Saturday returned the unanimous verdict that cigarette smoking is a cause of lung cancer and several other deadly diseases.

It said smoking is enough of a hazard to the national health to warrant "appropriate remedial action" by the government.

These were the key findings of a committee of distinguished scientists appointed by U.S. Surgeon General Luther L. Terry to weigh all available evidence concerning the effects of smoking on health.

After 14 months of investigation, the committee issued a 150,000-word report which expressed "the judgment that cigarette smoking contributes substantially to mortality from certain specific diseases and to the overall death rate."

The committee did not specify what kind of "remedial action" the government might take. But Dr. Terry told a news conference the Public Health Service will look into this question immediately.

He said he hopes to be able to make recommendations to President Johnson soon.

In the meantime, he said, copies of the report will be supplied to all physicians in the United States, as well as to educational and youth-counselling agencies of all types, for their information and guidance.

Reaction among the nation's smokers to Saturday's government report ranged from "'m going to quit" to "I'd like to see them make us quit."

"Hell no. I'm not going to give up smoking," said Lupe Gonzales, Los Angeles cashier. "I may die young, but I'll die happy."

"That report scares me. I never started smoking and I'm sure I never will now," said teen-ager Walter Trubic of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Many smokers indicated they would continue right on smoking cigarettes, or maybe just cut down a little, because they got too much pleasure from smoking or felt they would be unable to shake the habit.

"Smoking is one of the few things in life I can possibly enjoy any place outside of church. I will continue smoking," St. Louis radio announcer James Paszarek said.

"I'm not planning to quit, I've been smoking 30 years and I enjoy it," E. J. Dollhopf, Pittsburgh jewelry store manager, said.

Richard Obermaier, 19, Chicago telephoto operator, said the report doesn't worry me. I'm in fairly good physical shape. I won't cut back."

Edward J. Tighe, Cleveland, Ohio, linotype operator, said "to hell with them . . . you gotta die from something, don't you."

"I'd like to give up cigarettes but I can't. The habit is too strong," New York housewife Saralee G. Braun said. "My husband quit cigarettes, but it was easy for him; he had cigars to fall back on."

"I really don't believe there's anything to this lung cancer stuff," said Watler Jaworksi, Des Moines jewelry store operator.

Hip Chick Wears Snicker Slicker

(From The Upsala Gazette)

A hip chick in a snicker slicker is a smart, alert girl dressed in her "do-it-yourself" oilcloth rain cape on which her friends have scrawled funny sayings.

Is this the language of today? Yes and no. Few contemporary chicks realize that the term dates back to at least 1935; "hip" replaced "hep" on knowing tongues soon after World War II, though jazz musicians had used the word even before that. "Snicker slicker" is now, though—both the garment and most of the phrases on it.

As fads go, it's surprisingly practical — waterproof, a good windbreaker, and loose enough to slip comfortably over layers of heavy winter clothing. From a 54" square of oilcloth, the chick or cat (male) makes a hole in the center just big enough to slip a cool head through. And that's that — except for trimming the neck and edges with waterproof Mystik tape in a matching or contrasting color (a combination of school colors is often favored), and letting friends run wild with an indelible, waterproof magic marker.

What do they write? If a girl scrawls "abominable snowman" over her steady's slicker, that's not an insult, but a high compliment — it means he has everything. "Skizzy" and "ginchy" have also been defined as "great" and "wonderful" in the teen lexicon. On the other hand only a "bish" or goopus" (both terms mean "dope") would write "You're the most." That's passe now, and marks the writer as being "out to lunch" (not "with it," a phrase now also deemed moldy among the young).

A teen who is really "neat" (cool and casual) might also make a snicker slicker hat out of oilcloth, something like an updated sou-wester. Those who are extremely "far out" (as opposed to "way in," which is so square as to be a "cube") may even sport matching book covers and umbrella holders. Instructions on making these various items are available from Snicker Slicker, Box 208, Columbus, Ohio.

Though "in" now means "out" and what was "hot" to an earlier generation is now "cool," some slang terms are amazingly durable. "Kick the bucket," for example, shows no signs of doing so—even though the expression dates from 1785!

Some say it began down on the farm, referring to the cow's bad habit of kicking over a full milk pail. Others trace it to a grimmer source: the would-be suicide who "kicks the bucket" he's standing on after fastening a noose around his neck.

"Okay" has been O.K. since 1840; most scholars date it from the Presidential campaign of that year, when the term was used as an abbreviation of Old Kinderhook, Martin van Buren's nickname. "Phony" has been genuinely popular since 1900—but nobody seems to kow just where the word comes from. Some suggests the old British "fawney," slang for a worthless ring.

"Button your lip," a frequent injunction in World War II, was first used as a warning in 1787. "Bones" as a slang term for "dice" is at least as old as the 14th century; the poet Chaucer used it in 1387.

If you still think of yourself as on the ball, you're old hat—but the latter expression is surprisingly new: The Dictionary of American Slang ascribes it to writer Robert M. Coates in 1949. There's also some indication that "endsville" and similar "ville" terms are now used by the "Mickey Mouse" (square) and not by the true hipster. Nor does a cool cat refer to something as "the end;" to express satisfaction he may now say: "Everything's everything."

But as long as slang keeps growing and changing — the word "slang" incidentally, was used in 1916 to mean "watch chain!"—one thing is sure: whatever is "the end" at any given moment is only the beginning.

Picketer Airs Complaint At The Tempo Room

Labor Dispute

By PETE WALES

Carpeting behind the bar and health insurance to cover injuries from beer openers top the list of demands lodged by employes of the Tempo Room on Franklin Street, where picketing took place Friday.

"Those concrete floors behind the bar are murder on the knees," one picketer complained.

John C. Bryant, who says he represents management in the dispute, gave the sign he had been carrying to his employe and sent him back to his beat.

"I have nothing to say," he said humbly. "I am considering negotiations across the board when we meet next week."

"We want mediation, conciliation and arbitration," the picketer shouted. He waved his sign at a passerby.

"We want Willard Wirtz to arbitrate, no one of any less stature.

"We're being exploited by big business. We want a more tolerant attitude from management. It's worse than what Simon Legree was to Little Eva."

"It'll never happen," Bryant growled.

The picketer handed him his sign listing "labor's" grievances and went downstairs for a beer.

"Excuse me," Bryant said. "It's my turn to picket for a while."

Pivotal Game Says Bubas; 'I Want Seed'

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

DURHAM — When he is winning, Vic Bubas looks like the Carnation cow. Contented, man. And, man, Vic Bubas is winning.

He won big yesterday, conclusively defeating a club he all along has called "the second best team in the conference." And he won largely because of his large (large) Geneva, Ill. center with the Connecticut name and the Kansas face.

"Hack" Tison has come of age, and Bubas yesterday said it is confidence that has done the trick. "He is easily the most improved player in this league," said Bubas in his plush office. "And confidence has been the key.

"For two years now I've stayed with him even while he was doing poorly in those early games. Then, this season, we used some other boys while I experimented with them before January. Hack didn't play too much, but he has sure come on lately. If he keeps this up, we'll really be tough."

They were tough yesterday, tougher than expected, and Bubas made no bones about the fact he is now close to easy street as far as the ACC Championship goes.

"I want that top-seed in the tournament. I want it bad. I told the guys this was a pivotal game for them. Now Carolina has three on that loss side, we have none. They're still the toughest, but I guess I've got to watch Wake now. They look real strong."

Bubas then praised his team's win. "We contained that big kid of theirs (Billy Cunningham) pretty well. We figured it had to be Hack doing the job. But he got a lot of help, too, when Billy went on those spins of his. I don't care how many he got—he's still a great one."

Hack Tison Gets 24; Also Contains Billy

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

DURHAM—If R. Haskell Tison gets any better, Duke may as well call off the Atlanutic Coast Conference basketball race.

The powerful Blue Devils might have done just that Saturday afternoon. A confident Tison makes Duke twice the team it was a month ago, and yesterday Tison was confident—and magnificent.

The 6-10 junior from Geneva, Ill. shot well, rebounded better and blocked shots with abandon as he led the ACC's premier club to an 84-64 victory over North Carolina—Duke's 24th straight conference win.

Tison, who sat it out in mid-December due to injuries and some experimenting by Coach Vic Bubas, turned in a fifth straight superlative performance, scoring 24 points and getting 15 rebounds in Duke's sixth league win.

He also did a fine defensive job on the Carolina All-America, Billy Cunningham, holding the Tar Heels' big gun to just 14 points—11 below his season average. Cunningham got 10 rebounds and fouled out with six and a half minutes to go in the game. He was four of 14 from the field.

Duke now is an almost overwhelming three games ahead of UNC (considered by many its strongest challenger) in the loss column with close to a month and a half left until tournament time. Carolina is 1-3 in ACC play, and Wake Forest and Clemson have both lost twice.

The Blue Devils' vaunted fast break was contained in this one, but a packed Duke Indoor Stadium and a regional TV audience saw them turn to sharp floor work around the key, timely shooting and an overpowering offensive rebounding punch to record this win.

It was the latter, led by Tison, Jeff Mullins, Buzzy Harrison and others, which eventually put down, quite impressively, the underdog effort of the Tar Heels.

Duke nullified any expected success of a UNC surprise move in the first half and methodically built up a 35-26 lead at the break. Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith used Cunningham to bring the ball downcourt alone in the opening period, and set up his shuffle offense from there.

But too many bad passes and some confusion resulted as Billy, guarded by Tison, could not get free, and his mates could get only one shot at the basket.

Carolina got no closer than seven points during the second 20 minutes, and the last time the Heels were that near was the 12:38 mark when Ray Respess hit one of eight corner jump shits. The score was 48-41, but four minutes later, Duke had gone on a 13-4 tear for a 61-45 margin UNC nuever recovered.

Tison started it with a 20-footer and Mullins scored a free throw. Carolina's Billy Galanti swished two foul shots, and UNC, which had been in a man for man after a first half 1-3-1 zone, went back to the zone.

But Denny Ferguson set from the outside, sub Brent Kitching scored on a jump shot and Mullins tallied a steal. Cunningham interrupted with a floating underhand lay-in, but Tison got a layup of his own, and Mullins scored two more foul shots.

From 61-45, Duke increased it to 76-55 on a late drive paced by big Kitching and Mullins. But UNC was already dead, and, when Cunningham fouled out (6:34), Tison converted one of two fouls, and the 8,800 crowd went wild.

Four minutes later, the partisan group again broke loose and stood to cheer as Tison left the game—one in which he had been the difference.

North Carolina outshot the winners (43.5 to 41.6) but took 15 less shots (62-77). The Blue Devils had a good first half with three men sharing their 35 points. Tison had 14 and Mullins 11 in the period, but it was Harrison, the veteran guard, who was the most dangerous.

Duke took an early 8-6 lead when Cunningham threw the ball away (he had eight errors in the game, six in the first half) and Mullins converted a bucket off the break. UNC kept even to the middle of the period (16-16), but here, Harrison became deadly and popped in four jumpers from the corner to lead his team to its initial break-away.

Two baskets by Harrison and a rebound by Mullins made it 22-16 before Cunningham scored a foul and Respess hit a one-hander. Two more baskets by Harrison, Tison's bucket and a free throw by Mullins overshadowed Cunningham's drive, and Duke led 29-21 with 4:05 left in the half.

After intermission, the Dukes started crashing the offensive boards with Tison and Mullins leading the way. The poor showing of 6-10 Jay Buckley (he did not scratch) matched that of UNC's Bob Bennett, who had a second straight letdown and fouled out with 11:53 left.

Buckley's board absence was not missed, however, for first sophomore Jack Marin, then Kitching, two big strong forwards, replaced him and contributed well to the attack. Duke had a big edge in the department, 54-40.

Tison's 15 was followed by Mullins' 11 and Harrison's six. Cunningham had 10 for UNC, Charlie Shaffer seven and Respess six.

Mullins was high point-man for Duke (25) while Harrison had 15 and Kitching 10. Respess led the Tar Heels with 16.

Heels, Devils Relive Old Times In Durham

By JOHN MONTAGUE

DURHAM — Watching North Carolina play Duke at Duke is like watching television in the summertime. You get an idea you've seen this show sometime, somewhere before. Like maybe last year when North Carolina played Duke at Duke. Or the year before that when North Carolina played Duke at Duke.

"I doubt if there's a team in the country which could come in here and stand a good chance of winning," said Dean Smith, a guy who's been trying for three years without much success. "That includes Michigan, Kentucky, you name 'em. Duke is a real good club. On their home court they are a really great club."

The Blue Devils were certainly that Saturday afternoon. Using their big man Hack Tison (6-10) like a baby who's just found a new toy, the Dukemen killed UNC with an offensive rebounding game which produced the telling second shot time after time. The Tar Heels won the percentage duel (43.5 to 41.6), but the Devils got off 15 more shots which resulted in five more goals.

"This was the best I've ever seen Tison," said an impressed Smith. "He was tremendous under his own backboard. We knew Duke's game included two big pluses—the fast break and the second shot. I think we stopped their fast break pretty well, but we didn't stop that second shot. And Tison was the big reason we didn't."

What Smith did to stop the Duke blitz was to move Billy Cunningham to the "quarter-back" guard spot in the UNC offense. The thinking here was that Tison, who was guarding Cunningham, would be unable to press his man, thus loosening up the Duke defense ever so slightly, but enough to slow down the tempo of the game.

Dean Smith Says—

"Duke has a real good club. On their home court they are a really great club. There's no team in the country which could come in here and stand a good chance of winning."

"We weren't really stalling," explained Smith. "We just thought that if we played Mike Cooke back there, Duke would have enough reserve guard strength to press him all the time, wear him out and get their fast break going."

The "free lance offense," as Smith termed it, really was not a great departure from UNC's normal shuffle attack. After Cunningham worked the ball in, he would himself go in for the basket. Unfortunately, this bit of strategy didn't take care of the forest of arms through which Cunningham was forced to shoot. It was an "off day" for "The Kid," and when that happens, UNC's best strategy is a 1-2-2 prayer or a 3-2 miracle.

"We got as many breaks as they did," Smith continued, "but we threw away too many of ours. We didn't shoot particularly well and our ball-handling leaves much to be desired."

On the Blue Devils, Smith had this to say:

"They've got a better defense and better speed than last year. These two factors, plus their depth makes them as good as last year. They are way ahead of the rest of the ACC. Of course they still must play N.C. State, Wake and us on the road." He didn't say it, but Duke must lose all three of if the Tar Heels are to have a chance in the conference race.

"We still have the rest of the season to play," said Smith, who admits to being "pretty much of an optimist." With this in mind, Smith and his Tar Heels said goodbye to Duke Indoor Stadium.

Thus ended a very bad week for UNC. Thursday night belonged to Wake Forest. Saturday afternoon belonged to Duke. As a result, a 1-3 conference record belongs to North Carolina.

Splash, SPLASH; Gobblers Smashed

By PERRY McCARTY

As expected, Carolina's Blue Dolphins coasted to victory number seven with a 56-38 win over visiting VPI. The Tankers won both relays and five of nine individual events as they completely outmanned the visiting Gobblers.

Harrison Merrill swam a blistering 48.0 anchor lap on the opening medley relay. Butterfly stalwart Fred Lipp changed strokes and turned in a fine performance in the 500-yard freestyle as did freestyler Thompson Mann in the 200-yard butterfly.

Davis Roberts and John Sheldon were used sparingly while Joe Lea was a double winner for the Heels. Co-captain Mike Bissell contributed two second place finishes.

Coach Pat Earey and charges face a weak Wake Forest squad on Wednesday and then run into a possible stumbling block in East Carolina on Thursday. Both of these contests are home meets beginning at 3 p.m. in Bowman Gray Pool.

Young Terps Here Monday; Sophs Start

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The Maryland team UNC plays here Monday night has been one of the Atlantic Coast Conference's pleasant surprises with its precocious group of sophomores and its 3-1 second-place conference record.

The Terps, having the usual up-and-down season indicative of a young team, faced Navy yesterday and will go into Monday's game ahead of such veteran clubs as Clemson, UNC and Wake Forest in league skirmishing.

Six and five overall, Maryland's sophs have not been overpowering scoring-wise (Gary Ward's 16.9 average is the only one in double figures), but their work as a team, especially in the close games, has been very impressive.

Bud Millikan's kiddies have defeated Virginia (68-58), N.C. State (79-62) and Clemson (56-48) for their ACC wins, and the only loss came to South Carolina in overtime (73-69) last Monday.

The team proved then it should be reckoned with by coming from 16 points behind early in the second half to rally and eventually tie the score, sending the game into the extra period.

The top six Maryland scorers are sophomores and five of them start—that's right, five starting sophomores on a major college team. And Millikan is more than just getting away with it. He's winning with it.

Ward (6-5) is the big point man up front and he is joined there by forward Jack Clark (6-4) and center Rick Wise (6-8). Clark is averaging 8.5 and Wise 9.5. Leader Ward's most productive game was against State's Wolfpack when he scored 26.

In backcourt, Millikan will start two of three men—again, all sophomores. Neil Brayton 6-4) and George Sudor (6-2) very probably will get the call, but Mike DeCosmo (5-10) is also a possibility. Brayton and Sudor have identical 9.2 point-per-game marks. DeCosmo is at 5.5.

Brayton led the freshmen in scoring last year with a 20.6 average while Sudor, who sat out the 1962-63 season with academic troubles, paced the frosh scorers two years tago.

On the bench, Maryland has three veterans who lettered last year but have had to only watch the youth movement this time around.

Phil Carson (6-4) and Scott Fergpuson (6-8) are the boys in frontcourt while Sam McWilliams (6-1) is behind the three soph guards.

Phi Delts Take Thriller From Beta Five, 102-0

Chi Psi defeated the Physics Fiends two games to one (15-4, 7-9, and 15-2) to cop the All Campus Volleyball Finals Thursday.

By AL KAPLAN

The Beta-5 basketball team carved out a place for itself in the intramural record book by scoring no points, bowing to Phi Delt-2 102-0, in a frat white game played Thursday.

The Delts who seemed like they were playing just for the exercise were led in scoring by Harry Stoval with 36 points. Bill Armstrong was next with 26 and Charlie Battle and Mac Boxley each had 14.

The Winston Skirts(w) got high scoring from Ken Cuthrell and Art Reese to trounce the Everett Trojans 75-12. Cuthrell was high with 25 while Reese added 23.

Junior Edge, who proved he's mighty handy with a football, showed Manly dorm he's no stranger to basketball either. Edge scored 22 points to pace Ehringhaus B to a 73-35 win. For Ehringhaus Eddie Kesler had 19 and Frank Gallagher 12. Bob Stearns and Jim Hook were Manly's leading scorers with 10 apiece.

In the grad league, Med School 4 had eight men in double figures and coasted to a 104-23 decision over Law School 7. High for Med were Tom Koontz and Bill Hubbard with 16 each. Also in twin digits were John Currie (15), Bennie Ward (14), Joe Wicker (13), Walt Avery (12) and George Gustafson (10).

Navy's Mermen trounced Sigma Nu 53-34 in the finals of the Grail-Mural Basketball Tourney on Thursday night. They led 23-13 at halftime and outscored the Nu's 30-21 in the second half. Bill Vick's 16 points, 11 in the first half, led Navy scoring, while Jim Dunn was high for the losers with 14. Following Vick were Bill McKinunon (14) and Ed Sutton (9).

Wilkinson Quits Sooner Coaching Job

NORMAN, Okla. (UPI) — Bud Wilkinson resigned as football coach at the University of Oklahoma Saturday, but kept his job as athletic director. He left unanswered the persistent question of whether he is going into politics.

University of Oklahoma regents accepted the resignation and began an immediate search for a successor. They indicated it might be three weeks before a decision is reached.

Wilkinson is expected to retire as athletic director also if he decides to run for U. S. Senate.

Already there is speculation that the head coaching job will be offered to Gomer Jones, assistant football coach and associate athletic director, but there also is talk that regents might prefer to hire a younger man. Jones, at 50, is three years older than Wilkinson.

FROSH PLAY

UNC's red-hot freshman basketball team will be at home tomorrow night, meeting Edwards Military Academy in a six o'clock preliminary to the Carolina-Maryland varsity skirmish. The Tar Babies, 4-2, have won their last three contests.

170 March Through Sleet And Rain

About 170 Negroes and whites marched 13 miles through Sunday's sub-freezing cold to dramatize their support for Chapel Hill's accommodations law.

Students from North Carolina College, Duke University and UNC made their plea Sunday for the proposed ordinance in the walk from Durham to a Chapel Hill church.

A group of 170 persons trudged 13 miles from the western section of Durham to the outskirts of Chapel Hill. They were met at Eastgate Shopping Center by 175 University students and townspeople. The entire group walked the final mile to a mass meeting at the First Baptist Church.

Traffic slowed to a crawl on U. S. 15-501 as curiosity seekers and integration leaders stopped to watch.

Police said no arrests were made during the four-hour march.

As a whole, the march was quiet except for two minor incidents. One involved heckling by members of the ATO fraternity house. The other almost led to blows when a man who identified himself as the Grand Dragon of the North Carolina Ku Klux Klan threatened to assault a cameraman who took his picture.

The demonstrators carried signs saying, "Freedom Now," and "Sacrifice for Freedom."

Several carried make-shift crosses with "Don't burn a cross, bear one. Let the love of Christ fill your life."

The marchers, walking single file, stretched three-fifths of a mile when they reached downtown Chapel Hill, police said.

The march was the second largest in Chapel Hill's history, police said, with only the July Fourth demonstration topping it with an estimated 500 participants.

Board Vote Bypasses Accommodations Law

Town leaders voted 4-2 last night to bypass consideration of a Public Accommodations law and set up a nine-man committee to try to iron out Chapel Hill racial problems.

Integration leaders called the action "a great disappointment" and said stepped-up demonstration would be resumed.

Ten Negroes shortly thereafter sat down on the front steps of the Town's combination courthouse-police station and police began calling in off-duty officers.

An overflow crowd of more than 100 townspeople and students of split sympathies attended the town meeting, which climaxed a month of ractial demonstrations in which some 239 arrests were made.

The four aldermen who voted for the motion stressed that they were doing so because they felt a public accommodations law would do more harm than good, and that voluntary efforts might still produce desegregation of holdout businesses.

Integration leaders joined with the two board members who were in favor of a public accommodations law, in saying that the board's action would produce more negotiations but no action.

The proposal calls for Mayor Sandy McClamroch to head a commitee of eight persons — two each from the Ministerial Association ,the Merchants Association, the Chamber of Commerce, and the UNC faculty.

The substitute motion came after Board members discussed an Institute of Government report on the legality of the proposed law. The report said it was not clear whether such a law would be held legal by the courts because they were no North Carolina precedents for a law of this sort.

Negro leader James Farmer, National Director of CORE, will meet with the press tomorrow.

Chapel Hill's main street is a snowy white early yesterday morning as the edge of "the worst blizzard of the years" passed through here. By daybreak, local streets were icy causing a rash of minor accidents, but no major accidents were reported. Elsewhere in the nation the storm left thousands stranded and scores of towns isolated behind drifts up to 12 feet deep from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic seaboard.

More Demonstrations On Tap If Law Fails, Farmer Warns

By JOEL BULKLEY

A national civil rights leader warned Sunday that anti-segregation demonstrations will be stepped up in Chapel Hill if a public accommodations law is not enacted.

James Farmer, director of the Congress of Racial Equality, told newsmen "Chapel Hill is a key to the South and the nation."

He said "This town has a nation-wide reputation as a center of liberal thinking, but is only tokenly desegregated. It is on the verge of losing its reputation and its leadership.

"We believe the Board of Aldermen should adopt the anti-discrimination act and we believe it must do so if Chapel Hill is to regain its leadership in the civil rights field."

The 43-year-old Negro leader continued, "If the Aldermen fail to end discrimination in accommodations, the national office of CORE will throw its full support behind all efforts to eliminate segregation here.

"We wil step up our activities and Chapel Hill will become the central point of our work.

"All the stops to end discrimination will be pulled." Farmer said.

"If the Aldermen pass the proposed legislation," he said," we will shift our efforts to employment and housing. We will do so, however, only after seeing that the public accommodations law is effectively implemented and enforced.

Farmer's press conference followed a rally attended by more than 500 persons, in the First Baptist Church.

Durham attorney and CORE chairman Floyd McKissick challenged Chapel Hill to live up to its reputation as a liberal city and the most liberal in the State.

"Monday is opportunity day for Chapel Hill. It must prove to itself and to others that there is no racial discrimination here.

"We will need more people to make the sacrifices if town officials fail to take action," he said.

McKissick called on all individuals, both white and black, to raise their voices in efforts to end all types of discrimination here.

OAS Peace Team Resolves U. S.-Panama Differences

By MATTHEW T. KENNY

PANAMA CITY (UPI)—An Organization of American States (OAS) peace-making team announced it has resolved Panamanian-United States differences in which 23 persons have been killed and nearly 400 wounded in bitter street fighting since last Thursday.

The OAS team said in a communique its mediation efforts have resulted in agreement by the disputing parties to creation of a mixed commission for coordination of peace aims, and U. S. reaffirmation of intent to fly the Panamanian flag alongside the Stars and Stripes at all public sites in the controversial Canal Zone.

The commission, the OAS said, will include two Panamanians and two Americans and be presided over by an OAS official. Chilean delegate Manuel Trucco will preside over the coordination group which will include a military as well as civilian representative from both sides.

The commission will draft measures to "prevent and resolve" any alteration of order and also decide on what areas should be subjected to special vigilance, the OAS peace-makers said.

The five-man OAS mission called on President Roberto F. Chiari at the presidential palace at 12:30 a.m. EST, to advise him of its findings. It was announced that U. S. Assistant Undersecretary of State Thomas C. Mann, sent here by President Johnson to investigate the dispute, would postpone his scheduled departure until later today to permit him to hold another talk with Chiari this afternoon.

The OAS group noted in its communique that U. S. Army Secretary Cyrus Vance ratified for the United States its intention to fly the Panamanian flag outside all public schools in the Canal Zone alongside that of the United States.

Such an agreement had been negotiated a year ago and it was its alleged violation by American students — since officially denied by zone authorities—that sparked last Thursday's Panamanian attacks on the zone and subsequent widespread anti-American sniping, burning and looting.

Americans Taken Out Of Zanzibar

ZANZIBAR (UPI)—The U. S. destroyer Manley removed 63 Americans from the island of Zanzibar Monday as the revolutionary government followed up its coup by banning the former ruling parties and exiling the deposed Sultain for life.

Despite fears in Kenya and Uganda across a narrow strip of the Indian Ocean from Zanzibar that the island revolutionary regime might turn it into a new pro-Peking Cuba, both nations recognized the new govenment Monday.

American sources said the U. S. nationals were evacuted because of the very unstable conditions following Sunday's leftist revolution. Most of the Americans were members of a U. S. space tracking station for the Mercury program which orbited the first U. S. astronauts. Those remaining were Charge d'Affaires Frederick Picard III and third officer Donald K. Petterson.

The new government told all Arabs to stand outside their homes to be searched and ordered that cars of all former government ministers and officials be marked by white flags and taken to "freedom fighters' headquarters."

The toppled government had been dominated by wealthy Arabs in a nation that is four-fifths African. But the revolution—first armed uprising within the British Commonwealth, ended the sultanate which had ruled for 132 years and replaced it with a republic.

Zanzibar achieved its independence from Britain barely a month ago. The government was overthrown in a swift revolution that cost 3 lives and wounded 26 persons.

Most Smokers Unconcerned About Government's Report

By NAT WALKER
And DAVE NORDAN

"To (puff) hell with it, (puff-puff) I'm not going to quit."

This statement seemed to reflect the philosophy of most UNC students and Chapel Hill residents who were asked for reactions to the recent government report on smoking and health.

The 150,000 word report hit hardest at cigarette smoking as being a significant cause of lung cancer, chronic bronchitis, and cancer of the larynx.

Some were defiant, some rationalized, and a few expressed a desire to quit. A UNC sophomore, who said he knew all along that smoking was dangerous, expressed his views by quoting Mark Twain. "If you can't make 70 the hard way, don't make it at all."

Buck Roberts, a playwright from Durham, having his morning coffee, was calmly dragging on a king-size non-filter when asked about the report, made public Saturday. Said he, "The spirit is willing where the flesh is weak."

Tom Benenson of the Dramatic Art Department, said the report submitted nothing new. "It's the same old thing," he said. Senior Jim Huffman and sophomore John Cummings had much the same view. "It's a rehash of the same old stuff."

Bob Moore, Statesville, said the report would have no effect on his smoking habbits. His wife, however, thought it would be a good excuse to cut down.

"I'll stop smoking because of it," said Jim Neal, Raleigh senior. He cut back on smoking some weeks ago he said. However he indicated he may continue to smoke cigars and a pipe.

One student, who said he smokes from one-and-a-half to two packs per day, said he read the reports carefully and doesn't intend to stop smoking. "You see old guys every day who have smoked all their lives, and I'm not interested in living over 70 anyway," he said.

Most of those interviewed were of the opinion that the report offered nothing new. A blond coed looked up from a set of English notes, took a long drag from a filter-tip, and said simply, "I don't care. I knew cigarettes were bad when I started, why should I stop now?"

A Chapel Hill restuarant owner seemed a bit more impressed by the report. He drew a pack of smokes from his pocket and said he'd been carrying them since Saturday morning but hadn't smoked one since then. He said this is the best way to quit.

A tobacco salesman was filling out a sales chit with one eye closed (it was blinded from the smoke of his cigarette), when asked about tobacco sales trends. He said it was still too early to tell but thought they would drop off for a while and then rise back up.

The finishing touch was added to this survey by Miss Otelia Conner, who said her smoking habits are not at all affected by the reports—she doesn't inhale.

Panama

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Johnson Monday scheduled a full briefing on the Panamanian rioting at the White House Monday night when an American team of negotiators returns from the troubled Canal Zone.

The President was in touch several times during the day with the Panamanian situation and it was not until late Monday afternoon that the White House announced that Johnson would meet with the returning American delegation.

The President set up the meeting with Secretary of State Dean Rusk; Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara and two of the top U. S. negotiators flying back from Panama—Army Secretary Cyrus Vance and Thomas C. Mann, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

Icey Roads May Hurt 'Little Fed' Proposal

RALEIGH (UPI)—The prospects of icy roads and cold weather appeared likely to make a light vote even lighter in today's two-amendment state referendum.

The foul weather appeared likely to affect the supporters of a Constitutional Amendment changing the method of apportioning the members of the General Assembly far more than the opponents.

In the mountains, where support for the amendment is widespread, two inches of snow had fallen by Monday afternoon and it was still snowing. This made many roads impassable and likely will cut into the voting Tuesday.

In the Piedmont, where opponents counted on a large turnout to defeat the amendment, the sun came out and began melting the ice and snow, but the vote was still expected to be lighter than previously predicted.

The amendment will cut house membership from 120 to 100, one from each county, and increase senate membership from 50 to 70, apportioned by population, if approved in the referendum.

Opponents of the amendment have complained that its passage would enable 19 per cent of the State's population to elect a majority of the House.

The small counties presently have control with 27 per cent of the people able to elect a majority.

A second amendment would make the property rights of men and women equal.

The state board of elections estimated 2,100,000 persons were registered in the state, and eligible to vote in the 2,154 precincts.

Only 556,629 persons voted on six Constitutional Amendments in 1962. Since these amendments were voted on in a general election, best estimates of the total vote this time ranged near 350,000.

Surveys indicated widespread apathy, with a large percentage of the population knowing little or nothing about the amendment. The polls open at 6:30 a.m. and close at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

John Ehle, associate professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures plans to take a one year's leave of absence to write a novel that he has been planning to write for some time.

Ehle had planned to take the leave two years ago, but he instead took an appointment to serve on the Governor's cultural program.

What will he write about? He doesn't have the faintest idea, he says.

Meanwhile, his latest book, "The Land Breakers," to be published next month, is the March choice of the Literary Guild.

Dr. Werner D. Falk Given Hanes Chair

Prof. Werner David Falk, a native of Berlin and graduate in philosophy at Heidelberg and Oxford, has been named the James Gordon Hanes Professor of Humanities.

Now a visiting professor in the Philosophy Department, Dr. Falk's appointment marks the first occupant of the James G. Hanes Professorship, which was established in 1961.

University Trustees approved Prof. Falk's appointment following recommendations from Chancellor William B. Aycock, President William C. Friday and Dean J. C. Sitterson of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Prof. Falk since September 1963 has been the Mahlon Jordan Distinguished Professor of Philosophy, a visiting professorship established by Mahlon Jordan who is a vice president of Smith, Kline and French Co.

Industrialist James G. Hanes of Winston-Salem provided funds two years ago for the chair in the Humanities. The Hanes family has given generously to the University, in library resources, in endowed professorships in business scholarship and in other contributions and bequests. Mr. Hanes

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Bring Praise, Blasts

Hickey Praised

Editors, The Tar Heel,

In November of 1960 I wrote a letter to the Editor of this newspaper criticizing UNC Head Football Coach Jim Hickey. Hickey, in his second year as Tar Heel mentor then was not even mildy succeeding in his post, I felt. As we all know, he had taken over the reins from "Sunny" Jim Tatum in 1959 and was having little, if any, scucess with the team that Jim Tatum was quoted as saying would be the finest he would ever coach (including his national championship team at Maryland in the early 50's). Carolina was losing consistently but perhaps even more discouraging was the type of play—dull, unimaginative, lackluster football (with the exception of the 1959 50-0 rout of Duke, which can never be forgotten). A field goal in 1959-60 was reversed to be something that only the NFL pros could accomplish. When touchdowns did come they were rarely followed by the single point conversion.

The quarterback, although an able passer and runner, certainly did not have the varried offense which permitted him to run on the option play, pass short over center, throw out to the flanker or hand off on a draw play, for example. Instead, what yardage was gained was most frequently over the center of the line. Consequently, the play was boring and disappointing in most cases.

Most of us then, I think, wanted a team that would command respect. We did not necessarily want a champion, but we did especially not want to be a patsy. It seemed, however, that the brand of football UNC was playing exemplified the administration's point of view toward athletics as Chancellor Aycock, at the termination of the 1960 season (a 3-7 effort, I believe) voiced complete confidence in Coach Hickey. Although there were apparent rumblings in student and alumni halls, the administration seemed to be saying, "This is what we want here at UNC. Successful athletic teams are not compatible with advanced academic programs."

Feeling drastically opposed to such an attitude (our closest neighbor Duke is regrettably a prime example of compatible athletic and academic programs—and has been for years), of harboring ineffective coaching and unnecessary losses, I wrote my letter.

Today I would like to offer my sincerest congratulations to Coach Jim Hickey. I say this not soley in view of a 9-2 record, a conference championship and a most glorious post season victory. But, I say it with the realization that this coach, who recruited the Edges, Blacks, Willard's, Lacey's, Sigmon's, etc., has developed these very same men into a real football team. They pass, run, block and kick with precision and authority. They depend on each other and work together like a successful team must. What's more, Coach Hickey has given his quarterbacks a series of effective, varied plays that deceived opponents all year long.

Jim Hickey, in facing the TV cameras after UNC games, no longer need bow his headin dejection and diffidence. He is an established coach himself, now, and win or lose, he can now stand in his own sun.

No Tea Party

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Our Founding Fathers violated English law to gain freedom because it was the only means to that end. They founded a system of government known as democracy which provided the people with a means by which they might be heard. They provided a system of representation which gave to each citizen a voice in the laws that were made. We realize the form of government we have inherited is not perfect. Change comes slowly, but when change comes, it comes because all the people want and accept it.

There are ways to force and speed-up change. One method is through the use of violence. But violence, as a means to an end, often violates the laws of our system, the laws made by the people. If we condone violence, we are condemning the laws which violence seeks to destroy, and in doing so, we are condemning the system that created these laws.

I am sure that no citizen of this country wants to lose our system of democracy, but we shall destroy democracy if we try to by-pass its time-honored methods by advocating violence. The means to an end in democracy are often slow and frustrating, but they are justifiable.

Bad Taste

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In the DTH of January 10, I noted with some perturbation a brief editorial expression entitled "The Fascist Gun in the West." It was a very clever pun, but it was in very bad taste. I do not criticize your opposition to Senator Goldwater; you are free to be against him. However, the suggestion—even one lightly made—that his conservative ideas in any way liken him to a facist is something very close to irresponsible name-calling. The far-right elements in this country, especially the John Birchers, have soundly—and rightly—been criticized for their foolish tendency to brand anything to their left as "communist." Now you seem to be adopting these same Welchian tactics and launching them in the other direction. Practice what you preach, O Fuzzy-minded Liberals.

Criticism, Analysis

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I was shocked by the news content of the Tuesday, Jan. 7, issue of The Daily Tar Heel. That edition certainly does not display the journalistic integrity and taste required of a responsible student press.

A brief survey of that paper reveals that one topic—local demonstrations for civil rights—was treated in over half of the news space and nearly three-quarters of the editorial space. These statistics gained added significance when I realized that a story which received statewide attention was allocated only one-tenth as much news space and one-third as much editorial mention as the demonstrations.

My approximate figures (see below) show that 59.8% of the news space (excluding sports) was occupied with sit-in news, while 73.4% of the edit space (55 of 75 column inches) was used in treating the same subject. Only 5.7% of news space was used for a story about the murder of Mrs. Frank Rinaldi. The same story was the subject of a reprinted editorial which occupied 20.0% of the edit space.

The one-sidedness of these figures is more than obvious, but when news values are interjected, the handling of news in that, the first issue of The Tar Heel after the holidays, is indeed shocking. Newspapers throughout the state consistently gave the Rinaldi case more "play" that the demonstrations; in effect, the state press rated the Rinaldi case as much more significant than the latter story. Furthermore, a murder story like the Rinaldi case merits more clarifying reporting than do the almost automatically recurring racial demonstrations.

I shall not comment on the use of the editorial page, since this space should be used to express the editors' views. It is alarming, however, to note that 60% of the news space was used for the same topic which occupied 73% of the editorial hole.

Even the copy in the news columns reflected bad taste on the part of you, the editors. One incident involving a waitress' urinating on a demonstrator was mentioned twice in your paper. The same incidetn was reported by student correspondents to the state press, but professional journalists on the wire services tastefully edited it before it could reach their readers.

In addition, you played full-page a story which contained several blatant inaccuracies. I quote from "A New Kind of Christmas in Chapel Hill" by David McReynolds:

Chapel Hill is ". . . hiding . . . somewhere between Durham and Raleigh. . . . not even listed on most maps. . . . The only way of getting into the town is by Trailways bus. . . . The town is about half desegregated. . . . The Pines (is) Chapel Hill's only elegant eatery . . . As far as the town is concerned he (Pat Cusick) is simply red. . . . "

The Daily Tar Heel has responsibilities as a student publication just as we have responsibilities as students. Speaking, then, as a member of the subsidizing organ of your newspaper—the student body—I would hope the materials present here can aid you in fulfilling these responsibilities.

Mailer Praises Self In 'Papers'

By CHARLES THOMPSON

Norman Mailer, The Presidential Papers, G. P. Putman's Sons (New York: 1963), 310 pp.

It is after the cataclysm, after all, and the book was written before.

When Norman Mailer published "The Presidential Papers," when he claimed that his Esquire article, "The Existential Hero" decisively influenced the 1960 election by breathing glamor into Kennedy's clay, that clay was still breathing.

Now it isn't, and whatever seemed presumptuous in the book seems twice so now. Mailer didn't stop at claiming such power for the bright jewel of his praise; he knew a thing or two that would fill the President's 'intellectual void." So we have "The Presidential Papers," a magnificent presumption.

Although we may wish Mailer had kept his egotism to himself, may question the motives for his audacity, we can't dismiss the book at that. He may be right that "The natural work of the modern Presidency destroys a man's ability for abstract thought. He becomes able to think not of the mystery in the atom bomb but of its engineering."

Nor is he completely unfair to Kennedy. The book's major theme is "that the disease of the state is intensified when large historic ideas come to power without men to personify them or dramatize their qualities." Along with personal courage, a mind for facts, and a gift for strategy, Kennedy had the sort of commanding personality capable of dramatizing ideas and ideals. But, according to Mailer, he lacked creative imagination.

Mailer himself may lack good taste, but not imagination. If the book's title left any doubt, the first of the twelve Papers, "Existential Legislation," removes it. In it Mailer suggests that we lend the Russians countless committees of Madison Avenue executives in order to flag their vigor, that the sale of drugs be made legal, that all forms of censorship be abolished, that cancer researchers be sentenced to mortal combat with a professional executioner if they fail to make progress within two years, and that capital punishment as it is now practiced be abolished. Unless we understand "existential" as a literary synonym for "cool," it is difficult to say precisely how some of these suggestions deserve the term.

Of the ones that do, the abolition of capital punishment is the most important. There is also a fascinating sidelight: if a state insisted on retaining the death penalty, they would be "allowed to kill criminals provided that the killing is not impersonal but personal and a public spectacle; to wit that the executioner be more or less the same size and weight as the criminal . . . and that they fight to death using no weapons . . . capable of killing at a distance." Thus moral responsibility and a sense of tragedy would be restored, The authority would no longer be vague, but embodied in a person whose face would be the face of the outrage.

Mailer's opposition to capital punishment is only one example of a more general theme that runs throughout the book: totalitarianism. No longer, he says in the introduction to the ninth Paper, can totalitarianism be understood as a simple form of ideology or of government and the oppressed people, but a plague whose general tendency is toward dehumanization, toward abstract power. It is manifested in modern architecture, birth control, advertising, industry, in nearly every aspect of the nations' life. Mass society is divorcing us from our responsibility, from our past, and from our guilt by depersonalizing our lives. What Mailer wants is a return to human relations and human needs.

The "Existential Hero" essay, the story of the 1960 Democratic Convention, contains some of the book's best writing. To the millions of us who were puzzled by Adlai Stevenson's frigid response to the Convention's tumultuous welcome, Mailer offers the best explanation yet. Stevenson was beginning to be disenchanted with both the Democratic party and the American people. Although a year's hard campaigning might have won him the nomination for a third time, that year might have left him a worn-out man. "There is the possibility that he sensed his situation exactly this way, and he knew that if he were to run for president, win and make a good one, he would first have to be restored, as one can indeed be restored, by an exceptional demonstration of love—love, in this case, meaning that the Party had a profound desire to keep him as their leader."

Mailer's unpredictability keeps reclaiming our interest, and if we sometimes find ourselves laughing at, rather than with, him at least we're laughing. (It's hard to keep a straight face reading an essay on Jackie Kennedy entitled "The Existential Heroine.") Most often we don't laugh, but not because we're bored.

Let's Arise And Act

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Praise Allah and the DTH! Your assaults against the "minority rule," "naked power grab," "tryanny of the minority" proposal for the little-federal amendment has finally gotten through to my inner-most core.

I guess I finally saw the light when I read that under the proposed amendment, 51 counties with 19 per cent of the population could rule the House. It really burned me up to think that anyone could be so "power hungry."

Then I began to think. What about the U. S. Senate? So I got out the trusty almanac and figured up that 26 states representing less than 31 million Americans rule that body. And that's only 15% of the U. S.! What an outrage! Why, that's 4% more tyranny than is proposed for N. C.

Furthermore, N. C. is among the larger 24 states of the union. Why that means that Senators from Rhode Island and New Hampshire and Nevada have just as much say-so about what goes on in this country as our Senators or New York's Senators. And those states have less than a million in population!! What a disgrace to a "democratic" nation! That's a power grab if I ever heard of one!

I implore the crusading DTH to do something about this deplorable state of affairs immediately—before the tyrannous minority of Nevada and Rhode Island's power faction is allowed to hamper our progress and growth by their selfish indifference to our welfare.

Arise, ye people, and protest! It took us 180 years to wake up to what the framers of the Constitution put over on us, but we'll never sleep again! Taxation without representation! Tyranny of the minority! Down with the Stamp Tax and all that kind of thing! Democracy and equal representation for all!

What Makes School Ideal?

By LORRAINE MARTIN

What is an ideal university campus?

A University of Minnesota professor believes it should have "one or two Communist professors, a student Communist club, a chapter of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, a society for the promotion of free love, a League for Overthrow of Government by Jeffersonian Violence, an anti-automation league, and perhaps a nudist club."

Dr. Mulliford Q. Sibley, a political science professor, was once voted the college's outstanding teacher of the year (by the alumni of the College of Science Literature, and the Arts.)

"American culture is far too monolithic for its own good," Mullford wrote in the Minnesota Daily. "We need students who challenge the orthodoxies."

Sibley says if teachers do not bother to implant doubt and subversive thoughts in college, when and where will they be implanted. If seeds of doubt are never sown, moral and intellectual progress may not be the result of a college education.

Sibley calls himself a pacifist and a Socialist, not a Communist. He is faculty advisor to the Student Peace Union, investigated last summer to determine whether it and the university's World Affairs Center were Communist front groups.

Even if the organization were controlled by Communists, Sibley believes neither the administration nor the state should exert pressure on them or deny their moral right to exist.

NO to Amendment I, YES to Amendment II

The 1963 General Assembly produced two legislative abortions that we know of, the Gag Law and the 'Little Federal' plan for redistricting the legislature. As voters, we can't do much about the Gag Law, except agitate and educate for its repeal in 1965. But there is something we can do about the 'Little Federal' plan. We can vote it into oblivion, from whence it came to where it should be returned with haste.

We can do this in the special referendum being held today, by voting NO to Amendment 1.

Doing this—voting NO to amendment 1—is right, proper and necessary. Doing so will prevent the small, rural counties from acquiring a stranglehold over all legislation. Doing so will assure equal representation to all North Carolina citizens.

But . . . there is another amendment to be voted on. Amendment Number 2 is so wholesome it's not even controversial. As a result, many voters don't even know about it. This amendment is an attempt to give equal property rights to women. It should pass.

One Jarring Incident Mars March

The civil rights pilgrimage from Durham to Chapel Hill Sunday afternoon was notable for many reasons, and one of the most notable was the relative absence of abusive language hurled at the marchers. They walked past such citadels of segregation as Brady's, Carlton's Rock Pile and the Frozen Kustard without incident, then up Stroud Hill through the residential section bordering Franklin Street and on into the heart of Chapel Hill.

And where did the first jarring note occur? As they entered the University community and walked past the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity house. For the first time epithets rang out and scattered obscenities welcomed the marchers to the University. And who were these few over-zealous ATO's cursing at? Ministers and ministers' wives, some faculty members' wives, students of both sexes and both races and many others interested in seeing that Negroes achieve equal rights.

Let us hasten to add that those doing the shouting were very, very few, and we're sure the ATO leaders will let them know, in no uncertain terms, that this is not the manner in which the house likes to be represented.

But still it seems a shame that the only reported incident of the afternoon should happen here on campus.

As Terry Talked, Clarence Bit His Foot

(The Hertford County Herald)

While Governor Sanford was in Southern Pines recently he wrote out a statement praising state Senate President Clarence Stone. The same statement makes the probably justified allegation that Stone "has been treated unfairly by news media." The irony of timing placed Stone in Winston-Salem, again sticking his foot in his mouth, this same day.

With his blunt and obtuse manner Stone is an easy person to dislike for those so inclined.

This lack of restraint in Stone's public utterances has finally however served some useful purpose. Coming on the same day as the Governor's praise, his talk in Winston-Salem was noted more closely than might otherwise have been the case. Talking about the speaker's ban bill, Stone is reported to have said, "I have not noticed any professor leading any (anti-segregation) demonstrations in Raleigh since we passed House Bill 1395. If they would do more screening about who does the teaching there would have been no use for HB 1395."

As was reported at the time, somewhat unconvincingly, the speaker's ban bill was a direct outgrowth of civil rights demonstrations in Raleigh earlier this year. It was a way of expressing legislative disapproval of students and teachers from state scpported schools, particularly UNC at Chapel Hill, taking part in race demonstrations. Stone's Winston-Salem remarks make this clear, if ever there was doubt.

This was a poor ground on which to base a law which makes North Carolina state institutions of higher learning unwholesome examples for the rest of the country of political control of academic freedom. Especially so when it is remembered that a law has been on the books since 1941 which bars Communists from preaching their doctrine in state buildings. It would seem the three major candidates for Governor are on firmer footing in all calling for amendment to the speaker's ban bill than were Mr. Stone and his cohorts who devised this vindictive way of "getting at" the University in the first place.

"I'll Huff And I'll Puff And I'll Blow Myself Down"

—Farmer—

day, Farmer said, "By demonstrating in Chapel Hill we are helping the passage of a strong federal civil rights bill.

"If we stop or slow down now we will not help passage of the bill."

The federal bill is now pending in the House Rules Committee.

On the local level, Farmer commented if the accommodations law is passed, we have a tool to work with. If it is not improved, then we must continue to show that we care by demonstrating.

University Writer-in-Residence John Knowles expressed faith that all Americans will win their rights "if they ask long and insistently enough."

CORE's local chairman John Dunne predicted the whole State, South and country would be set back if de-segregation efforts in Chapel Hill should fail.

At the press conference, Farmer offered the following comments on other topics:

Education—A remedial program of federal aid is needed to aid disadvantaged children of both races.

Housing — The federal government should increase its public housing program and its subsidies to private contractors.

Employment — Passage of a public works program is necessary along with a bigger job retraining program.

JV Debaters Score Win In ACC Tourney

By JOHN GREENBACKER

UNC's Junior Varsity Debate team won first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament last week.

The freshman team scored a 4-0 record by defeating teams from Wake Forest, Maryland, South Carolina, and Georgia.

Rafe Jones and Russell Blank composed the undefeated affirmative team, and Curtis Branscome and Eric Van Loon composed the negative team. Van Loon placed second, Blank, fifth, and Branscome, ninth in the over-all competition.

"This competition proves we have the best freshman team in the Atlantic Coast Conference, and probably one of the best in the country," Debate Team president Haywood Clayton said after the victory.

The UNC Junior Varsity team tied for first place honors last year with Wake Forest, but it didn't have the over-all score to claim the trophy.

Varsity competition at the tournament was inconclusive after five teams withdrew from competition at the last moment.

The Debate Team plans next to participate in a series of television debates over international issues beginning in February. The team's first opponent will be Duke when Communism's threat to the Free World will be discussed.

Taping will be made at WBTV in Charlotte.

You are high over the Potomac River just 12 miles from the White House... and viewing 186 acres of extraordinary research activity

Of course, from this height you can't see much detail, which makes the imposing expanse of the two main buildings all the more intriguing. Perhaps you can guess their functions, but it's also what you can't see (and this is summarized in the adjoining column) that makes the David Taylor Model Basin a completely unique fundamental and applied research organization — and a place you should seriously consider for your career as a professional scientist or engineer. As the Navy's advanced facility for research into submarine, surface ship, aircraft and missile design concepts, the Model Basin can offer the young graduate certain specific opportunities hard to find anywhere else.

1. Reach the $10,000 to $12,000 level WITHIN 4 YEARS.
2. Take graduate courses for advance degree with Navy help.
3. Gain diversified RDT & E experience with the best equipment and facilities of their kind.
4. Work on research projects of recognized national importance.
5. Attain recognized professional stature sooner, at which point a number of futures are available.

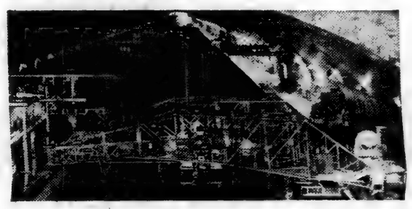
① The Washington Circumferential Highway allows speedy access to best suburban communities in the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Northern Virginia.



② HYDROMECHANICS LABORATORY facilities include this High-Speed Towing Basin almost 3/5 OF A MILE LONG, 50 feet wide, and 20 feet deep. This Laboratory is concerned with speed, stability, control and seakeeping qualities of floating or submerged naval designs, and with fundamental naval hydrodynamics.

③ APPLIED MATHEMATICS LABORATORY facilities include the latest, largest computer systems, and feature the LARC, the IBM 7090, and a 1401. This is BuShips' primary computing facility, working on engineering, research logistics, and numerical methods. Work carried on here involves mathematic simulation of the life cycle of nuclear reactors; automatic calculation of ship lines; and applications of computers to management problems.

④ In this giant new Maneuvering and Seakeeping facility, both fixed and free-running models may be tested under any sea-state condition. You may also work with the High-Speed Phenomena Division at Langley Field, Virginia.

⑤ AERODYNAMICS LABORATORY facilities include several wind tunnels—ranging from subsonic through hypersonic at Mach 10—which are used to determine and improve static stability, control and heat transfer characteristics of helicopters, VTOL's, supersonic aircraft, missiles, etc. Air flow studies also involve bomb design, bridge structures, aircraft turbulence when approaching carriers, and other government and private problems.

⑥ The unique STRUCTURAL MECHANICS LABORATORY facilities at Carderock are the new pressure tanks which permit the study, by means of large structural models, of the hull structures for deep diving submarines and deep sea research vehicles to reach all ocean depths. Additional Structural Mechanics Laboratory facilities are scattered throughout the 186 acres, and include a tridimensional Static-Load Frame, a Pentagonal Test Pond, Explosion Pits, and a 600,000-Pound Universal Testing Machine. With these facilities, Laboratory scientists and engineers conduct studies aimed at improving the hull structure and increasing the resistance of the Navy's ships to enemy attack. This requires development of fundamental, theoretical approaches of load and response, and development of engineering solutions based on the increased understanding. A substantial portion of the ship protection research is carried out at the Underwater Explosions Research Division of this Laboratory located at Portsmouth, Virginia.

⑦ The ACOUSTICS AND VIBRATION LABORATORY was just established to intensify research and development of ships of improved detection capability, and reduced vibrations and underwater sound output. Fundamental and applied research in hydrodynamics, structural acoustics, mechanical vibrations, and signal processing are supplemented by conduct of acoustic and vibration trials, and development of acoustic and vibration instrumentation.

To staff these five operating Laboratories, we are seeking college graduates with BS, MS, or PhD degrees in Aerospace, Electrical, Electronic, Mechanical or Structural Engineering; in Applied Mechanics, Mathematics, Physics, and Naval Architecture.

UNC, Billy Bust Slump

A pep band blared "The Man With The Golden Arm" here much of last night. And Billy Cunningham was certainly that.

The Big Kid busted North Carolina out of a two-game losing streak with a magnificent performance that included a personal career high of points (40) and a new school rebound record (28). They were the main reasons North Carolina defeated Maryland, 97-88.

Though the final margin was nine and the young Terps got no closer than six in the second half, UNC's seventh win came much harder than expected.

Cunningham made 13 of 24 from the field and 14 of 24 free throws, but his efforts produced only a 78-72 lead with eight minutes left in the game.

Then Billy scored a foul, Mike Cooke hit from the corner, Bill Brown tallied from the line and Bryan McSweeney drilled a rebound to send UNC out front, 84-72.

Maryland, playing sophomores most of the way, came back within seven on a rally paced by George Sudor. But from 87-80, Carolina went on a five - point string which built the lead back to 12 and sewed it up with 2:30 left. Cunningham's floater, a Brown free throw and another goal by McSweeney meant the difference.

Bud Millikan's sophs do not play like rookies, and they are going to cause a lot of trouble come February and March.

Four of them scored in double figures with playmaker Mike DeCosmo leading the way (19). Suder had 15, Gary Ward 14 and 6-8 center Rick Wise 12 as the Terps shot 42.9 per cent.

UNC sizzled with an even 50 per cent after two humbling ACC losses to Wake Forest and Duke last week. Ray Respess hit 17, 12 of them in the first half and Charlie Shaffer 14 for the Tar Heels.

... it was Cunningham, the All-America, who broke Maryland's back. His 28 rebounds buried the mark of 27 he set at Charlotte last year and contributed heavily to UNC's 59-44 edge in that department.

Billy also almost singlehandedly fouled out four Terps in a game which saw 60 personals called by referees Lou Bello and Joe Mills. Maryland had 35 fouls as Ward, Neil Brayton, Jack Clark and Scott Ferguson all went to the bench. Cunningham, surprisingly, was charged with only two.

The Tar Heels carried a 12-point lead into halftime (53-41), but it took them a while getting that far ahead. Billy C. scored 17 in a half where roughness and sloppiness prevailed. Bello had to warn the teams for rough play twice.

UNC led only by four (31-27) with eight minutes remaining, but, there the rash of violations subsided, and the Tar Heels got down to business.

They went on an 11-4 binge with Respess getting six. Then, when Maryland had cut it to 42-33, they got eight straight (four by McSweeney) to lead by 17. DeCosmo led a rally, though, that closed it to within 12 at the break. He had 11 in the half.

Frosh Hit 111; Lewis Gets 40

By AL KAPLAN

UNC's Tar Babies took their fourth straight basketball victory here Monday night, battering the Rams of Edwards Military Institute, 111-71.

Coach Ken Rosemond left in his big guns until a few moments remained in the contest, a basketball version of the Gator Bowl, with the military once again on the short end of things.

Bobby Lewis, who in one month has become a hardwood legend to Tar Heel fans, once again set the pace for the frosh, now 5-2 for the season. Lewis scored 40 points, 23 in the first half.

Lewis extended his foul shooting string to 44 before missing late in the first half.

Ian Morrison and Tom Gauntlett, Coach Ken Rosemond's other gunners, scored 23 and 22 points, respectively.

The Tar Babies were never behind, and the closest Edwards came was during the opening seconds of play, when they trailed by one, 4-3. Carolina then took off, extending its lead to 13 points (34-21) at the 7:04 mark.

The frosh extended their lead, on three eight point spurts to 51-28, with 2:22 remaining. During this time the Rams managed only seven points. The Tar Babies held a 58-32 halftime advantage.

During the second half, the action seemed to be from the same script. The Tar Babies started sluggishly, and were outscored 10-8 in the first five minutes. But then Lewis and Morrison began hitting, and the frosh rolled to a 97-60 margin with six minutes left.

King Nixes Olympic Bid

CARRBORO — Wayne King, DTH managing editor for the past 17 years, said yesterday he would refuse an expected request to go to Innsbruck, Austria, to cover the 1964 Olympics for the Daily Tar Heel.

King, who some observers believe goes all the way back to the Garfield administration in DTH service, issued a statement from his home here above the Smoke Shop. It said he would not take part in the first known occasion of a college paper sponing on-the-spot coverage of this sort.

No stranger to skiing, King suffered a broken leg when he slipped on a chiquita banana peel at Saarbuck in 1959. He spent nine weeks recuperating in a Swiss bar.

"I refuse," he said yesterday. King added, "I refuse."

Pete Worthen Swim Scene's New Swiftie

Peter Thrasher Worthen looks like another in the long line of outstanding freshmen swimmers turned out by Coach Pat Earey. Earey already has two acknowledged All-Americas on his undefeated varsity team, and Worthen could become the third in as many years.

"The Thrasher" from Andover, Mass., broke two of his own freshman school records Saturday in a 49-46 victory over Fork Union Military Academy. He had set marks of 22 seconds (50 free) and 49.5 (100 free) earlier this year, and over the weekend he bettered this with 21.8 and 48.9 clockings.

With five prep school All Americas, Fork Union was almost more than the Baby Dolphins could handle. But a 1:32.9 performance in the 200-yard relay (the final event) enabled UNC to take its fifth victory in six starts. Jay Scattergood, Russ Sleeper, Jim Bernuth and Strud Norfleet swam for the winning points.

Jack Hayden and Allen McDonald also were outstanding for the splashers. Hayden won both the individual medley and the backstroke while McDonald posted a 1:57.8 in a 200 free style win.

Worthen and his frosh mates swim Grimsley High School of Greensboro next at 6:00 here Thursday evening.

Farmer Threatens Big Demonstrations

By JOEL BULKLEY

James Farmer yesterday gave Chapel Hill 16 days to completely desegregate all places of public accommodation or face massive demonstrations by the national office of the Congress of Racial Equality.

The CORE director told newsmen in Durham, "Unless Chapel Hill is an open city by Feb. 1, it will become the focal point of all our efforts.

"All our resources—staff, funds and non-violent training—will be centered there after D-Day."

Later in the day, local integration leader John Dunne said the door to negotiations was open, and expressed a willingness to halt demonstrations on evidence of good faith by town leaders. Mayor Sandy McClamroch said he had not been formally notified of Dunne's statement but "will meet with anybody."

Farmer said he set the Feb. 1 deadline because Chapel Hill must retain its leadership in the civil rights field. He added that the date was also the anniversary of the nation's first sit-ins in Greensboro, N. C. in 1960.

He expressed optimism that the town "would again take the lead in race relations in the South" by enacting a public accommodations law within the next two weeks.

The Board of Aldermen Monday night bypassed consideration of the proposed ordinance. It voted instead to set up a special committee to iron out the Town's racial problems voluntarily.

Mayor McClamroch will chair the committee which includes two representatives each from the Ministerial Association, Chamber of Commerce, Merchants Association and University faculty.

McClamroch indicated the committee would not be able to do anything before Feb. 1.

Officials of the four groups with representatives on the committee reported yesterday afternoon they had not received notice of the Board of Aldermen's action.

Police said a group of about 45 Negroes and whites spent Monday night inside the Town Hall in protest of the Board's action. As of last night only five people remained.

Dunne said the integration group "welcomes the opportunity to meet and resolve differences with town leaders." He added the local group "was willing to consider the cessation of demonstrations, subject to evidence of good faith."

Donations To Symposium Climb Over $5,000 Mark

By VIRGINIA DeLUNG

Contributions totaling over $5,000 have been made to the 1964 Carolina Symposium from Student Government, Graham Memorial and the University Administration. Latest figures on these and other contributions were announced yesterday by Symposium Treasurer Al Snead.

Ten fraternities and sororities have pledged a total of $516 and the Business Foundation of North Carolina has given $600. The Greek organizations are Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Gamma Delta, Beta Theta Pi, Chi Omega, Delta Kappa Upsilon, Kappa Delta, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Phi Beta Kappa, and Phi Eta Sigma.

Snead said the drive for student contributions was continuing and he expected the number of fraternities and sororities at least equal the 22 that donated funds two years ago.

Contributions from individual students have exceeded $1,000, and Snead hopes to double that amount.

The Administration's grant of $1,000 was authorized by Chancellor Aycock last week. Donations of $2,900 and $1,500 were voted by the Student Legislature and the Graham Memorial Board of Directors before Christmas.

Other contributions have been made by the Forrest Hills Shopping Center in Durham, the Sofolk Foundation, and private individuals.

HOW'S THEM APPLES?

The graduate nursing program here is one of 32 accredited programs in the U.S. to receive a share of $200,000 in grants from the National Fund for Graduate Nursing Education.

Based on a formula which includes the 1963-64 enrollment, UNC will receive a grant of $4,570. This is the second and the largest grant approved for the local program.

SP Leaders Pledge Renewed Efforts

Student Party leaders pledged themselves to a renewed fight for the principles and traditions of the party in a rousing 25th. anniversary banquet Saturday night.

Some 50 alumni and party members attended the three-hour banquet Saturday night to reminisce and plan for the future.

Paul Dickson, newly-elected chairman of the party, pledged a drive to increase membership, erase the party debt and work for victories in the spring elections.

Alumni Joel Fleishmann, Tom Lambeth, Jim Turner and John Sanders spoke of the Student Party of the past and recommended that the party continue to stand by its principles.

Student Body President Mike Lawler spoke of the progress made during his administration in the understanding between Student Government and the University Administration and faculty.

He spoke of plans for a clearer definition of Student Government in relation to the University this spring.

He is working on the establishment of joint faculty-student committees to work out the exact position of Student Government and to straighten out judicial procedures.

SP legislative floor leader Phil Baddour said the Party would have to face the problem of the sit-in demonstrations in the near future.

The alumni's challenge for more idealism and more action by the party was taken up by the party leaders in a series of brief speeches.

The leaders also said they would accept the alumni's suggestion to make the banquet an annual affair.

Study, Social Room Improvement Begins

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Construction has started on the $3000 improvement project for Graham's residence hall's basement.

Costs will be paid by the Administration through the efforts of Dean of Men William Long and Assistant Dean Mat Ott in association with the Student Legislature committee for residence hall improvement.

Don Carson, chairman of the committee, said the original plan was submitted by the Men's Residence Council as a pilot project. Student Government allotted $2500 for similiar improvements in Joyner Hall.

Graham's new basement will be used primarily for study purposes, but will be free for parties on weekends.

Construction should be finished shortly after semester break.

"This was largely a student inspired and motivated project," Long said. Long, who earlier this year told Graham residents he would work to "change an existence in dormitories to a life in residence halls," described Graham as a perfect location as "it is in the center of a very conjested area of living units."

"This is an experiment," Long said, "and I hope good use is made of it. This should provide more social opportunities in an area where few facilities are available."

Carson and his committee praised Long and Ott for their efforts.

"The administration has taken the lead in the improvement of residence hall social facilities," Carson said, "and the committee hopes that there will be mutual cooperation between the two groups."

Graham residents were largely delighted by the news. "We have been working for this for some time," Graham Resident Advisor Vick Bost said. "Life for Graham residents should be much easier after this."

"It's great. This should improve residence hall social life 1000 per cent," said Grahamite Jack Markham.

Residents John Moss and Terry Peterson echoed this comment. "This will raise the morale and social position of the residence halls," Peterson said. "Now we have a place to entertain girls after dates."

TEACHER'S CERTIFICATE

The State Board of Education has approved UNC's program for state teacher certification, Dean Arnold Perry of the School of Education announced Friday.

"The program will place new emphasis on the subject matter in the teaching field and will provide more flexibility in program planning," Perry said.

Part of a new state-wide effort to improve teacher qualifications, the program will be initiated in September and will consist of a semester in the School of Education and seven semesters in other studies at the university. "We have been working on this for three years," Perry said.

As part of the same effort, the Board of Education has required that all new teachers pass the National Teacher Examination each year. Failure to pass will mean a two year probation.

Perry said he has no worries about UNC graduates passing the examination. "Our graduates have always placed among the top three per cent of North Carolina teachers," he said.

No Food For Ehringhaus

Attempted theft of food from the LaPizza truck has caused that business to stop delivery to Ehringhaus Hall.

Chuck Gierken, manager of the Carrboro restaurant, said yesterday that the attempted theft Monday night, the second such incident, resulted in some $15 damage. The door handle of the truck was torn off.

No food was stolen, he added, as it was locked in "hot boxes" inside the truck. The incident was reported to the campus police.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Prior Has Preyer Engagement—Tough

Democratic gubernatorial candidate L. Richardson Preyer will not appear on a panel at the annual Press Association meeting here Friday because of a prior commitment.

Preyer's headquarters here said Monday that the candidate had adopted a policy against cancelling one engagement for another.

The statement said Preyer was scheduled to visit Surry County Friday and would be unable to accept the Chapel Hill invitation.

$1,000 A Smoke In Texas—Texans?

EASTLAND, Tex. (UPI) — Three smoking and one non-smoking member of the Eastland City Council unanimously passed Monday an ordinance prohibiting the sale or use of cigarettes within the municipal limits.

The ordinance provides a $1,000 fine or three years imprisonment for any person caught with cigarettes or smoking them. Mayor Don Pierson said he expects the ordinance to become effective Feb. 20.

Why Oh Why Didn't He Come Here?

SHAWNEE, Okla. (UPI)—An Oakland, Calif., man purposely crash-dived his light airplane into a building on the Oklahoma Baptist University campus Tuesday and narrowly missing a class of 40 students taking their final examination.

The man was killed. The highway patrol identified him as Robert Lawson, age 40 to 45, of Oakland, Calif., a former OBU student.

No one else was hurt.

Witnesses said Lawson buzzed the campus for about a half-hour, then made a low approach from the south. He rammed the third floor of Shawnee Hall, the former administration building.

The plane was a Cessna 150. It tore a gaping hole in the south side of the building and set it afire. The single-engine craft hung there a few minutes, then fell to the ground. Lawson was still in the plane.

Firemen quickly extinguished the flames.

Lawson had radioed the university airport and said he was going to crash into the administration building. University officials thought he meant the new administration building, Thurmond Hall. They evacuated it.

15 Escape In Mid-Eastern Revolt

ZANZIBAR—(WPTF)—Fifteen eunuchs escaped Tuesday from the harem of Sheik Hassen Mar-Cheroot and were finally captured after an hour-long search.

A spokesman for the eunuchs, Harem Kirk-Patrook, said the uprising had taken place in protest of the sheik's discriminatory practices.

"The Sheik is a fakir", he commented. "He hires us, but he won't treat us as customers on an equal basis.

"We will continue to fight for our rights", he added. "If we aren't treated as equals by February 1 we will be forced to call in the Eunuch Union."

The Sheik was reportedly locked up in his castle, and an official spokesman indicated that there would be no statement on the incident until tomorrow.

Peacemakers Asked To Force Zone Revision

PANAMA CITY (UPI)—Inter-American peacemakers postponed a scheduled return home today on insistence of Panama they work out a formula that will bind the United States to revision of zone treaties.

The departure was postponed even though the Organization of American States (OAS) group considered its work completed with signature of an agreement by Panama and the United States to establish a joint cooperation committee to guarantee the peace, and a renewed U.S. pledge to fly the Panamanian and American flags on public sites in the zone.

An OAS spokesman said treaty revision was not within the peacemakers' scope but that the five-nation group agreed to remain at least 12 hours longer to seek to prevent continued tension between Panama and the United States from exploding into new conflict.

Twenty-one persons were killed and 463 wounded between Thursday and Sunday. The casualties included four American dead and 103 wounded, including three civilians.

Monday's "peace formula" snagged quickly on Panamanian insistence that the United States agree to treaty revisions prior to any formal talks on re-establishing normal diplomatic relations. The U.S. position was that it could not be "pressured" into treaty revisions. The United States called first for restoration of law and order before seeking a permanent settlement of the tense situation.

10 Castro Trainees Arrested In Panama

WASHINGTON (UPI) — At least 10 agents trained in Communist Cuba have been arrested and are being held by Panamanian authorities in Panama, Army Secretary Cyrus R. Vance said today.

Vance, who returned from Panama Monday, told a news conference he thought at least one of the 10 was a sniper.

The Army secretary said the agents were identified by U. S. authorities and were arrested by Panamanian police.

The secretary, agreeing with an earlier statement by Secretary of State Dean Rusk, said agents hostile to both the United States and Panama "moved in quickly to whip up the dispute" when the recent disturbances broke out.

First Demo Candidate Against Gag

RALEIGH (UPI)—The state's first announced Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor is Robert W. Scott, who last week withdrew from contention in the race for governor.

Scott, son of former governor and late U. S. Senator W. Kerr Scott, told a news conference that he would seek the state's No. 2 post and used the occasion to criticize the anti-Communist speaker ban law.

Scott, 34, said he was confident he would be elected and promised a "bold and vigorous" campaign. "It will be taken directly to the people. The campaign is already underway," he said.

State Department Tells Legion 'Look'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The State Department is opening many of its secrets to the American Legion in an experiment aimed at bettering relations with groups often critical of U. S. foreign policy.

A five-man committee from the Legion Monday began three days of observing the department at the invitation of Secretary of State Dean Rusk. They will attend Rusk's staff conferences and will be briefed on intelligence operations. A State Department spokesman said the group was being given a "full inside view."

The experiment grew out of a recent speaking engagement by Rusk at a Legion meeting in Miami Beach.

A number of Legion posts had been asking for a congressional investigation of the State Department. Rusk proposed that the Legion "come and look us over yourself."

Faculty Committees Formed To Study Student Government

Philosophy, Procedures, Main Topics

By PETE WALES

The appointment of two faculty committees to confer with students on judicial procedures and the philosophy of Student Government has been recommended by the Faculty Council.

Mike Lawler announced the decision in a letter from Faculty Council Chairman C. P. Spruill at the Student Party banquet Saturday night.

"The committee on judicial procedures will be appointed this week," Chancellor William B. Aycock said yesterday.

It will consist of the chairman (Dr. Gordon Cleveland) and two or three members of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline and two or three other faculty members.

The Faculty Committee on Student Discipline was responsible for the abolition of the Student-Faculty Review Board earlier this year.

Student leaders have accepted the establishment of the Faculty Review Board, but feel that many adjustments need to be made in the appeals procedure.

The new committee will have no students on it, but it is expected that students will be called before it to give opinions.

The second committee to discuss philosophical questions about the relation of Student Government to the faculty and Administration is being formed in answer to a resolution passed by Student Legislature Dec. 5.

The resolution asks that the Chancellor appoint a faculty-student ad hoc committee to draft a statement "affirming the philosophical commitment of the University community to the theory and practice of student self-government."

The resolution came from a series of Judicial Committee hearings on proposals to abolish the Student-Faculty Review Board earlier in the fall.

Many student leaders felt that the trust between Student Government and the University authorities had been broken.

The aim of the resolution is to get a clear statement of the authority delegated to Student Government by the University.

The ad hoc committee will consist of the president and vice-president of the Student Body and several other students and faculty members appointed by Chancellor Aycock.

"Hey! Hi You" Call Of The Wild?

By SONDRA WILSON

Are Carolina coeds typical?

Miss Daryl Farrington, assistant dean of women, says "no."

A Carolina coed herself a few years ago, she has interviewed over 200 junior transfers this semester, listening to their ideas and observing their attitudes toward the University.

Miss Farrington was "astonished" to find such a vast variety among the women students. "The girls seem much more serious now than they did when I was here," she said.

Do girls come to Carolina to find a husband?

"No!" Miss Farrington again answers. "The majority of the coeds seem to have definite ideas about their future, and the kind of jobs they expect to gain."

According to the Ohio Psycological Test that all transfer students were required to take during Orientation, the Carolina coed is usually of "above average intelligence."

Tests also show coeds are most interested in literature and art. They rank lowest in mechanical and clerical categories.

"It's so hard to get to meet boys" is the most frequent complaint the assistant dean has heard this year. 'The guys think we're dated up weeks in advance," the girls say.

"If you speak to them, they think you're crazy. If you don't they think you're a snob."

Coeds have suggested more and better organized mixers and more frequent exchanges between dorms and fraternities.

Most of the women transfers show liberal attitudes concerning the apartment rule. "A girl has already formed her values by the time she reaches Carolina," they argue.

Others complain of inhibiting rules and regulations.

A major concern of the women students, Miss Farrington has learned, is the lack of rapport between student and professors. They also seem disappointed in the academic nature of the college and the "incompetency" of some of their professors.

Still, there are coeds who are completely content with college life here. They find the campus "very friendly" and rules rather lenient.

"Closing hours in girls' dorms should be earlier," one coed commented.

Generally, it seems, however, that a cold war does exisit between the "mythical Carolina gentlemen" and the "typical Carolina coed."

Celler Unpopular For Rights Stand

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Southern opponents Tuesday accused Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) of trying to railroad the civil rights bill through the House. They made clear they would not be stampeded.

Celler, who is House manager for the rights bill, aroused southern ire when he told the House Rules Committee that "we have the ammunition" to pass the bill outlawing discrimination in voting, schools, job hiring, public accommodations and other areas.

Rep. William M. Colmer, D-Miss., told Celler he was trying to rush the measure through the House without proper consideration. "You have the emotional ammunition you think will let you shoot down the rights and privileges of others," Colmer said.

Planetarium Appoints Hall

Morehead Planetarium director A. F. Jenzano has announced the appointment of Donald S. Hall as assistant director of the Planetarium.

Since coming to the Planetarium here in 1962, Hall has been narrating Planetarium programs, developing and writing scripts for them, building planetarium displays and developing special effects for the Planetarium.

He has also been managing the Planetarium's science center, as well as coordinating the activities of the Planetariu with school teachers all over North Carolina. His planetarium work combines his interest in education and astronomy.

As assistant director, Hall will continue in these same duties while working with the director in the supervision of other staff members.

Edward P. Morgan: The State of the Union Message

Something For Everyone

The state of the union, as the President observed the other day, is basically good. But the unique Lyndon Johnson touch in the strategy to make it better was clearly calculated to leave his political opposition in a state of consternation. He occupied so many forward positions on so many fronts that he left little ground open for his enemies to fight him on. He was for frugality and a sound dollar, the magic words that always are an open sesame to a legislator's vote, if not his heart, except where the budget cuts affect his own district. But the President was also for the mightiest federal assist in the nation's history to building of homes, schools, libraries and hospitals.

He was for being first to land on the moon if nobody else wanted to cooperate and go with us but he had already cut back some military spending, was going to level off our stockpile of enriched uranium and he invited the Russians to take similar steps to de-fuse the nuclear arms race. The President was for capital and he was for labor and sincerely against the sin of denying citizens their full constitutional rights. He was for prudence but he also was for progress. His comparatively short message to a joint session of the House and Senate in a dilatory and dubious 88th Congress was paced so perfectly that he did not throw away a single line. His soft, controlled drawl and meaningful pauses evoked 80 interruptions for applause though by no means all sections of the chamber applauded the same things.

As at least one Republican remarked afterwards with slightly corrosive scorn, the President's address "had something in it for everybody." And indeed it did. But the artfulness of the Johnson recipe was to mix the ingredients in such a way that it was plausible to think everybody really could be cooking with gas if Congress would just be reasonable.

Despite their stock and inevitably deflating comments, this artfulness was not lost on the Republicans. An alert and seasoned Capitol Hill observer who happended to focus his eye on Congressman Charlie Halleck of Indiana during the speech said the expression of the House Minority Leader seemed to say "Good Lord, he's done it to us again." And one eastern Republican senator, prominent for his moderate views, did say privately that even he could carry Arizona on such a platform as the Johnson state of the union message.

All of which indicates that Senator Goldwater's own somewhat captious reaction may have been slightly hasty. Pressed for comment in New Hampshire where he is campaigning for the GOP presidential nomination, the man from Arizona said the speech "out Roosevelted Roosevelt, out-Kennedyed Kennedy and even made Truman look like a piker." If he had added Teddy Roosevelt, Herbert Hoover and William McKinley to the comparisons Goldwater would have perhaps struck a better balance.

For the central significance rising like an obelisk out of the President's performance before Congress is that Lyndon Johnson means to occupy the political center, not just to sit there but as an activist engaging attackers from all sides. This was the territory, and the position upon it, which John F. Kennedy aimed for and if he had lived, he might have consolidated his power there. But this strategy is not new to President Johnson. He has worn it like a vest through most of his political career and he is a master at its execution.

An invaluable advantage to the center position is that it is so easy from there to trap reckless opponents and expose them in extreme positions. This is a danger that Senator Goldwater faces more precariously at the moment than all the other Depublican prospects and his talk, just since last week, about abrogating the test ban treaty, encouraging another invasion of Cuba, leaving the discretion about firing nuclear weapons to somebody other than the commander-in-chief, et cetera—such "tough talk" exposes him even more.

President Johnson, of course, is now exposed, too. He has set his goals and pledged to reach them, as swiftly as possible. If he stumbles the political injury to him and his party could conceivably be fatal in a presidential election year. He may not be able to make more than token cuts in federal spending. He may alienate both the liberals and the Southerners in the battle over civil rights. He may not be able to do enough to combat unemployment to satisfy organized labor and he may do too much in flexing federal authority to hold the now surprisingly tolerant attention of business.

Whatever he does do, it will come, by nature of his political philosophy and the location of his strategic position, from some compromise. "Lyndon," a man who has known him long and well said today, "wants that spectacular 20-yard run down the field. He will settle for a five-yard gain. But some people forget that when he gets that, he demands five yards more, then another gain and another until he's where he wants to be." Well, the game is now on and we shall see what we shall see.

No Escape From Recollection

By HENRY McINNIS

There came across your mind the desire to flee from reality and its burdens.

You want to stop reading the morning papers, which remind you cruelly that the young president is dead, when it always seemed so right that he should live to lead his nation on to a new greatness, an inescapable destiny. But the headlines and stories will not allow any accommodation to this dream, because it was stopped forever in Dallas by a nightmare we have not overcome, nor shall.

Would it help the pain of your loss by going to the woods? You think so. You could get in a bit of hunting before the season closes. Raise that rifle and fire. But the gun seems strangely heavy this time, and the telescopic sight makes you suddenly sick somehow.

Maybe it would be a fine idea to drive over to the beach and have a sumptuous seafood platter fresh from the sea. You note the sign on the cafe door saying that you are welcome because of your skin color, but the hospitality diminishes your dignity. You cannot forget how important it was for him to open those doors to your fellow men so that you could really enjoy the feast set before you.

And as you eat, you think of other people you don't even know and have never seen who are at this same moment cringing with stomach pains while you suffer a slight attack of evereating.

Back on the beach road you go and as you drive, "Impeach Earl Warren" signs loom into view, like so much litter.

The radio announcer interrupts a program twice. A Texas youth who boasted he would kill Kennedy had just been acquitted of charges because he said he was joking. A New York man had been ordered examined by a psychiatrist after he was charged with threatening President Johnson.

You go over to a barnacled fishing pier and cast your rod. The look of the cascading waves with the feel of swaying poles underneath makes you feel small and insignificant, even helpless.

You watch children on shore go dashing into the surf with abandon and you think back over that time when you were surprised and pleased to see newsphotos of the President, bathing in the Pacific on his California visit. Everyone was happier then. You could remember how available he was with his presence and his flashing smile. Friendly people shook his hands and followed him out of the oceans. You thought of the Lincoln Continental convertible, this time with his foot hanging grotesquely over the side and his smile now gone.

He is now as unreachable as the line where the sea and sky meet. If we still wish to follow him, the way will have to be different. His tracks on the sands of immortality are etched in ideas. They were fashioned from all that made men wise and good, loyal and brave.

You look very hard and very long at that far-away horizon and try to understand that far out across the vast waters before you lies the world. It was the same world that felt the same loss and the common grief, not just an unknowable land out of sight, unfeeling or undisturbed.

It was the same world out beyond that he brought a little nearer to the dream of peace.

Chapel Hill Vs. CORE: Where From Here?

Chapel Hill, to put it mildly, is in a cruel situation. The town is standing at a crossroads of some sort, and whether or not we're able to read the signs and take the right route will be decided within the next few days.

An immovable object—a majority of the Board of Aldermen—has met an irresistible force—a demand for complete desegregation by a coalition of civil rights groups, headed by the national office of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Suddenly, in short, the much-heralded Negro Revolt has really hit home, and all of us, whether we like it or not, are in it up to our ears.

How we come out of it depends upon how well we all face up to that fact. The only sure thing is that if there were an easy answer to our problem, somebody would have come up with it by now.

In the face of the extreme tension that is developing, many doubts are being expressed about the integrity of both the Aldermen opposed to a public accommodations ordinance and the leaders of the civil rights movement.

This is a poor way to begin trying to resolve our dilemma. The Aldermen can't simply be written off as a bunch of puppets dancing at the end of strings held by a goodly segment of our more reactionary residents.

By the same token, local integrationist leaders are not here simply to foment civil disturbances at the direction of national leaders out for a tactical victory.

Both of these views are excessively cynical and take no account whatsoever of anything approaching humanitarian motives. And yet humanitarian motives are greatly involved.

A truer view of the situation is that the Aldermen still think voluntary efforts will work, and civil rights leaders think this is wishful thinking.

If it were simply a matter of deciding who has the best case, then our problem could be solved easily. But it is not that simple.

The fact of the matter is that a good many of the town's white and Negro residents want to see some visible sign of an end to the left-overs of our segregationist past. They want the law to be with them, not against them. They want to have their wishes heeded for a change, instead of their opponents!

The Aldermen and the Mayor know all this, but a majority of them remain unconvinced that a public accommodations ordinance is the best way to bring all this about. They fear a subtler form of discrimination will occur if the town's businessmen are forced to serve the public without regard to color.

Who can say the Aldermen are wrong in thinking this? Certainly we can't, but neither can the Aldermen prove they are right. We, at least have the recommendations of the specially-appointed Mayor's Committee on Integration and the standing Committee on Human Relations to go on. Both have unequivocally recommended passage of a public accommodations ordinance as the best way of solving the town's lingering racial problem.

The question now is: Where do we go from here?

A meeting between the Board of Aldermen and local civil rights leaders would seem to be a good place to start. Evidence of the board's good faith in appointing a third negotiating committee Monday night would seem to be the best way of temporarily avoiding further racial demonstrations.

Function Of A University: To Learn Or Be Known?

From the Journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science

Today the dominant trend in our universities is toward trying to do too many things. What is the appropriate function of a university? Should it emphasize community service; should it provide a base of operations for its faculty, or should it exsit to teach? Obviously it should exisit primarily for educating the young. This is the one function which it can uniquely perform and, in the long view, the most important. Other organizations can provide community service or furnish housing for those whose only interest is research.

It is difficult to know when a university is doing a good job of teaching, and those who judge university administrations seldom evaluate them on the basis of the quality of their human output. Rather, institutions are judged by some on the basis of their football teams; by others, on their budgets, rate of increase of endowment, or new buildings. Among professionals, standards are employed which in their way are as false as the criterion of athletic prowess; for example, institutions are rated on the number and brilliance of their academic stars.

By "stars" I mean men who in various ways have made a name for themselves. But does the presence of such men necessarily contribute much to the teaching function of the university? Sometimes it does, but many of these men are only occasionally on campus or have little or no time for students.

Another fashionable standard for judging a university is the amount of research activity. Thus, university administrators tend to follow the "publish or perish" approach. As a result, many scientists find it expedient to neglect teaching duties. Those engaged in research have always enjoyed advantages over the teachers, few of whom gain recognition even in their own institutions. Under the present rules of the game, any scientist who teaches when he can do research must be unusually public-spirited or blind to his own interest. The result is to demean teaching. How can a professor approach a class with enthusiasm and adequate preparation if he is convinced that education of undergraduates is a secondary function of the university?

Few administrators would admit publicly that they give low priority to education, and indeed most would prefer to provide excellence in teaching. The difficulty is that academic stars and research output can be easily identified and can bring acclaim to an institution. How many universities have gained renown for their instruction?

The problem of establishing criteria for performance in teaching is difficult. Many components must be considered in judging whether a man has been educated. Surely the accumulation of knowledge is important, and achievement tests are one objective means of measuring performance. In scientific fields it should be possible to establish additional criteria. On completion of his doctorate in science, a man begins to publish papers, or if he is in industrial research he begins to rise in the company. After 3 or 4 years one can judge his scientific competence and potential.

Among the needs in education today are well-established, nationally recognized performance standards for educational achievement could assist in redressing the present inbalance between research and teaching in our universities.

Reward

Editors, The Tar Heel:

After an extensive three-year study of the Woman's Dormitory Rules System and extensive study of the psychological motivation for these Medieval documents, I have come to certain conclusions. It has been the policy of Mother Carmichael and her cohorts for these many, many years that their minions deserved only the stick and never the carrot. They have instituted a system of rather comprehensive commandments (example, Thou shalt not stay out past 11 p.m. on Monday thru Thursday; Thou shalt not be alone with a nasty man, at least in his apartment, etc.) If these comandments are broken, you will suffer, besides severe pangs of conscience, the wrath of the Carmichael clan. This usually includes being campused (an unusual name for imprisonment) or being brought before the Honor Council (a small scale inquisition into your personal lack of honor).

But the point is that most psychologists agree that reward-training is better than punishment-training. This has been quite well established with tests on mice and other forms of lower mammals (why not on co-eds?). If you're going to consider co-eds as lower forms of mammals anyway . . .? Why not provide a system of rewards? As a possible system let me suggest: one gold star for each night on time, an extra gold star for a whole week without a late, competition between dorms to see which can collect the most books of gold stars, an honorary tea for the victor, an emblazoned King James Bible with the dorm's name in Carolina blue, and a leather-bound copy of the New Testament for each girl in the winning dorm.

Footnote:
It is absolutely necessary that only the New Testament be handed out. The Old Testament is obviously much too salacious and worldly for tender young minds.

Sex Is Bad?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I just came back from the Sunday Cinema: Les Liasons Dangerueses, and am completely mystified and incensed. Why did Graham Memorial get the censored version of the movie, but, what strikes me as more incredible, why was it cut and blacked out in the first place. Is it thught that the scenes in question might plant "evil" thoughts that would contaminate American society? True, too many of us have an unfortunate childish attitude towards sex—as evidenced by the reactions of many at Carroll Hall on Sunday, but it strikes me that the censors are equally juvnile. Are people elevated by saying to them, "No, no; musn't watch that"? The obvious reaction would seem to be that sex is bad. By placing these taboos on what should be free and open we create unnecessary guilt and anxiety; this strikes me as being more harmful to our society, which the censors are so dedicated in protecting, than any possible outgrowth of the so-called "immorality."

Waste?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Perry Young's words in last Sunday's Tar Heel were a waste of space. They were not inspiring, enlightening nor curing, but were only time-consuming and detrimental. When he finally said what he wanted to, that fizzled also.

In his attempt to say something profound, he himself demonstrates the kind of thinking which helps to generate the same color barrier he apparently would like to see broken down. Coloring the face is such a small, insignificant act; and to think twice about it, as Mr. Perry does, is much worse than not thinking of it at all.

He calls the mummer's old-fashioned, black-face comedy immoral. That's a pretty strong statement for an argument against using black coloring on the face; and when you think about it, it seems sadly ridiculous.

Mr. Perry is making the color difference into a big thing. He, like thousands of integrationists, must lose his color consciousness and realize that people are people, black, white, green, or blue.

Huxley Resolves Literary Dichotomy

Literature and Science, by Aldous Huxley, Harper, 1963. 118 p., $3.50.

By STEVE DENNIS

Much has been heard recently on this side of the Atlantic about C. P. Snow's statements of the dichotomy between technology and the humanities in the Twentieth Century.

Literature and Science is a rational, analytic investigation of this alleged split by Aldous Huxley. Huxley can be said to know both sides. His brother is biologist Sir Julian Huxley, his grandfather, Thomas Henry Huxley.

Huxley explains the difference between scientific and literary writing as being the distinction between a style approaching mathematical certainty and one seeking to encompass all experience in a single work.

His opinion is basically optimistic.

"To the twentieth-century man of letters science offers a treasure of newly discovered facts and tentative hypotheses. If he accepts this gift and if . . . he is sufficently talented and resourceful to be able to transform the new raw materials into works of literary art, . . . (he) . . . will be able to treat the age-old and perennially relevant theme of human destiny with a depth of understanding, a width of reference, of which, before the rise of science, his predecessors (through no fault of their own, no defect of genius) were incapable."

This book is likely to be of interest and importance to readers in many fields. Huxley has slight tendencies to over-write or to repeat himself, but the book is a serious treatment of a pressing debate today.

NO. CALDWELL, N. J. MAN or a MISS LAUREN WINS COVETED AFFLERBACH FELLOWSHIP!

AFTER what is possibly the world's record rumination over who won a color-naming competition we have reached a decision. If you can remember that far back, more than a year ago we deplored the uninspired names given to colors (light green, dark blue, etc.) as well as the sheer flights of fancy that conveyed nothing at all (Kumquat Blossom Time, December Showers, Teaneck, etc.). We asked your assistance in conjuring up new, evocative names for shirt colors, but names that also had some connection with reality; such as Whizzer White, Well Red, Navel Orange, and so on. ★ To make the enterprise more tempting we dangled a Grand Prize of a Traveling Afflerbach Fellowship: a glamorous weekend at Quakertown, Pa., our HQ (with a free sightseeing trip into romantic Philadelphia), or a dozen Eagle Shirts. Additionally, there were 9 Stationary Afflerbachs of 1/2 dozen Eagle Shirts offered as second prizes. ★ Well, here it is: The winner is none other than either W. R. Goodwin of No. Caldwell, N. J. or Janet Lauren of New York, N. Y.! They were so close, which is what held us up, that they both win the grand prize. Second prize winners will be notified by mail. Congratulations, all! ★ Among the thousands and thousands of splendid names submitted—some of which we shall surely use—were the following:

PLEASE DO NOT FILL IN THIS COUPON!

THE only reason this coupon is here is: we are going to make this page into an easel card to sit on the counters of stores that sell Eagle Shirts; and where this space is we are going to have a pad of entry blanks which people who buy shirts (as opposed to people who merely read ads like this and who at any rate have already had a chance at color-naming) may fill out with their color name entries. Fair is fair. Incidentally, this sort of effort is called "merchandising", possibly because it is intended to brighten the eyes of the merchant who sells Eagle shirts. If you don't know who that might be in your town (they don't all have neon signs announcing same in their windows, you know) you might write Miss Afflerbach; you may use the coupon for that if you like.

Frosh Want Revenge At Six

UNC's Tar Babies will be driving for five and at the same time looking for revenge, as the frosh play host to the Wolflets of NC State tonight at 6 o'clock. A win would be the frosh's fifth straight.

The Wolflets, with a great height advantage, over-shadowed the Tar Babies 76-65, earlier this season at Raleigh. The mainstays of State's offense are 6-7 John Sellers and 6-8 Jerry Moore. In the first meeting, Moore had 22 points and 23 rebounds and Sellers ruined the Tar Babies for 20 points and 18 rebounds.

The Tar Babies, now 6-2 on the year, are paced by the scoring of Bob Lewis, Ian Morrison and Tom Gauntlett. Lewis, who is personally rewriting the UNC scoring record book, carries a 39.4 average into tonight's contest. Morrison and Gauntlett are averaging about 17 points per game.

In the first encounter with State, Lewis was held to 16 points by the fine defensive play of Eddie Biedenbach, while Morrison was high with 17 and Gauntlett scored 15.

Wally (Butts) Not Too Jolly

ATLANTA (UPI)—Curtis Publishing Co. was granted a new trial today in the Wallace Butts libel case unless Butts agrees within 20 days to a sharp reduction in the damages awarded him by a federal court.

U. S. District Judge Lewis R. Morgan handed down an order requiring a new trial in the case unless within 20 days all punitive damages awarded to Butts above $400,000 are remitted.

The ex-coach and former University of Georgia athletic director sued the Saturday Evening Post for $10-million for an article the magazine published about him.

The jury awarded Butts $3 million in punitive damages and $60,000 in general damages as a result of an article published in the Saturday Evening Post.

Morgan reached his decision following weeks of study of the defendant's motion for a new trial.

In his ruling Tuesday, Morgan agreed the article was "extremely defamatory," and left standing the $60,000 in general damages that the jury awarded.

But he said the $3 - million award in punitive damage was excessive and that such awards must be kept within "reasonable bounds." He gave Butts the choice of agreeing to a $2.6-million reduction in this figure or having a new trial rescheduled.

In asking for a new trial, Curtis attorneys argued that errors were permitted during the trial and in Morgan's charge to the 12-man jury.

Lawyers for the publishers also insisted that the punitive damages awarded Butts were set by the jury "without conscience" and comprised the largest such award in U. S. court history.

Butts' attorneys said the former coach had not been consulted yet abut today's action, and no decision had been reached on whether he will agree to the sharp reduction in damages.

State Sophs, Marine Fight Family Battle

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina successfully passed one of those ACC sophomore-filled teams Monday, but another one, possibly stronger and definitely so against the Tar Heels, comes into Woollen Gym tonight at 8:00.

It is the always-tough Wolfpack of N. C. State which starts three sophs and has another one ready as a sixth man. State's most important man, however, will not be here, Head Coach Everett Case went into the hospital Monday with the gout and a serious case of shingles. Press Maravich, former Clemson head, will guide the Raleigh contingent tonight.

Though the Pack has rookies Tommy Mattocks, Billy Moffitt and Ray Hodgdon in the starting lineup, its average age is probably higher than that of most league clubs.

This is due mostly to an ex-Marine named Larry Lakins who is almost old enough to be Billy Galantai's father. Lakins (6-6) will start at center tonight with Pete Auksel (6-6), State's finest, and Hodgdon (6-4) at the forwards.

Lakins got 40 earlier this year against Tulane and is averaging 19.9 points and 7.3 rebounds. He leads the ACC in field goal percentage (.60). Auksel is at 14.8 (with 9.3 rebounds a game) while Hodgdon is scoring 8.6 per contest.

The guards are Mattocks (6-2) and Moffitt (6-0), two quick hustlers whose speed has made up for many of their mistakes this year. Mattocks is close to double figures (9.3) while Moffitt is at 6.9.

NCS's bench supplies sophs Hal Blondeau (6-4) and Larry Worsley (6-5) up front and veteran senior Les Robinson (6-0) in backcourt.

The team, as a whole, is the conference pace-setter in defense (65.1 points a game).

"We had two tough ones with them last year, and I expect the same thing this time around," UNC Coach Dean Smith said yesterday.

"As Everett said earlier this year, they'd be a ball control team. How much his absence affects their tempo, I don't know. We will expect anything from them on defense, in any case."

UNC defeated the brother institution twice last year, five points at Raleigh, and an overtime two-point victory here. Larry Brown's jump shot with eight seconds to go won the latter game at a time when Carolina was ranked close to the top ten in the country.

Incomparable Billy Cunningham had his greatest statistical game here Monday when he scored a career high of 40 points and set a new UNC record of 28 rebounds in the 97-88 victory over Maryland.

Billy's previous highs were 33 (against Maryland and Virginia last year) and 27 (against Clemson at Charlotte last February.) He is now averaging 25.7 points and 16.1 rebounds.

Top Wrestler Wellstone Is ACC's Best

Paul Wellstone, ace Tar Heel grappler, has extended his string of undefeated matches to seven (six wins and a draw), providing one bright spot to the Matmen's mediocre 3-4 won-lost mark.

The Arlington, Va. soph has been called by some as one of the best wrestlers ever to attend the university, but in order to duplicate his great high school performances, he would have to reach the NCAA championship final.

Since Wellstone's sophomore year in high school he has lost only three matches. All three defeats came at the hands of Billy Fletcher, the Virginia state champ in 1960 through 1962.

Including the six wins this year, Wellstone has won 13 matches at UNC. He went undefeated (7-0) as a freshman last year.

"My immediate goal is winning the ACC," says Wellstone, and by all indications he has cleared the toughest hurdle, having gain- a draw from conference champ Pete Harrison (of Virginia).

Swim At 4

Coach Pat Earey surmized that Wake Forest will present "no problem whatsoever" for his high flying Dolphins when the two teams clash tomorrow in Bowman Gray Pool. The meet will be an afternoon contest beginning at 4 p.m.

The Tankers will again use a shuffled line-up as they did against VPI in hopes of uncovering some hidden strengths. Fred Lipp and Davis Roberts both turned in sparkling performances in strange events on Saturday.

With virtually everyone getting a chance to swim, the Wake meet should provide an excellent warmup for Thursday's severe test with East Carolina.

"Many of the clothing stores in Chapel Hill make the students feel as if they were serving the stores instead of vice-versa. If you could create the atmosphere that your purpose is to serve the student and you are not out to bleed him of his last dollar I think it would help your business a great deal. ## On Campus with Max Shulman

(By the Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and, "Barefoot Boy With Cheek.")

A GUIDE FOR THE GUIDERS

One of the most interesting academic theories advanced in many a long year has recently been advanced by that interesting academic theorist, E. Pluribus Ewbank, Ph. D. who holds the chair of Interesting Academic Theories at the St. Louis College of Footwear and Educational Philosophy. Dr. Ewbank said in the last issue of the learned journal, the Mount Rushmore Guide to Scholastic Advancement and Presidents' Heads, that we might be approaching the whole problem of student guidance from the wrong direction.

Dr. Ewbank, a highly respected pedagogue and a lifelong smoker of Marlboro Cigarettes, (I mention Marlboros for two reasons: first, to indicate the scope of Dr. Ewbank's brainpower. Out of all the dozens of brands of cigarettes available today, Dr. Ewbank has had the wit and taste to pick the one with the most flavorful flavor, the most filtracious filter, the most soft soft pack, the most flip top Flip Top box: I refer, of course, to Marlboro. The second reason I mention Marlboro is that I get paid to mention Marlboro in this column, and the laborer, you will agree, is worthy of his hire.)

But I digress. To return to Dr. Ewbank's interesting theory, he contends that most college guidance counselors are inclined to take the easy way out. That is to say, if a student's aptitude tests show a talent for, let us say, math, the student is encouraged to major in math. If his tests show an aptitude for poetry, he is directed toward poetry. And so forth.

All wrong, says Dr. Ewbank. The great breakthroughs, the startling innovations in, let us say, math, are likely to be made not by mathematicians—whose thinking, after all, is constrained by rigid rules and principles—but by mavericks, by nonconformists, by intuitors who refuse to fall into the rut of reason. For instance, set a poet to studying math. He will bring a fresh, unfettered mind to the subject, just as a mathematician will bring the same kind of approach to poetry.

By way of evidence, Dr. Ewbank cites the case of Cipher Binary, a youth who entered college with brilliant test scores in physics, chemistry, and the calculus. But Dr. Ewbank forced young Cipher to major in poetry.

The results were astonishing. Here, for example, is young Cipher's latest poem, a love lyric of such originality that Lord Byron springs to mind. I quote:

He was her logarithm,
She was his cosine.
Taking their dog with 'em,
They hastened to go sign
Marriage vows which they joyfully shared,
And wooed and wed and pi r squared.

Similarly, when a freshman girl named Elizabeth Barrett Sigafoos came to Dr. Ewbank to seek guidance, he ignored the fact that she had won the Pulitzer prize for poetry when she was eight, and insisted she major in mathematics. Again the results were startling. Miss Sigafoos has set the entire math department agog by flatly refusing to believe that six times nine is 54. If Miss Sigafoos is correct, we will have to re-think the entire science of numbers and—who knows?—possibly open up vistas as yet undreamed of in mathematics.

Dr. Ewbank's unorthodox approach to student guidance has so impressed his employers that he was fired last week. He is currently selling beaded moccasins at Mount Rushmore.

Farmer: 'No Threat'

Gov. Sanford Hits Back At CORE— Will Back City In Racial Dispute

RALEIGH—Gov. Terry Sanford yesterday offered his complete support for Chapel Hill officials in dealing with the Town's racial problem and issued a stern warning to the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

"I am amazed that such brazen threats should be made against the Board of Aldermen of Chapel Hill," Sanford said in reference to a statement made Tuesday by James Farmer. (Farmer, national director of CORE, stated that CORE would aim it full resources at Chapel Hill if the Town was not an "open city" by Feb. 1.)

Sanford, speaking at a special press conference, said, "We can not and will not allow any group to coerce public officials no matter how meritorious they believe their cause to be.

"The town of Chapel Hill is a part of the state of North Carolina. The sovereignty of the state will not bow to threats while I am governor. Chapel Hill, of all places, should not be made a battleground. If it is, it will be because of the irresponsible action of CORE and in spite of all the town and state officials can do."

In New York, Farmer denied his ultimatum was meant to be a threat. He said, however, that if more progress was not shown by the specified date, CORE would step up its activity in Chapel Hill.

He said that the Aldermen's establishment of a committee to seek voluntary desegregation of businesses still refusing to serve Negroes was "another stall and delay."

Farmer declined to specify what kind of actiivty he had in mind, but explained that CORE would provide local demonstrators with whatever was needed.

Local integration leaders here yesterday declined to comment on Sanford's statement.

"Because of this very progress," Sanford added, "the officials are now threatened. Because there are a few holdouts who obviously do not reflect the community attitude, Chapel Hill is to be made the center of attention. Because they might decline to pass an ordinance to the exact liking of a particular organization, the entire community is to be subjected to possible violence."

He said "It is unthinkable that government be run in this manner."

After the news conference Sanford said, "The situation sets a bad example for the rest of the State since it sees that greater progress leads to more unreasonable demands." He indicated Chapel Hill was picked as a CORE target because its name is known around the country and its more advanced position brings greater demands.

Sanford told newsmen "this is not the way of American government, and it is certainly not the way we conduct government in North Carolina."

Sanford said he had "in many ways tried to improve the opportunities of our Negro citizens and to lift the burdens of prejudice and oppression.

"I shall continue to do so because I believe this is right," he concluded.

Mike Cooke Battles For Rebound With State's Hal Blondeau

First Big Four Win

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Billy Cunningham and Company sparred with North Carolina State for 34 minutes Wednesday night. Then The Kid delivered 14 straight lefts which put the Wolfpack on the canvas and gave UNC its first Big Four win of the season, 79-71.

Cunningham, who had been contained in the first half (three field goals) and much of the second by a box-and-one zone, exploded when UNC needed it most and personally sent the Tar Heels from a 62-61 lead with 6:13 to go into a 76-65 margin five minutes later. His 14 straight-point performance was scored as a TKO. Billy had 27 total and 16 rebounds for the game.

The hated Wolfpack had bounded back from a 15-point deficit (46-31) late in the first half to trail 47-39 at the intermission, then had cut it to two with more than nine minutes remaining in the game when Larry Lakins put in a layup.

But Lakins, who scored a remarkable 24 points in the first half to keep State in the game, got only one basket from there on, and his mates could not stop Cunningham down the stretch. That was the story.

From 60-58, Bryan McSweeney got two fouls for a four-point lead. The pack cut it even closer on a foul and a steal by Tommy Mattocks (62-61), but Mattocks' theft (out of Cuningham's hands) angered Billy, and he spurted for six straight.

Cunningham then matched Ray Hodgdon a basket and Lakins another one, before (from 72-65) he got a layup and two free throws for the big (12 point) lead and the ball game.

Lakins, a one-man gang in the opening 20 minutes, was held to two baskets in the second half by the fine defensive job of McSweeney.

Bryan, promoted to a starting spot after a strong job against Maryland, was even better last night. He got 12 points and eight rebounds in addition to the defensive work on the Pack's big Marine.

UNC, winning its eighth against four defeats, was outshot by State 42 to 40 in the percentages, but there was a big rebound edge to the Tar Heels (46–34) and they had four men in double figures to the Wolfpack's two.

Ray Respess got 16 (and 11 rebounds) and Charlie Shaffer 13 for UNC.

An Editorial

Injurious Threats

Gov. Terry Sanford made a forceful statement on the Town's racial situation yesterday, and we agree with much of it. But we cannot escape the haunting feeling that it was unnecessary and may serve only to aggravate our condition.

Certainly government cannot be conducted under coercion. Certainly James Farmer's ultimatum amounted to an intemperate threat. Certainly massive demonstrations would seem to go beyond education and conscience-prodding, and they might indeed invite violence, and therefore deserve denouncing.

But Gov. Sanford's statement serves only to legitimize Farmer's threat and to challenge CORE's stature. This in turn could easily be interpreted as a challenge to the civil rights movement itself, and now it would not be surprising to see several civil rights groups on the scene in force come February 1, instead of CORE alone. This challenge also makes it almost impossible for Farmer to temper his ultimatum.

So again we ask: Where do we go from here?

An honorable compromise is available—and at the local level, without Farmer or the Governor. All that is necessary is that Alderman Roland Giduz agree to Alderman Paul Wager's suggestion last Monday night that some target date be picked by which the new mediation committee report to the Aldermen on its success in persuading hold-out businesses to voluntarily desegregate. Also, the Aldermen could effect Alderman Adelaide Walters' motion that the Town Attorney draw up a public accommodations ordinance, so that one is ready to be voted on if the new mediation committee proves ineffective and recommends such an ordinance be passed.

Either or both of these actions would constitute evidence of the Aldermen's good faith, and we feel certain they would result in local civil rights leaders calling a moratorium on demonstrations while the committee is at work.

The honor of neither the Aldermen nor the civil rights leaders would be impugned by doing these two things, and the town could at least temporarily avoid any further disturbances.

And that would at least be a strong step in the right direction.

Mayor Of Chapel Hill: The Man In The Middle

By HUGH STEVENS

Mayor Sandy McClamroch of Chapel Hill doesn't see much of the inside of his office these days.

His office is located at WCHL, Chapel Hill's only commercial radio station, which McClamroch owns. But recent developments in the Chapel Hill racial situation have kept the mayor away from the world of records and microphones. He is spending most of his time making preparations for the special committee set up this week by the Board of Aldermen in an attempt to iron out discrimination problems voluntarily.

"The committee will have eight members—two each from the Merchants Association, the Chamber of Commerce, the Ministerial Association, and the UNC faculty," McClamroch said.

"The committee is still in the process of being formed," he said. "It will probably not be functioning for about a week, or perhaps a little longer. When we do begin operating, our goal will be to bring about the orderly breakdown of the remaining segregation barriers."

Asked about the statement by CORE's national leader, James Farmer, which promised intensified racial demonstrations if Chapel Hill is not "an open city" by Feb. 1, McClamroch replied that the ultimatum was not being considered.

"We intend to move at our own rate," he said. "I doubt that these outside interests are going to be satisfied with anything short of a public accommodations law, and I don't think that is the best thing for Chapel Hill at this time."

McClamroch indicated that Governor Sanford's statement on the local situation would likely lessen the worries of local merchants and "add to the morale of the police."

"A lot of people are worried about the possibility of outsiders moving in," he said. "I should think that the Governor's message will relieve some of their anxiety. Up until now, the sit-ins have not affected too many people directly, and we really don't know what to expect from this ultimatum."

The mayor said that the best thing Chapel Hill citizens can do is "get down to some common sense" on the matter.

"Most people in the state feel that Chapel Hill has done a good job in dealing with the racial problem. We need the respect of people throughout the state—they must realize that we have an unusual situation, but progress takes time."

McClamroch said he thinks Chapel Hill is better equipped to meet with CORE's ultimatum than most other towns.

"It is not only the attitude that prevails here," he said. "We also have an outstanding police force to handle any trouble. I think the police have done an excellent job in dealing with the recent wave of demonstrations."

He admitted that he did not know whether Governor Sanford's promise to use "all his resources" to support town officials would help to modify the actions of 'outsiders.'

"I hope so, though," he said. "We've been fortunate so far in that the outsiders have stayed away. I think that they are being unfair to the town in their attitude now."

Meanwhile, he said, the committee will continue its work, talking with the holdout proprietors in an attempt to resolve the complicated racial question without demonstrations or a public accommodations law.

"We're going to do our best to settle this situation," the Mayor concluded. "I know we won't have what the CORE leaders want by Feb. 1. But I am confident that the people of Chapel Hill will be able to meet the situation satisfactorily."

Goodbye!

(And Good Riddance)

"By God, it's over" Wayne King uttered his last public statement to the daily workers of the Daily Tar Heel yesterday and left them in a flood of tears, misery, uncertainty and empty beer cans as he bade farewell to the organization he has served for more than 71 years of editorial freedom.

The Legend of Wayne King is vast. It is hidden behind year upon year of nine hour semesters. But Wayne will graduate in January. He is gone.

Although tales float around that Wayne is really only a few years older than those who man the staff now, no one believes that the durable beer editor is that young.

When we came to the DTH, he was here. He has always been here, along with his famous quote, "Go to hell."

King, editor of the Daily Tar Heel for the school year 1961-62, has since been managing editor, news editor, copy editor, desk editor, Muslim editor, garbage editor and athletic supporter.

Now he is gone. And in the famous words of King himself, "That's finished, Thank God."

Frosh Win, 76-74

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina's streaking Tar Babies overcame a three-point deficit in the last two minutes Wednesday night, defeating N. C. State for their 5th straight win, 76-74. And once again it was "Magician" Bobby Lewis who pulled the rabbit out of the hat and put the game in the bag. Last night he performed his best trick from the foul line.

With the Wolflets ahead, 74-71, as a result of a three-point play by their fine guard. Eddie Biedenbach, UNC's Tom Gaunlett missed a free throw, but Lewis came down with the rebound. He also came down with State's John Sellers on his back.

Only 1:48 remained as Lewis, who had 30 points for the night, hit on both shots to cut the Wolflet margin to one. An offensive foul on State gave UNC possession moments later and with 1:19 on the clock, Lewis drew another foul.

Once again the Washington, D. C. product was the cool man in a hot spot. He sank the first, then the second, and Carolina led, 75-74.

Ian Morrison, who had 22 points, stole the ball immediately and the Tar Babies went into a deep freeze which ended with 17 seconds left in the game—Lewis again getting fouled. He made the first, missed the second, and State grabbed the ball. But a final shot was off. Lewis rebounded and was fouled with one second left. That he missed this time mattered not one bit.

Trustees Will Hold Special Session Here

The Executive Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees will meet here in special session Monday. The agenda of the meeting will not be released beforehand, but it is expected that recent proposals by the N. C. State Alumni will be discussed.

The proposals, made public last Sunday, two days after the Executive Committee met in Raleigh, would break up the Consolidated University and make each of UNC's three branches autonomous.

The next meeting of the Executive Committee was scheduled March 13. Consolidated University President William C. Friday was out of town and could not be reached for comment on the agenda of the meeting.

At his news conference yesterday, Gov. Terry Sanford said he thought the name-change matter had been settled by the 1963 General Assembly.

Sanford added that he hoped the matter stayed decided for a while.

Council Hears Plagiarism, Lying Cases

A freshman was sentenced to two semesters probation for plagiarism and four seniors were found guilty of a lying charge in Men's Council trials Tuesday night.

The trials were the last ones before the exam period. The Council will try all exam cases on the last day of exams.

The freshman pleaded guilty to copying his book report. He told the Council he was under a heavy work load at the time and did not connect his action with the Honor Code.

His professor recommended leniency and he received the probation sentence. Normally, serious Honor Code violations receive a sentence of suspension.

In the other case, four seniors were charged with lying when they wrote their laboratory reports without doing the necessary experiments.

The defendants entered no plea. They said they had not intended to deceive anyone, but had turned in the reports to show they could do the calculations.

The Council found them not guilty.

Jesse Says No—The Editors Say Yes

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Today a copy of your November 19, 1963, issue reached me and, for the first time, I had an opportunity to read your editorial headed "Major McLendon Goes To Washington."

There are two questions I would like to raise:

1. You stated flatly that ". . . WRAL-TV editorialist Jesse Helms (offered) to debate the merits of the Gag Law over WRAL-TV in prime time." Would you mind stating specifically when I made such an offer?

2. You stated flatly that Major L. P. McLendon "offered" to take me up on the above "offer". Would you mind stating when Major McLendon himself made any "offer" to either me or WRAL-TV?

I have never "offered" or suggested that I would or should debate with anybody on any subject. I did, however, offer—and I still do—prime television time for President Friday and/or Chancellor Aycock to debate the Communist-ban law with any of the individuals responsible for its enactment.

I have never in any way, contrary to your implications, suggested to you that Major McLendon is not a "responsible" citizen. I do say—and I say to you now—Major McLendon's views on the Communist-ban law are of no particular interest or importance to the general public. The public wants to hear from Bill Friday and Bill Aycock. The public would, I think, delight in hearing them challenge, and be challenged by, elected state officials who do not share Friday's and Aycock's views in this matter.

This is what I tried to say to you—and I think I said it quite clearly—over and over again. But you did not want to hear. I would suggest to you that what you really sought was television publicity for yourselves. I did not think the public was interested in your antics and, while I try to have patience with youth, I do not feel inclined to be overwhelmed by its flippancies.

There is one factual thread in the fabric of your November 19 editorial: Major McLendon was indeed last year appointed as counsel for the special Senate sub-committee. The rest of your editorial was pure hokum, and what bothers me is the suspicion that you were aware of it at the time you wrote it.

I do not request that you publish this letter. That is up to you. However, if you elect to make any use of it whatsoever, I request that you publish it in its entirety.

Cordially,
Jesse Helms,
Vice President, WRAL-TV

Editors Note:

1. Mr. Helms offered to debate the merits of the Gag Law over WRAL-TV in prime time during a taped interview with local radio station WCHL on Oct. 6, 1963. WCHL informs the DTH that the tape still exisits.

2. Mr. Helms was informed by letter, dated Oct. 9, that Major L. P. McLendon of Greensboro was willing to accept the offer to debate. Major McLendon is a former mayor of Chapel Hill and ex-chairman of the State Board of Higher Education, and currently serves as chief counsel for the Senate investigation of the Bobby Baker case. Mr. Helms answered in a letter, dated Oct. 10, that he didn't feel the views of the Major would be of interest to WRAL viewers and he declined the offer. Mr. Helms' letter also still exists.

Battleships Don't Float When Cut In 3

In launching an unexpected effort to break up the Consolidated University, the State College Alumni Association is doing a great disservice to its own State College as well as to the Consolidated University and higher education in North Carolina. The three universities have been knit together for over thirty years and now enjoy a reputation for excellence that is equalled nowhere in the South. To now suggest that the fabric of consolidation be unravelled is, at best, ill-considered.

Consolidation gives the University a diversity of specialization which no single branch could possibly achieve and a unity of administration which avoids costly waste of money and time caused by duplication of efforts. The Consolidated University happens to represent a total which is greater than the sum of its parts, and should either the diversity or unity be lost, this greater sum would be lost.

But this is not the only argument against splitting the branches. It now seems that the issue the Alumni Association raised is destined to become a significant one in the Democratic primary this spring, and probably in the gubernatorial election in the fall. Sadly enough, politics has already played havoc with us in the last legislative session, and we would just as soon not become a bean bag in the coming elections. It can do us no good, and could do us great harm.

Then there is the question of finances. The University must go to the legislature each biennium for funds, and if the University was split, each branch would have to go with hat in hand and compete for the money. And how would the legislature dole it out? On the grounds of need, or on the grounds of which branch had fewer faculty members demonstrating, or which branch had more graduates in the legislature? We can't really answer that one, but we have some good hints form past experience.

In short, the Consolidated University has worked smoothly and risen to eminence. Why change it?

Role Of SG Gets A New Look

The new year seems to be off to a good start as far as relations between Student Government and the faculty and Administration are concerned.

The Faculty Council has voted, at the request of Student Body President Mike Lawler and the Student Legislature, to form two committees to discuss Student Government grievances.

The first committee will be composed of faculty alone and will go over the very ambiguous appeals procedures of the newly created Faculty Review Board. Students were never consulted when the Review Board was formed and they would now like to give the committee opinions on how it can operate most fairly.

The second committee will be made up of students and faculty, including Lawler and Vice-President Bob Spearman. It will try to draft a statement on the specific relationship between Student Government and the University.

As it now stands, this relationship is a vague mixture of tradition and actual, written codes of administration. Student Government leaders felt that the ground was being cut out from under them when the Student-Faculty Review Board, a part of the Student Constitution, was summarily abolished by the faculty earlier this fall.

Certainly the Administration and faculty have the authority to do whatever they please at any time. But a certain amount of the governing processes has been delegated to the students over the years. To preserve any degree of trust in this governing partnership, the University must be fairly consistent about the authority it has delegated to students and that which it has kept for itself.

Misunderstandings over this relationship have caused many student administrations to bog down in past years.

If Lawler's efforts result in a workable definition of this relationship, then his administration will have been most successful indeed.

Goldwater Off And Running, But In Which Direction?

By Curry Kirkpatrick

Barry Goldwater is off and running—directly toward a resounding defeat which may mean his eventual demise from the main stream of United States politics.

In announcing his decision, the Arizona Senator said he wanted to give the American people a "clear choice" in the 1964 election. No one could possibly argue with that. No other GOP prospect would make the choice nearly as clear for no other candidate has been so sharply at odds with the whole direction of U.S. foreign and domestic policy for the last 30 years.

Does Goldwater honestly believe that, if the choice is a clear one, it will fall on him? That it will fall on anyone as far away from the essential American political thought as he has been for a decade? That it will fall on anyone who advocated the following, all since 1960:

* The removal of the United States from the United Nations. ("I have come to the reluctant conclusion that the United States no longer has a place in the United Nations.")

* The withdrawal of U.S. recognition of Russia. ("We should withdraw diplomatic relations with all Communist governments, including that of the Soviet Union.")

* The transferral of the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA) to private industry and ownership.

* The undertaking of military operations against vulnerable Communist regimes. ("We should invite the Communist leaders to choose between total destruction of the Soviet Union and accepting a local defeat.")

* An underlying approval of school segregation. ("I am firmly convinced not only that integrated schools are not required but that the Constitution does not permit any interference whatsoever by the federal government in the field of education . . . I don't believe the Supreme Court finding is the law of the land.")

* The cessation of this country's foreign aid program. ("One of the most important things for Congress to do is to stop foreign economic aid.")

True, Goldwater has modified or contradicted these statements many times since he voiced them, but this only increases our concern rather than reassuring us. The Senator has been careless in his thought and in his speech. His position has been one of wavering and inconsistency—a position that would ill become the leader of a tense nation in a tense world in the nuclear age.

Goldwater apparently thinks he can convince the American people his ways are best. Admittedly, some of our people would not have to be convinced—they would approve these statements, unmodified and uncontradicted. But our political history of the last 30 years is evidence that most Americans would not.

Goldwater's swiftly-changing positions are further noted by his announcement that he will seek the office of president and senator at the same time. A few months ago, he said he would not.

In 1960, when Lyndon Johnson ran for the office of vice president and senator at the same time, Goldwater called him "the slickest political trickster of our time" and accused him of a "lack of courage to stand up and fight for one office."

More recently, Goldwater has been quoted as saying "after what I said about Lyndon, they'd run me out of the country if I went for both offices. If I hadn't opened my mouth so loud, I might have done it."

In the months ahead Goldwater may be able to explain away many of the things he has said and done. But the qualities that make him a "clear choice" for the voters are the same ones which have distinguished him as an extremist in their minds all along.

Republicans court political disaster when they court Barry Goldwater as a nominee in 1964. We hope they have the wisdom to reject him. If they don't, and he should get the nomination, then the nation undoubtedly will do so for them.

Examinations!!

(From The Duke Chronicle)

We have always been impressed by the tremendous amount of thought and planning which goes into the preparation of each final examination on the part of each professor. We understand these men are busy and that every moment spent in preparing an exam could be devoted to the "Publish or Perish" war. So, the Chronicle has decided to allow each professor more time to devote to war and other extracurriculars by publishing our own final examination, which may be used in every course. At the request of any faculty member answers will be provided.

FINAL EXAMINATION
January, 1964

1. Identify:
   a. The effects of LSD
   b. "Perfidious Albion"
   c. God
   d. Kerouac and Origin of the Species
   e. The use of onomatopoeia

Answer any three of the following, including 2, 3, 4 and 5

2. Discuss the effect of last year's Ecumenical Council on the prevalence of the Gregorian chant as an art form in Latin America.
3. Compare and contrast Cauchy's theorem and the complete works of Sigmund Freud. (Be sure and mention in your analysis the use of the minimax principle.)
4. Assume you are God and the year is 1674. What would you do with world? Be explicit.

A Letter From The Right

Miss Joan Baez
Palo Alto, Calif.

Although I'm sure you don't remember me, I had the pleasure of interviewing you once in the lobby of the Carolina Inn. I didn't know much about you that day, only that, like a great many college students, I was impressed with your records. I especially liked the way you sang "country" songs without making fun of them. Like a lot of North Carolina people, I was raised to appreciate that kind of music.

I was greatly struck by your, I can't say beauty, but a certain grace and charm and unaffectedness which you had. You could say "ain't" with more femininity than Elizabeth Taylor could muster in five hours of Cleopatra.

You told me you had stayed at Earl Scruggs' home (the great banjo-picker from Shelby, N. C.) and thought he and his wife and children were the finest people you'd ever met.

I was impressed with your personality and your views about music. You said you were glad to meet us, that college reporters usually asked you nasty questions like "Why have you gone commercial?" I took it you were pleased with our Tar Heel politeness.

When you came down the walk as they were rushing you off and told us again that you enjoyed talking to us and to come back after the performance that night, I confess I was almost walking on air. I am ashamed to admit I wrote an interview for the Daily Tar Heel that was almost a press release.

From things you said I got the impression that you were not really a part of the beatnik pseudo-intellectuals who made you their idol, you were bored with them and above them.

Later when a folk singer on campus said that you used a captive audience to spread your political views, I defended you in print and said that you were an individualist with strong ideas and not really a propagandist. That's what I believed then, that you were an individualist.

Since then I've found out a lot more about you. There was the article in "Time" but of course you can't believe everything you read in "Time." I discovered that you had taken to running around with the kind of people known as "peace-marchers."

When I went to hear you again last year at Durham, every other song you sang was propaganda. None of them seemed to be as pretty as your first two records, somehow.

But what I really wanted to tell you is this, to remember what you told me that day, that folk music is a precious heritage which shouldn't be commercialized.

Folk music should deal with the things that William Faulkner called the age-old verities of the human heart. When you try to pass off week-old half-truths of political dogma you dilute and cheapen your art, and your talent.

It is true that there is something wrong with the button-down, Madison Avenue, other-directed world most of us live in. But the goateed bomb-banner and the twisting "freedom-marcher" don't have the solution. They are just the sickest side of a sick world.

What we really need is to be brought back to the fundamentals of our pioneer past, to be reminded of the solid truths that we have forgotten.

That's a function folk music can perform and that's the reason so many people, I believe, are yearning towards it.

That's something that you have a great talent for, even if you don't intend it.

So what I want to tell you is —you're not helping the individual, as you think, you are just peddling a worse kind of conformity.

Fidel And Panama

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

Fidel Castro's sudden appearance in Moscow inevitably has led to speculation that his visit is connected with the United States-Panama crisis and the means to exploit it for communism.

But it could well be that other reasons dictated the trip and that Panama will come into the talks only as an added starter.

It may be recalled that Castro's last visit to Moscow, in April, aslo came as a surprise and then, as now, came shortly after agreement on Soviet Cuban trade for the coming year.

One Soviet objective was to assure Castro's loyalty in the quarrel with Red China.

Another was to discourage Castro's ambition for quick industrialization of his island at the expense of agriculture.

From the Soviet standpoint, the visit was only partially successful.

In August, Castro announced that sugar cane and cattle raising will be "the pillars of our economy until 1970," indicating that he had agreed to Soviet demands that he integrate his economy with the Communist bloc.

So far as Khrushchev's quarrel with Red China was concerned, Castro has continued to practice a peculiar neutrality which recognized dependence on the Soviet Union on the one hand but more frequently sounded the Red Chinese hard-line than the Khrushchev policy of coexistence.

From the beginning, trade with Cuba has been a losing proposition for the Soviets.

Their 1962 agreement called for an exchange totalling $750 million but actually came to only a little more than $500 million.

Cuba is committed to sell the Soviet Union and the Communist bloc countries 4.860 million tons of sugar annually through 1965. She failed to meet her 1962 quota and fell short by at least half of the agreed amount in 1963.

Tom Huck sought scientific excitement

He's finding it at Western Electric

Ohio University conferred a B.S.E.E. degree on C. T. Huck in 1956. Tom knew of Western Electric's history of manufacturing development. He realized, too, that our personnel development program was expanding to meet tomorrow's demands.

After graduation, Tom immediately began to work on the development of electronic switching systems. Then, in 1958, Tom went to the Bell Telephone Laboratories on a temporary assignment to help in the advancement of our national military capabilities. At their Whippany, New Jersey, labs, Tom worked with the Western Electric development team on computer circuitry for the Nike Zeus guidance system. Tom then moved on to a new assignment at WE's Columbus, Ohio, Works. There, Tom is working on the development of testing circuitry for the memory phase of electronic switching systems.

This constant challenge of the totally new, combined with advanced training and education opportunities, make a Western Electric career enjoyable, stimulating and fruitful. Thousands of young men will realize this in the next few years. How about you?

If responsibility and the challenge of the future appeal to you, and you have the qualifications we seek, talk with us. Opportunities for fast-moving careers exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and also for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more detailed information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. # East Carolina Here Tonight In Big Test For Swimmers

By PERRY McCARTY

East Carolina Coach Ray Martinez and 12 of the area's finest swimmers invade Bowman Gray Pool tonight with high hopes of smashing UNC's hopes for a perfect season. Coach Earey and his Dolphins are equally determined to remain unbeaten. Undoubtedly, tonight's contest is the best test for the tankers since eastern powers Princeton and Navy.

At first glance, it appears odd for UNC's proven team to rate the natators from Greenville so highly. A bit of prying reveals this respect entirely justified. First, three years ago, ECC won the National Collegiate small college swimming championships. Since freshmen are abel to compete at the varsity level, some of these team members of three years ago return as seniors this year.

Then, too, several transfer students of outstanding ability have appeared at ECC—notably Tom Shanabrough from Army, a crack butterflier. Martinez's returning nucleus plus these transfer students make ECC a substantial threat to Carolina's perfect 8-0 slate.

UNC's Dolphins defeated a good ECC team twice last year by healthy margins—58-37 and 64-34. Martinez and crew are yet to taste victory at the expense of the Heels. Heralds from Greenville proclaim this as the year.

The meet promises to provide a number of exciting individual races. Fred Lipp will give the previously mentioned Shanabrough a run for the money in the 200 butterfly. Vic Morasco and Rick Forum have almost identical times in the 200 breast stroke.

Jim Donahoe is an outstanding diiver for ECC, possibly the best in the area. UNC's Dave Moody and Earnie Oare will get their first taste of three meter competition tonight. In the eight meets to date, all diving has been from the low board. Freestylers Dave Sober and Jerry Hughes, and backstroker Guy Norwood, a Chapel Hill product, are other top notch swimmers for ECC.

It is precicely in this type meet that the likes of Thompson Mann, Harrison Merrill, John Sheldon, Fred Lipp, and Davis Roberts prove their immense team value and extreme versatility. Mann and Merrill can literally swim any of the eight individual swimming events plus anchor either relay. Collegiate rules allow a single man to enter a maximum of three events which may include one or both of the relay events. Freestylers Sheldon and Roberts have grand strength and endurance and are effective in both long and short distances. Lipp is a valuable relay man and unbeaten in his speciality, the butterfly.

School record holder at the 50 yard freestyle, Chip Smith along with co-captain Mike Bissell, Joe Lea and Dick Boardman should supply valuable points to the Dolphin cause.

GOODBYE WAYNE

Time and the inevitable finally caught up with Robert "Hub" Rosenbacher, after many years of asserting his individuality. Twenty-nine years of middle of the road living took its toll on the affable Chapel Hill harberdasher. He purged himself against the bachelorhood of the nation. It took a lovelassie, however, and it proved the stark truth that you're never safe. Relax just once and snap!—never the less—the best of luck to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rosenbacher. Congratulations, the Daily Tar Heel.

FREE SHIRT FOR YOUR IDEA

When Published in the DTH

Have any ideas on clothes and styles or any suggestions to offer a new clothing store just beginning?

Sure you have—and it's no use to get any complexes or to become neurotic or psychotic about keeping them to yourself.

We will publish your ideas and suggestions in the D.T.H. and will give you a shirt—any shirt in our complete line to choose from—just for your taking time out to drop us a post card with your name, address, and, of course, your suggestion.

Since the DTH wil stop publication Thursday, we are stopping our contest until publication begins again. But after exams are over, we will begin our contest again. And it should be much better, too.

By that time we should have about 10,000 more shirts to choose from. We think our spring line is exceptional in good taste and quality, and of course, we have added more nationally known names to our store.

Humphrey, Farmer Head Forum Slate For Spring

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Senator Hubert Humphrey, liberal Democrat from Minnesota, and integration leader James Farmer are among those scheduled to speak in Chapel Hill this spring for the Carolina Forum.

Forum officials said difficulty had arisen in scheduling all of the speakers who have accepted, as most wish to speak in April.

Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, is supporting and helping direct civil rights demonstrations in Chapel Hill.

Forum Chairman John Ulfelder said newspaper columnist Drew Pearson and H. Stuart Hughes, pacifist history professor at Harvard University, have also expressed their desire to speak at the University this spring.

Ulfelder said the Forum is working with the Young Republican Club in trying to secure GOP nomination hopeful Barry Goldwater for a speaking engagement on Feb. 28. Goldwater will be in North Carolina Feb. 28-29 for the North Carolina Republican convention.

YRC official Gary Lowe said that because of Sen. Goldwater's light schedule and security difficulties, the possibility of his appearing here is slim.

YALE LAW INTERVIEWS

A representative of the Yale Law School will hold interviews for Yale's Law department Wednesday. Applicants should contact Anne Queen, 942-1212 or 933-2333 to set up appointments. The interviews will be held in the office of the YWCA between 1 and 5 p.m.

College YRC Names Hooks

The College Council of North Carolina Young Republicans selected Charles Hooks, UNC junior, by acclamation as 1964 Chairman at the annual convention in Durham on January 31 and February 1.

Hooks, chairman of UNC's Young Republicans, was a member of the National Federation of Young Republicans Campaign Committee. He has served as mid-eastern liaison for the N. C. College Council and was convention chairman for the fall convention.

CHARLES HOOKS

He is Republican speaker's chairman for the UNC Mock Political convention to be held in April.

Other officers of the College Council are Sally Raulston, vice-chairwoman, WUNCG; Jim Bancroft, Wake Forest, vice-chairman; George Heath, Duke, recording secretary; and Duke Jones, Campbell, treasurer.

Rinaldi Murder Still A Mystery To Investigators

Continued police investigation of the murder of Mrs. Lucille Rinaldi here on December 24 has produced no indications of who committed the crime.

Chapel Hill police detective Howard Pendergraph has been investigating the case with SBI agent Frank Satterfield almost daily since the first of the year. Pendergraph said investigation would continue as long as the case went unsolved, but that no new leads about Mrs. Rinaldi's death had been uncovered yet.

Mrs. Rinaldi, the wife of UNC graduate instructor Frank Rinaldi, was found dead of suffocation in Rinaldi's North Street apartment the day before Christmas.

Rinaldi was charged with murder but was released after Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Judge William Stewart found no probable cause in a preliminary hearing December 31.

"We've been investigating everything we can think of," said Detective Pendergraph. He explained "everything" as including "one to another and back and forth, everything we can come up with."

Between 10 and 15 people have been interviewed by the police, Pendergraph said. He would not name these people, but said they had been questioned in the hope that they could shed some light on the matter. Interviews continue, but "We still haven't come up with anything more than we had to begin with."

SBI lab analyses of bloodstons on a pair of trousers and a flashlight found in the Rinaldi apartment the day of the killing have not been completed. Pendergraph said he had received verbal, though unofficial word from Raleigh Friday that the blood found on the trousers was of type B. He could not say what this indicated, if anything, because he said he did not remember what the results of an autopsy on Mrs. Rinaldi's body revealed about her blood type.

Pendergraph also said he did not know whether enough evidence existed to warrant taking the case to a grand jury. He had yet to confer with District Solicitor Thomas Cooper about that, he said.

Heels Win 89-76

Free Throws Give UNC ACC Win

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Billy Cunningham's exciting passing was pretty much the whole show last night as an admittedly "ragged" North Carolina defeated Virginia, 89-76.

The final shooting statistics, which show the Tar Heels hitting 54.1 per cent from the field, do not accurately tell the story of the Carolina performance which was sluggish after a 16-day layoff.

Cunningham matched his average (26) point-wise, but it was his deadly passing to the open men under and around the basket and his fine defensive work on the Cavaliers' 6-10 Rich Katstra that kept the game out of the yawning stage. The UNC All-American also had 17 rebounds.

"We don't keep assists, but Billy had a passel out there tonight," said Coach Dean Smith after his team had won its third straight conference game. "His passing was tremendous—I'd say this was one of Cunningham's finest games here."

The Tar Heels, who are now in a three-way tie for the ACC's second place (with Maryland and South Carolina at 4-3), led 43-31 at the half and kept at least a nine-point bulge the rest of the game.

Virginia came to 50-41 when reserve Jerry Sanders put in a lay-up with about 15 minute remaining. But Smith sent UNC back into the man-for-man defense it had played most of the way, and the margin went to 15 as Cunningham converted a leaping move for a three-point play and his 20th point.

Chip Conner, who hit 19 points for the evening, brought the Cavaliers back on some sharp jumpshooting, and it was 63-53 with over ten minutes left. But Carolina scored eight straight to move it to 71-53 and sew up the SMASHING VICTORY?—What appears to be a well placed punch by UNC's Bryan McSweeney during last night's game with Virginia actually isn't. The action came as McSweeney passed the ball over the shoulder of a Cavalier defender during the first period. Carolina went on to win, 89-76.

WUNC Plans New Program On University

"This is Carolina," an interview program picturing the special services of the University available to the people of the State as a whole, as well as to the students, is one of several new series scheduled for WUNC radio.

The first program, an interview with John Sanders, director of the Institute of Government, will be aired at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Subsequent programs, scheduled for the same time each week, will show how the University serves the State through the News Bureau, Planetarium, Playmakers, Memorial Hospital, Research Administration, Communication Center, UNC Press and the Extension Division. James Wadsworth is the moderator.

UNC Debate Team Takes 11th Place

By BOT BOSMAS

Two UNC students are combining their efforts to make this year's debating team the winningest one in UNC history.

Arguing their way to 25 wins in a still young season, Haywood Clayton, senior, and Bob Powell, freshman, are only three wins away from the school record of 28 wins.

Three tournaments consisting of about 20 debates face the team before a try at the regional and, hopefully, the nationals.

Although debating teams have never successfully won their point for a national rating system, UNC stands eleventh in the society, which consists of 116 member teams.

Clayton may break an individual record this year as well, since he stands only two wins away from the UNC career record of 76.

According to Clayton, the success of the team depends on the toss of the coin, determining which side of the national topic the team will take.

The national topic for this year is: "The federal government should guarantee an opportunity for higher education to all qualified high school graduates."

Clayton says he has high hopes as far as getting into the regionals and thinks UNC has a good chance of winning a spot in the national finals to be held at West Point.

"We should win enough to break the record of last year," he said. "We hope to make 40, that's our goals. As far as the regionals go, I think there's a pretty good chance we'll go. We also have a good chance in the competition, but when we get to the nationals, if we do, it all depends on the flip of the coin."

Debate Team Battles Duke On Television

UNC will debate with three other colleges over WBT-FM and WBTV in Charlotte as part of the station' regular Sunday program, "Land of the Free."

Dr. Donald Springen, UNC debate coach and assistant professor of English, will coordinate the series.

Other participants include Duke, Wake Forest and Davidson.

The teams, consisting of two students and a coach from each school, will debate on subjects covered in the Foreign Policy Association's discussion series called "Great Decisions." Programs will be taped in advance.

UNC will debate with Duke on Feb. 9 on "Is World Communism an Increasing Danger?," with Davidson on February 23 on "Can Stability be Achieved in the Middle East?", with Wake Forest on March 8 on "Is Castro's Cuba a Serious Threat to the Americas?" and with Davidson on March 22 on "Is the Present Concept of Foreign Aid Outmoded?"

CORE Official Urges Negro Immolation

By FRED SEELY

A Negro integration leader threatened Sunday to burn himself in the streets on Easter Sunday if racial discrimination continues in Chapel Hill.

The Rev. B. Elton Cox of High Point, North Carolina field Secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), told a rally at the First Baptist Church he would burn himself and encouraged other Negroes to do the same.

"If I thought it would do any good," the Rev. Mr. Cox said, "I would come to Chapel Hill, talk to town leaders and university officials. That failing, I would burn myself.

"I have been contemplating doing it and am advocating that other Negroes do it," said the 32-year-old minister, adding that if Buddhists can burn themselves to embarrass officials in Saigon, Negroes can do it in this country.

"If these Negroes can don uniforms to fight for the United States in foreign countries, then they certainly ought to be able to give their lives for the basic right of human dignity," the Rev. Cox concluded, in qualifying his rally remarks for reporters.

In New York, James Farmer, national director of CORE, said, "I am sure that Rev. Cox was not seriously suggesting that Negroes in this country adopt the protest methods of Buddhists.

"If he was serious," Farmer said, "I am sure he was speaking only for himself and not for our organization."

Farmer said he had promised novel demonstrations in Chapel Hill, but added, "believe me this is not what I had in mind."

BULLETIN

Some 34 persons, including about 10 whites, were arrested last night after a sit-down in front of a segregated drugtore. Police charged the demonstrators with obstructing the sidewalk and resisting arrest after sitting down in front of the Colonial Drugstore on W. Franklin St. All had been denied entrance to the store..

Monday's arrests brought the total since protests resumed Dec. 13 to 436.

The Rev. Mr. Cox has been one of the most outspoken of all integration leaders and has led demonstrations in several cities and states.

After the rally, about 220 Negroes and whites marched silently through downtown Chapel Hill to the Post Office, then returned without incident.

Earlier, police said the proprietor of a segregated restaurant had been charged on two counts of assault and one count of forcible entry into the home of a white integrationist.

Police charged Austin Watts with assault and forcible entry after they said he forced his way into the home of Rosemary Ezra, 25, early Sunday and struck J. V. Henry, a white field worker for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

Watts, proprietor of Watts Motel and Restaurant, scene of several sit-in demonstrations since protests resumed Dec. 13, was released on $800 bond.

Miss Ezra recently staged a 15-day sit-in in the courtroom of the Town Hall, after the Board of Aldermen side-stepped a proposed public accommodations ordinance.

Police said Watts also was charged with assault for allegedly kicking a Negro, David L. Davis, when Watts attempted to enter the headquarters of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee later Sunday.

Integration leaders promised Chapel Hill would be the scene of novel demonstrations if town facilities were not desegregated completely by Feb. 1.

The novel demonstrations came in the form of street sitdowns Saturday. Twenty-two Negroes and whites were arrested.

Another 53 persons were arrested Saturday night when they staged sitdowns in front of two segregated businesses, Brady's and the Rock Pile.

A total of 39 demonstrators, including seven whites, were arrested Sunday night at Brady's Restaurant where they sat three-deep on the establishment's front steps, blocking the front door.

REV. B. ELTON COX, a fiery integration leader from High Point, told a church rally here Sunday afternoon he was thinking about burning himself in Chapel Hill if racial discrimination continues. He urged other Negroes to consider doing the same and said "Chapel Hill is as good a place as any to start."

UNC Won't Push Town Integration

Chancellor William B. Aycock, backed by President William C. Friday, has turned down requests from integrationists that the University use its economic power to speed integration in local businesses.

At an executive meeting of the UNC Faculty Council last month, Chancellor Aycock made the following remarks:

"The Agenda Committee of the Council requested my comments on the policy of the University with regard to public accommodations. As you know, arrangements for official functions are made by groups or individuals within the faculty, student body, and the administration. No effort has been made to bring these functions under centralized control. However, we encourage the use of facilities owned by the University. This encouragement grows primarily from the fact that it is usually more economical to use University facilities. Also, inasmuch as all eating facilities operated by the University are fully integrated, we encounter no problem in this area.

"Occasionally, it is necessary to utilize facilities in Chapel Hill not owned by the University. Such facilities may or may not be integrated. The policy of the University is to avoid making any arrangement for public accommodations which would result in discrimination against Univer-

Language Lab Improves Grades

By MARGARET LANEY

New laboratory facilities in the William M. Dey Building have updated foreign language study at the University.

The laboratory, occupying most of the eastern side of first floor Dey, was installed this past August after several years of committee work. It was dedicated in September.

Anthony G. LoRe, director of the foreign language laboratory, describes the new laboratory arrangement as "a complex of laboratories with different rooms for different purposes."

The laboratory consists of three distinct systems: the automatic (audio-active) system, which functions from a central control the "audio-passive" system, which is manually operated by lab attendants; and the "phonetics" system, which is manually operated by the individual student.

The basis for the automatic system is Chester-Dialog Equipment, which provides telephone switching apparatus and programming for 85 student dial positions.

Students recite into microphones and hear their voices electrically through earphones. The equipment gives the student a high degree of fidelity, and he has only earphone and volume control to worry about.

Console are used in two of the laboratories for supervised lab work.

These instruments are an invaluable teaching aid, for the instructor is able to communicate either collectively or individually with his students. He can also "dial" programs for his class through the console.

Three extra classrooms are connected to this automatic system by means of dials and speakers. Professors may dial programs on the regular schedule or special demand other items for classroom use.

The audio-passive system is used for listening only. This laboratory is generally used by students who wish to listen to taped material not available on the automatic system.

"But the heart of all three systems," LoRe said, "is the switching room and the recording room."

The switching room is the center of machine control, while the recording room is used for preparing programmed tapes.

All tapes used for lab work are either live-recorded in two soundproof studios or taped.

"We re-record even commercial programs for our equipment," LoRe said. "We always use native speakers for conversational dialogues."

But just what has been the influence of all this new and modern laboratory equipment on actual language teaching methods here at the University?

"The student leans on the lab," LoRe said. "The lab serves as a teacher, brings him native speakers, and allows him more practice.

"Laboratory work is a definite aid to foreign language study. There is a direct positive correlation between language proficiency and conscientious lab attendance."

The new lab facilities have made possible further work with the audio-lingual method of language instruction.

"The audio-lingual method places emphasis on speaking and understanding a language above reading and writing," said LoRe.

A post-World War II development, the audio-lingual technique gained national momentum when Congress passed the National Defense Education Act (NDEA). More emphasis was then placed on foreign languages as well as in other areas of study.

The UNC Department of Romance Languages has been using a simple audio-lingual text prepared by the Modern Language Association (MLA) for beginning Spanish for the last three years.

"In using this text," LoRe said, "the student first studies his lesson and then practices it aloud. The most important feature of the method is oral practice."

The MLA has also developed 24 films to accompany the dialogue lessons of this text. LoRe feels that these films are very helpful, because the student is able to visualize the dialogue he is memorizing.

Lab emphasis is currently being placed on first-year work in French and Spanish. There are now 53 sections of 1 and 3x in these two languages, but LoRe estimate that by fall 1964 there will be 90 sections of Spanish, French, German, Italian, and Russian attending supervised lab.

The more advanced language student spends less time in the supervised lab situation, but the tape library provides innumerable tapes in literature, language, music, and civilization for his enrichment.

In addition to its function as a teaching and learning center, the lab serves as a testing service. Lab facilities have been used in recent years by NDEA Institute Programs and the Peace Corps.

The lab may be new, but its director is already looking to the future.

"We never stop our looking for changes," LoRe said, "We are constantly learning."

He himself established in 1951 one of the country's first language laboratories in the rear of a Delano, Calif., high school classroom.

Dey Hall has been wired for television in anticipation of even more advanced methods in language teaching to be used in the future.

Other laboratory personnel are Mrs. Martha Cleveland, secretary; Mrs. Donna Darden and Mrs. Jean Rose, office assistants; Ronald Grieve, chief technician; Charles Hooks and John Palmer, technician - attendants; and Gail S. Troxler, Judith McFalls, Ronna Abbot and Diana Foote, attendants.

Shifting The Onus Of 'Gradualism'

Since we stopped publishing two weeks ago during final exams, the civil rights situation in Chapel Hill has deteriorated considerably. Resentment is bubbling in all directions and there have been several incidents of violence.

Thanks to the cool-headed efforts of Police Chief William D. Blake and his firm police force, however, there appears to be little likelihood that things will get seriously out of hand. Chief Blake has made it clear he and his men will countenance no incidents from anyone, and for this he deserves the sincere gratitude of everyone.

Students, as well as townspeople and others, who think it might be cute to heckle or harass demonstrators, should remember this. If it has nothing else, Chapel Hill has an integrated jail.

Now what about the situation? Where is all of this protest and resentment leading?

That's the million-dollar question. From here, things look rather bleak, and chances for any sort of honorable solution to our situation appear slim indeed. The civil rights demonstrators are not about to cease dramatizing their desire for an end to segregation in Chapel Hill; the Board of Aldermen is no more likely to pass a public accommodations ordinance now than it was before demonstrations began.

One fact needs to be reported, however. It is that the civil rights movement here is gaining grass-roots strength among local, older Negroes. This appears to be related to the fact that demonstration leaders are begining to move into the areas of employment and housing discrimination, which are infinitely more important to Negro parents than being able to eat where they wish to.

Our own position remains the same as it has been. We subscribe to the ends of the demonstrators and we appreciate the fact that there has been little progress towards racial equality without prodding from demonstrators. We challenge the basic premise of many whites who sincerely believe in the cause of equality but think "gradualism" is the only way to achieve it. For their basic premise is that the Negro must bear the onus of "gradualism," not the recalcitrant white. We think it is about time that the owners of Chapel Hill's few remaining segregated businesses bear this onus—that they get used to the idea of serving all on an equal basis, rather than requiring the Negro to wait until they are ready to serve him. This goes for the areas of employment, education and housing as well.

We think it is a position deserving of neither praise nor condemnation. It is the only honorable course open to us all as Americans and as human beings. The sooner we recognize this and act accordingly, the sooner will demonstrations here and elsewhere be unnecessary.

A Significant New Mood Of Desperation

The Rev. Mr. B. Elton Cox, a militant integration leader from High Point, N. C., has raised the ghastly spectre of the possibility of self-immolation in Chapel Hill. Speaking at the First Baptist Church Sunday afternoon, Cox told about 250 whites and Negroes that he is considering burning himself, and suggested other Negroes do the same.

"If these Negroes can don uniforms to fight for the United States in foreign countries, then they certainly ought to be able to give their lives for the basic right of human dignity in their homeland," he said.

Cox has brought to light a prospect too hideous to imagine, but one that would surely generate reactions on both sides that would be unparalleled by the demonstrations to date. But what would be the effect of this threat if it were carried out? We have serious doubts that the phoenix of understanding and racial equality would arise from these flames, but rather the opposite might well occur. We might find the Barnetts and Wallaces warming their hands over the fire as the United States is unfairly embarrassed over a problem that most people are conscientiously trying to solve.

Cox says he is advocating others to do the same thing. This is grossly irresponsible and unfair on his part. If the Rev. Mr. Cox decides against self-immolation, but reaches others sufficiently dedicated and sufficiently unbalanced to burn themselves, their death would be on his hands. We doubt Cox really wants that burden to carry.

But the fact that we must, at least emotionally, feel the prospect of a self-immolation to be remote should not hide from us what we must learn from what Cox said. It provides a shocking insight into the Negroes' deep-seated frustration and the means to which he could go in venting this frustration. It also provides stark insight into the growing bitterness of many Negroes over the white man's never-ending counsels of "patience."

It is obvious we had best take note of this new note of desperation, and take note quickly.

Letters To The Editor

A Graduate Looks Back At UNC

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Since my graduation from the University in February of 1961, I have done my best to keep abreast of the University, its problems and accomplishments. Certainly, those of you who are students now have been witness and/or participant to many events. Since 1961, UNC has been frequented by crisis, conflict and excitement of several kinds.

My subscription to The Daily Tar Heel has enabled me to keep up with these events. The Gag Law (and along with it the charge by some North Carolinians that Chapel Hill is infested with Communism), the racial demonstrations that have just recently encountered such baseness, the apartment rule last spring and the accompanying implication that the faculty and administration are removing some of the student autonomy, the "anti-fraternity movement," Otelia Conner, and the great UNC victory in the 1963 Gator Bowl, to name a few.

The Gag Law, to be sure, handcuffs us all—the state, the nation, and, of course, the University and its inherent right to impart the truth. Chancellor William B. Aycock has been infinitely bold and courageous on our behalf. He has fought and is fighting like a champion to rid the school of such a handicap. This handicap is now spelled out in capitals with the realization that it is delaying if not preventing the American Physical Society from meeting here in 1965.

That Chapel Hill is infested with Communism is also a misdirected charge. Most any town that houses and is dependent upon a genuine university must reflect the somewhat liberal attitudes of that university. Whenever there is real freedom there will be extremism, both right and left, to some degree. More rigid controls over such liberties usually serve as a catalyst, increasing such extremism.

Since the late '50's there have been civil rights demonstrations in Chapel Hill. When I was a student most attempts were directed to the desegregation of the local theatres. These demonstrations were orderly and peaceful. Today they seem to be of a different personality, perhaps because the places that are not desegregated have held out so adamantly since this all began. Thus, they are the most determined not to desegregate. On the other hand, CORE and NAACP seem to be strongly organized in Chapel Hill now, and they are just as adamant in wanting to achieve equal rights for all. Certainly this is a worthy objective and we should all strive for it. But, let us not be intolerant and let us not be caught in the emotional frenzy which sometimes accompanies self-righteousness. Our adversaries have given us the example of how not to behave.

I wish to congratulate those of you who have fought for student autonomy. Certainly, it is one of UNC's virtues and bulwarks of strength as a University. For years the University administration has prided itself on the very fact that it has encouraged student autonomy and that it has complemented the well-being of the academic atmosphere. To allow the administration to remove these student powers would result in a genuine loss to the students as well as an atmosphere of hypocrisy.

During the past few years the UNC fraternities have faced severe criticism—from the DTH staff, students, and occasionally, the faculty. Obviously, any worthwhile system or organization can stand criticism and constructive criticism can be helpful.

I feel that I can speak with some authority on fraternities as I was initiated at Miami University of Ohio (generally considered the "Mother of Fraternities" as Beta Theta Pi, Phi Delta and Sigma Chi were all founded there) and transferred my membership to a UNC fraternity. During my experiences as Secretary of the IFC at Chapel Hill, I came face to face with many of the current problems.

Sure, there is discrimination within the fraternities. I personally fought this issue in my own house as we had unknowingly pledged a Jewish boy. Most of us wanted to initiate him, despite threats from our national chapter that they would withdraw our chapter. In the end, he was "balled" by two members of the house, all other members being in favor of his initiation. Ideally, there must not be discrimination because of race, color, creed, etc. But realistically, it is different. Keeping in mind that the fraternity is a social institution, think of yourself planning a party. Wouldn't you invite the people most akin to your likes, dislikes, and thus those who would be most likely to get along with each other. This is, essentially, what the fraternity tries to do in the selection of its members. Most fraternity men do not relish the thought of turning any man away. They would like to pledge as many as are interested.

Some students have advocated through the DTH that the University should prohibit those fraternities who discriminate from being on the campus. Before the University can consider such a move, it should tear down some of its own barriers. Granted, the school should be praised for allowing integration as early as 1954. This is commendable. But, why is it that there are no Negroes on UNC athletic teams? Certainly, there have been capable ones who could have made it, both athletically and scholastically. Bobby Bell (who became an All-American football player at Minnesota) and Walt Bellamy (who was an All-American basketball star at Indiana) are two Negroes I know of who probably would have been available to UNC if this apparent discrimination did not exist.

I would like to say that being a fraternity member contributed more than any other single factor to my happiness in college. It was a wonderful refuge from the perplexities of academic life in that it gave me opportunity to relax and enjoy myself among friends, when the time could be spared. It gave me a place to bring my dates and entertain them through its various social programs. More important, it taught me to live with other men, respect their opinions and ideas, and work with them in building a better fraternity, University and community.

Perhaps, UNC, like some schools, can allow new fraternities on campus and thus absorb as many students who wish to join. Miami of Ohio has Negro fraternities and everyone seems happy with this arrangement.

Finally, those of you who are students now need not feel isolated, for Chapel Hill and the University are very much alive, indeed. Both are facing the current problems, local and foreign, with the courage, foresight, and dedication that have characterized the University for years.

Which?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

You can hit a man on the head with the butt of a gun and injure his brain. There are laws against this. You can hit a man's self-respect with a "WHITE ONLY" sign and injure both his personality and his spirit. Which is the greater crime?

Face The Facts

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I have been impressed by the position of THE TAR HEEL on the racial situation in Chapel Hill. We cannot solve this problem by burying our heads in the sand. It seems to me that too many whites are prone to take refuge in every possible legality, while all around us swirls the overwhelming, real issue — the question of morality. And then they wonder what is going on, and why there can't be peace for a while longer.

It should be obvious by now that there will never be any peace until we stop trying to take refuge in legalities — whatever merit they may in themselves possess—and face the real issue. Certainly, the businesman may at present refuse to serve a Negro because it is his legal right to do so—but over and above the legal aspects of the situation there remains a moral issue that simply will not go away.

What must the Negro do to convince us of this?

Robert G. Coffeen

Leaders?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Chapel Hill has about as highly concentrated brains in that area as any comparable town of its size in the United States.

My great - grandfather, my grandfather, my father and I worked there, and my brother Ed Caldwell still serves there with the Dekes. I waited on many Carolina alumni during my boyhood who are now leaders in this and other states: Lenior Chambers, Watts Hill, Bill Pless, Leo Harvey, Bob Vaughn, the Spaugh boys, Albert Coats, Allen Martin, Gus Travis, "Wop" Femister, and Reid Russell. Wherever these men are I am sure they are making a contribution to the society in which they live.

It is embarrassing to those who love the University and its traditions to read of the unfavorable publicity that the town is now getting because those who are able to lead are not assuming their responsibility in finding the solution to the racial problems that are facing Chapel Hill today.

The hot, but not too gentle, winds of change are blowing across the whole universe today, but tomorrow these winds might become a hurricane. The so-called Christian World has the greatest opportunity of its lifetime to put into practice the principles and philosophy that was emulated in the life of the lowly Carpenter of Nazareth over two thousand years ago.

Illusion

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Many dictionaries define alcohol as a stimulant.

Many advertisers would have us believe alcohol is uplifting.

Many people drink alcohol to get that good-feeling illusion.

However, medical science has proven alcohol is not a stimulant. It is a deterrent that makes a person dizzy first, then drowsy. Some become the life of the party, in their effort to overcome the drowsiness. Pretending they feel good, giving a false impression that has come down thru generations.

This false impressions has induced men to drink the stuff, often with tragic results.

If people were told the truth about alcohol, there would be less alcoholics today.

Ouch!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I am writing in regard to your recent letter implying the narrow mindedness of the Chapel Hill merchants as a whole.

As the daughter of a merchant of this town, I resent the tone of the editorial criticizing this town's principles in the matter of integration.

Over the past year I can remember many times sitting down to dinner without my father, who had an integration meeting to attend or a board meeting that he couldn't miss. I am not saying that we did not expect this, he was president of the Merchants Association, and we knew that his job carried with it a lot of responsibility. But who can forsee difficulty in a year like the last one? When an Editor of the Daily Tar Heel can say that Chapel Hill merchants do not strive for a peaceful settlement to this problem, then, I am also entitled to voice the opinions of the opposite side, if, indeed, sides must be taken.

I know for a fact that many of the merchants of this town have actually pleaded with the holdouts to integrate peacefully. Meeting after meeting has been held after store hours, when father should be home with their families, not conducting business. Many cups of coffee have been drunk around tables at eleven o'clock at night, while merchants discussed integration.

No, we are not fully integrated in this town, but we're 95 percent so, and much of that has been done over the past year, with the help of 95 percent of the merchants of this town.

It is narrow mindedness like yours that sets the cause of the Negro people back. If editorials are to be printed, they should be printed factually, working and striving for a goal through public knowledge of a problem, not by blaming a group of people who are working overtime to preserve the peace of the town they live and work in.

Sincerely yours,
Karen Kemp

Compromise: The Solution

Editors, The Tar Heel:

"Come now, and let us reason saith the Lord . . ." (Isiah 1:18).

"For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace . . ." (1 Corinthians 14:33).

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." (Matthew 5:9).

The racial question in America today is one of such magnitude and complexity, especially with regard to its psychological nature and social aspects, that I have refrained from even mentioning the words "integration" and "segregation" in print, or orally, as often as possible. It is a controversy fraught with emotion on both sides—and there are even those on both sides who would deny that the problem even HAS two sides!

My reluctance to discuss integration vs. segregation is not (I think) based upon fear or cowardice. It is based, rather, upon my ignorance, and lack of wisdom. I have no glib answers; nor can I suggest a long list of workable solutions. Yet, I am not disinterested, or unconcerned.

My interest is in ALL people of the ENTIRE nation; and I am concerned, like uncounted millions, over the fact that this nation is torn asunder by internal strife. I am neither white nor Negro; my birth certificate bears the word "INDIAN." But I AM wise enough to know that no great problem was ever solved solely with emotion. If there was ever a time when Americans needed to be cool-headed and reasonable, it is now.

Nor will threats and denunciations solve anything. It should go without saying that anything which cannot be accomplished legally, morally and within the bounds of good taste, probably should not be accomplished at all.

No matter what the cause is, either worthy or unworthy, its proponents should, first of all, determine who are its friends and who are its foes. Since a cause must have supporters in order to succeed, it is the height of folly for its proponents to attack its friends.

Speaking as one member of a minority group which is even smaller than that of the Negro, and basing my observation on two years actually spent in Chapel Hill, I can tell you in all sincerity that Chapel Hill is not the enemy of Negro progress. At least seventy-five per cent of its businesses are not segregated. Much of this desegregation was brought about not by legislation or agitation, but by voluntary endeavor. Is this the thanks CORE hands out to those who, in good conscience and often at great personal sacrifice, have furthered the same cause CORE professes to be furthering? Do threats reflect good will? They do not; they reflect, rather, a lack of gratitude and appreciation. And senseless threats may set the Negro cause father back in a day than it has gained in a century.

Fortunately, Chapel Hill is a tolerant town; but that is not to say that it is a soft one. I seriously doubt that CORE will be able to threaten it into doing anything which, in the judgment of its duly installed Aldermen, is not in the interest of ALL the people of the town.

Governor Sanford has spoken out against CORE threats. He speaks for the official State of North Carolina, and opposing him would be utterly foolhardy. He has been a true friend to ALL North Carolinians in the past, and minority groups should not even WISH to oppose him.

It seems to me that the element of face-saving has entered the picture, now that both CORE and the State have spoken. Well, all is not lost. CORE, or some other group furthering the Negro cause, can simply make a public statement saying that out of appreciation for Chapel Hill's tolerance and good will in the past, no further demonstrations will be carried out. That would assure those who have been friendly to the Negro cause in the past, or at least tolerant of the movementt, that their friendship was really appreciated.

Both Federal and State laws have been abused in the past; and whether they were abused by one side or another — or both sides—a continued disregard for the law can lead only to grief for ALL Americans. One simply does not enforce the law by breaking the law.

Patience is a godly virtue, and here it will pay off in huge dividends.

Jesse And The DTH: The WCHL Interview

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Since several references have been made to WCHL's October interview with Jesse Helms and the tape recording of it in our files, it seeems appropriate to clear the air concerning just what we have record.

Because of an engineer's nigthmare, a once-in-a-thousand-interviews technical problem caused a vital portion of Mr. Helms' comments to be lost. They were missed when an overheated tape recorder just decided to stop working. However, enough of what he said is still on tape to generally conclude that (1) Indeed, as he has said since, he did not offer to debate the Daily Tar Heel editors on his station but, (2) neither did he specify that his "prime time" for a "confrontation" would be be given only to Messrs. Friday and/or Aycock.

Following is a transcript of the portion of the interview with WCHL's Flip Latham relating to the proposed debate. It begins with a discussion of the Tar Heel's invitation to Mr. Helms to come to Chapel Hill to debate the Communist speaker ban law:

HELMS: "...I would question your statement that the students are more affected than anyone else (referring to a statement earlier in the conversation by Latham) that is at least not res ipso loquitur . . . it's debatable. They (the DTH editors) say they cannot get anybody (to debate). They have invited Clarence Stone, I believe. They have invited Mr. Orange County Representative Phipps, but isn't it curious to you that they haven't invited even one of the legislators who signed the bill?

LATHAM: Well, I think it is, yes. But . . .

HELMS: Would you want to explain that for me?

LATHAM: No, sir, I was just trying to get your opinions. I don't know too much about it. I got back in the States just about the time that this thing went through the legislature.

HELMS: Well, I would think that it would, of course I'm not a college editor and I don't think like one obviously, but if I were going to get someone to defend a bill that had been passed by the legislative body, I would first think of the person who wrote the bill, who happens to be Secretary of State Thad Eure and the Attorney General of North Carolina. I would certainly invite the Attorney General who has defended it. I would consider inviting the Assistant Attorney General who wrote a very comprehensive brief on the subject. I don't know that I would first go to a legislator. I don't know whether Mr. Phipps signed the bill or not. I think he did not. I would not necessarily go to the presiding officer of the Senate. I would get somebody . . . and I certainly wouldn't go to an editor of a newspaper or of a television station, regardless of how emphatic anyone of these men had been. Now, secondly, are you aware of the nature of the invitation?

LATHAM: What do you mean exactly, sir?

HELMS: Have you read the letter which extended the invitation?

LATHAM: No, I understand from the editor that first of all an excerpt from the editorial was sent out to each of you, and then after that a formal request was made. Now, that's what the editor of the Daily Tar Heel says.

HELMS: Well, the first I knew of it I received a tear sheet from the editor with a terse note asking me to come to the campus. The letter in no way described the nature or the size of the suggested meeting, where or how it would be conducted, or under whose sponsorship it would be held. I'll tell you the truth. Even if I had been invited to defend motherhood or Christianity, I wouldn't do so under the invitation of two college editors who gave me no more facts than they did. I think it was a completely immature way of handling it. Of course, I think it is obvious that it was calculated to produce a rejection of the invitation, but I doubt that they could get anybody to accept an invitation under the circumstances.

LATHAM: You think that it was just in the nature of the request itself that was sort of distasteful, in other words.

HELMS: Well, it was to me. They've got to show me some more planning on a meeting before I would even consider it. Now they come back with an editorial saying that I am afraid and make certain other personal statements, or implications, which are somewhat amusing because I've been called a lot of things, Mr. Latham, but I've never been called a coward . . .

LATHAM: Well, the editorial that I have before me now . . .

HELMS: I have it before me. I got it since I got on the line.

LATHAM: It says ". . . he turned down our invitation with the irrelevant suggestion that we invite J. Edgar Hoover to express his views on the subject."

HELMS: Well, of course it's a matter of opinion whether that's irrelevant.

LATHAM: Yes.

HELMS: Do you think that's a matter of opinion? Mr. Hoover has been very outspoken on this subject. He is very concerned about it. So are a great many people in government who I suspect are somewhat better informed than the editors of the Tar Heel. Now I would be curious as to the motivation behind this. Is this the idea of the editors of the Tar Heel, or is there some other group interested in this thing? If so, why did they deliberately avoid contacting the introducers of the bill? Why was Secretary of State Eure left out of this thing? Why was Mister Burton left out of it? There are a lot of questions about it. Now I don't think that anybody is reluctant to discuss this thing. As a matter of fact we'll be glad to have a confrontation on this station and I hereby authorize you, sir, to say so on your radio prog . . . (here the infernal tape recorder chose to garble several seconds of the interview, but a kick or two made it begin again as Mr. Helms continued) . . . I think this can be arranged and we will cancel out prime time to provide such a confrontation . . . and furthermore, we will not be vague about the details of the thing.

LATHAM: Okay, well that's mighty fine.

HELMS: That's about all I have to say about it. I think the editors of the Tar Heel need to approach this thing with a little more maturity than they have, and certainly if they expect to get an acceptance of their invitation.

(END OF TRANSCRIPT)

That's it, fellows. Somehow I feel in your zeal to air your grievance, both you and Mr. Helms have remembered only what you thought he said . . . or wanted him to say.

And, indeed, he may not be a coward, but I don't remember his mentioning Messrs. Friday or Aycock until word got around that Major McLendon wanted to "take him on". Maybe Mr. Helms has heard what we have, that he and his cause may not be a match for the persuasive Major.

At any rate, the WCHL interview referred to so many times as proof of something-or-other doesn't prove a lot because of the garble, but what we have of it is now in print for anyone to argue over as long as they wish.

Sincerely,
Jim Heavner

sity personnel. (The Chancellor gave several specific illustrations of the methods by which this policy is implemented.)

"The most recent controversy has come about as a result of the insistence on the part of certain individuals and groups that the University should not do business with any firm which practices segregation in respect to the general public. We refused to go so far.

"In my judgment it would be unwise to attempt to use the economic power of a State-supported institution to bring about social change. Such a policy would be fraught with danger and pitfalls too numerous to discuss at this time.

"In summary, the University will not knowingly make arrangements for public accommodations which would result in discrimination of our students, faculty, administration, or guests. On the other hand, the University will not attempt a policy of boycotting businesses solely because they are not completely integrated in their service to the general public."

The faculty passed a motion endorsing Aycock's policy statement.

Asked if the same policy holds for the other two branches of the Consolidated University in Greensboro and Raleigh, Pres. Friday said it did and always had.

Friday said the policy meant that the university would see that integrated facilities were provided for official functions but would not attempt to oversee accommodations for extra-curricular affairs.

Swimmers Go Under With Florida Losses

By PERRY McCARTY

Coach Pat Earey and his swimmers scored an impressive 58-27 victory over a strong East Carolina team, and sported a spotless 8-0 record prior to holiday engagements with southern powers Florida and Florida State. Now the Dolphins' chart reads 8-2 after a nip and tuck 48-47 loss to Florida and a more convincing 60-35 shellacking at the hands of FSU.

The two losses occurred back to back on Thursday and Friday, January 30 and 31. The Gators from Gainesville, Fla. came to town with a team of virtually the same make-up as our current edition. Consequently, the outcome was determined largely by juggling events and swimmers. With few exceptions, the intensive two-a-day training sessions during exams produced peak performances.

Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill both bettered their own previously existing ACC records. Mann established a new mark of 2:04.5 for the individual medley, eight-tenths faster than his old mark. Merrill covered the 100 yards freestyle in an amazing 48.7, two-tenths faster than he did in last year's conference meet. Even though Chip Smith, Scot Taylor, Thad Adams, and Davis Roberts won the final freestyle relay, the Dolphins were on the short end of the 48-47 count.

FSU brought some 27 Seminoles from Tallahassee to challenge the Heels. By swimming standards, 27 men is a large turn-out for the first practice session; and unheard of for a travelling squad. Even before the meet, the Seminoles had two decided advantages.

First they had seen the UNC-Florida meet the previous evening. The Dolphins were busy trying to whip the Gators and were not intent on concealing this strength or that. Then, too, FSU was relatively fresh; whereas UNC's swimmers had the difficult task of rebounding from the stinging one point decision to Florida.

The previous remarks are not intended to take anything away from the visiting Seminoles; sufficeth to say they completely outscored our boys 60-35. This prompted Willis Casey, NC State mentor and a more than casual observer of the goings-on, to label the Seminoles as "the best dual meet team ever in the South." Certainly, FSU is in good position, both swimming and otherwise to fill the SEC vacancy recently created by Georgia Tech's withdrawal.

Now for the particulars of the individual meets. On the opening medley relay against ECC, Mann grabbed an early lead when the ECC backstroker missed his first turn. Forum, Lipp, and Roberts finished going away, and that was largely the story of the meet itself. Merrill took both 100 and 200-freestyle races, the latter with a fine 1:49.3 clocking. Mann was a repeat winner in the individual medley and the 200 backstroke. Lipp won his specialty, the 200 butterfly.

UNC's divers, Dave Moody and Ernie Oare, found the competition keen in each of the three outings. ECC's Jerry Donahue, Florida's Graham Prize and FSU's John Profumo showed how it's done. All-America Prize put on quite a display from the three meter board, but observers who witnessed Profumo on the low board will attest that he was equally convincing. Of the UNC duo, Oare has consistently scored higher; exciting newcomer Moody has shown flashes of brilliance, but, as yet, lacks consistency necessary for six dives.

A Strenuous Month Leaves Matmen 4-4

Two weeks of nothing but wrestling just prior to exam break has left Coach Sam Barnes and his UNC grapplers still wondering how good they really are.

Barnes felt before the season began this might be the finest team in 14 years here, and the scheduling has been with that in mind. But, aside from the performances of Paul Wellstone and Jerry Cabe, the matmen have been erratic up to this point.

An 1-1 record before Christmas was turned into a 4-4 after it as injuries have prevented Barnes from opening any one meet with all his regulars on hand.

UNC defeated Davidson 17-11 and lost to Washington and Lee, 16-14 before the holidays, but in the latter engagement, starters Dick Blackman (147) and Jac Robinson (167) failed to make weight due to pre-season injuries.

The Tar Heels wrestled five times in one week in early January prior to romping over East Carolina, 21-5, on the Saturday before exams.

But, of the five, UNC had three in one day in a unique four-team get-together in Blacksburg, Va. (UNC, VPI, N. C. State and Ohio State), and was able to come away with only one victory.

Carolina beat VPI, 16-14 and lost to State, 21-10 and powerful Ohio State, 24-5. Cabe, Blackman and two other starters, Russ Simmons (137) and Steve Lister (177), were all missing with injuries.

Carolina also split meets with VMI and Virginia before semester break, turning back the Keydets, 18-15 while losing to UVA, 20-10.

Lister, again, and Bill Woodall (157) were absent from the Virginia meet after being hurt against VMI the night before.

Wellstone (123), only a sophomore (along with Robinson and Lister), was undefeated in eight matches last year as a frosh after an outstanding prep career in Arlington, Va.

He has continued his fine record with the varsity this year with seven wins and a draw in the eight Carolina meets. Gene Beery of Ohio State is the only barrier to a perfect mark.

Cabe, an outstanding guard on the football team last fall, wrestles as a heavyweight for Barnes and is 2-0-2 this year. He tied with Jim Hill of VMI and Jerry Bokelman of Virginia.

Coach Barnes has come up with another novelty for his boys' next performances. The Tar Heel matmen will have two meets the same day—at home and away—with West Virginia and Pfeiffer.

Barnes will divide his squad to meet Pfeiffer away and the strong Mountaineer club here in Woollen Gym Saturday night at 7:00.

win.

Cunningham tallied a 22-footer (his first outside basket of the night) to start it off, and Ray Hassell netted a fast break bucket. Then, Billy was fouled under his offensive bucket by Katstra and had to leave the game momentarily. Billy Galantai came in, converted Cunningham's two free throws (69-53) then went to the bench again—only to enter a second time when Virginia Coach Bill Gibson protested the ball had not been in play yet.

After the confusion subsided, Ray Respess took a beautiful feed from Cunningham, and it was practically all over.

Actually, the Tar Heels won the verdict at the foul line, getting 23 of 29 to Virginia's 10 for 19. UNC outshot the Cavaliers from the field by just one, 33-32.

Carolina had opened up an 18-11 lead halfway through the first 20 minutes after showing the effects of the exam inaction early in the period.

A little later, the Tar Heels stretched it to 26-15 when Galantai's layup, two free throws by Shaffer and a remarkable twisting layup by Shaffer gave them the 11-point lead. Cunningham hit 12 and Respess 10 in the half as UNC shot 57.6 per cent from the floor.

Billy had numerous feeds from his high pivot position to men breaking along the baseline, as Virginia collapsed its zone on the super star much of the time. His points came on those favored hanging double-pump drives.

In a preliminary, the UNC freshmen defeated Carolina's Jayvee team, 104-78, as Bobby Lewis scored 41 points.

Hooray For Jeanniee! That's Two For Her, Two For U. S.

INNSBRUCK, Austria (UPI)—Jean Saubert of Ogden, Utah, won her second ski medal at the winter Olympic Games Monday with a tie for second in the giant slalom at the halfway point of what may be the worst over-all showing in history for the frustrated United States team.

The 21-year-old Miss Saubert, bronze medal winner in Saturday's slalom, chased 18-year-old Marielle Goitschel of France in the final standings today but tied Marielle's sister Christine for the silver medal with a twisting run in 1:53.11.

Jean's two medals were all the Americans had to show for the first six days of competition. Even in its worst Olympic years (1924 and 1936), the United States won at least one gold medal but none were in prospect in the remaining six days of these ninth winter games.

Other Americans were far-outdistanced as Norway's Tormod Knutsen came from behind to win the men's nordic combined jumping and cross-country skiing and the leading Yank was fourth after the first two compulsory figures in men's figure skating.

Scott Allen of Smoke Rise, N. J., 14-year-old U.S. champ, was third after the first figure but dropped to fourth on the second and was given little chance the rest of the way of upsetting European stars led by Germany's eight-time champion, Manfred Schnelldorfer.

For a time at the slalom site at Lizum, there was hope that Jean had shared a gold medal with 19-year-old Christine, who had won the shorter slalom on Saturday.

But down the slushy slopes came tomboyish Marielle, the more talented of the fabulous Goitschel sisters, and those gold medal hopes were dashed as a new clocking of 1:52.24 was flashed for Marielle.

TENNIS MEETING

All persons interested in varsity and freshman tennis are notified of a meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 5 (tomorrow) at 4:00 in Woollen Gym.

Baby Grapplers Undefeated; Pfeiffer Is Next On Saturday

UNC's freshman grapple squad is piling up an imposing record which has left the team undefeated (in five meets) and four individuals likewise.

The latest victory was, perhaps the most impressive since it came over a Pembroke College varsity team which is on the schedules of both the Duke and N. C. State varsities.

The score was 31-5 as Coach Grover Wilhoit shuttled four substitutes into his starting lineup. One got a forfeit, two won by falls, and the fourth was the only frosh wrestler to lose.

Coach Wilhoit has used 15 different performers to date in the season log which contains victories over Washington and Lee (19-15), Davidson (23-18), VMI (24-10) and Virginia (16-14).

Jay Jacobson (157) of Pensacola, Fla. has been a winner in all five meets while Lane Verlenden (147) of Lookout Mt., Tenn. is 4-0 and Jim Goodwin (130) and Bill Johnson (heavyweight) 3-0 each.

The frosh have three meets left this season, only one of them (with the undefeated Duke frosh on Feb. 15) home. The Tar Babies wrestle Pfeiffer Saturday and N. C. State on the 28th of this month.

WAKE TICKETS

Distribution of student tickets for the Wake Forest game here Saturday will start Tuesday, Feb. 4 (today) on a first-come, first-serve basis. The distribution for the Duke game on Feb. 29 will start on the same basis Monday, Feb. 10.

New Student Union In Planning Stages

By JEFFREY A. DICK

"I am hopeful that next year's Freshman Class will have an opportunity to use a new Student Union before they graduate," Howard D. Henry, Student Union Director, stated yesterday.

The authorization of the new Union by the 1963 North Carolina State Legislature permits the University Building Committee to spend $2,000,000 for the construction of the building. Construction is presently awaiting approval by a federal lending agency.

The new building, when completed, will contain five times the floor space occupied by the present Union, Graham Memorial. In addition, the new building will contain expanded billiard facilities, bowling lanes, music listening rooms, a snack bar, and a large central room which would serve as a meeting place for mock political conventions, dances and banquets. In addition, the building is to contain office facilities for most of the campus student activity groups.

"The advantages in bringing these groups under one roof," Henry said, "would be that there would be much more contact among campus leaders and give the campus a greater unity of purpose.

"Also," he continued, "adequate meeting spaces near the headquarters of the student organizations would afford individual groups a more efficient organization."

At present, the building is still on the drawing boards of Al Cameron and Associates of Charlotte, N. C. Once started, construction should take anywhere from eighteen months to two years. The building will stand just off South Road at the edge of Emerson Field. The building will occupy part of a three building complex composed of an undergraduate library, a bookstore, and the new Union.

'Tom Jones' Gets Rialto Showing

"Tom Jones," the most raved about film currently in circulation, will have its area premiere today at the Rialto Theatre in Durham.

The movie has received top reviews from all leading New York newspapers and is reviewed in the Times as "one of the wildest, bawdiest and funniest comedies ever brought to the screen.

Asheboro Negro Leaders Threaten Suffocation

ASHEBORO (UPI)—Three integration leaders revealed Tuesday they would suffocate themselves in caskets unless this central North Carolina community adopted a policy of total and complete integration by Memorial Day, May 30.

It was the latest of recent threats of self destruction by Negroes.

The Rev. B. Elton Cox of High Point suggested last Sunday that Negroes burn themselves to death to dramatize the need for racial equality.

Robert Blow, 20, New York City, said three white coffins with black tops had already been ordered by the Rev. E. Banks of Thomasville, state youth advisor for the NAACP. Blow is Banks' assistant.

Blow said he, Banks, and Tyson, first vice president of the Asheboro NAACP chapter, would seal themselves in the caskets May 30 and remain there until the city was completely integrated.

"This is really true," Blow said. "We discussed it last evening and had discussed it before. I hope it's not necessary, but we will go through with it."

Other Negroes, he said, had also expressed their willingness to follow their example. Plans call for the caskets to be displayed in a church or private home here, Blow said.

He said the city had taken the first step toward easing racial differences and "the next thing fo rthem is to get to work on a public accommodations law."

Sit-In Bill On SG Slate

The Ways and Means Committee of Student Legislature will meet at 2 p.m. tomorrow to hold hearings on a bill which would ask the Men's and Women's Honor Councils to try convicted student civil rights demonstrators.

The bill, introduced by Borden Parker, states it has no objection to student participation in "lawful demonstrations," but it "does not condone the willful, premeditated and persistent violation of the laws established by the community."

"The consensus of opinion seems to doubt the propriety of Student Legislature's enacting such a bill," said Student Government Vice - President Bob Spearman. "Many feel it would infringe upon the principle of separation of powers in the government," he said.

Committee Chairman Neal Jackson has asked that all members of the committee attend the meeting tomorrow in Woodhouse Room of Graham Memorial.

A Gold Medal!

INNSBRUCK, Austria (UPI) —Terry McDermott, a 23-year-old apprentice barber using a pair of skates he borrowed from his coach, ended the United States' long wait for a gold medal in the Winter Olympics Tuesday when he upset a Russian to win the 500-meter speed-skating in a record 40.1 seconds.

No Cash, No Moon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — National space chief James E. Webb told Congress today that if it does not provide the full $5.3 billion space budget asked by President Johnson for 1964-65, it will not be possible to land an American on the moon in this decade.

Carter And Elections Board

Replacement Of Professor May Benefit Student Voters

By GARY BLANCHARD

News Analysis

UNC students of voting age with no residence other than Chapel Hill should find it easier to register and vote in Orange County in the near future, The Daily Tar Heel learned yesterday.

This develpoment is linked to the apparent ouster of UNC Business Professor Clyde Carter as secretary-treasurer of the Orange County Elections Board.

Carter has come under increasing fire from local party members in the past several years as being "notably unsympathetic" to allowing UNC students to vote by requiring them to meet "unjustifiable qualifications."

The results of this has been to "effectively disenfranchise" many students, according to supporters of the ouster move.

"We're certainly not inclined to allow all students to register," said one supporter, "but when they have no other residence, are usually married and in professional or graduate school, then they just have their vote taken away from them.

"Many of these students come from states that don't have absentee ballots. Many of them can't go home, and might not be able to qualify to vote if they could as they have no permanent residence there."

Carter's apparent ouster came at a meeting Monday night of the Orange County Democratic Executive Committee. Members re-nominated Sam J. Latta of Hillsboro, present chairman of the elections board, as their first choice for the two Democratic Party positions on the board, and UNC Political Science Professor James Protho as their second choice. Carter was nominated but came out in third place.

State party officials, who will take final action on the nominations in the near future, rarely overrule a local committee's desires, meaning Carter probably will not be reappointed to the board.

Supporters of the ouster move stressed that they felt Carter has done an "efficient and creditable" job as secretary-treasurer, but his reputed lack of willingness even to discuss his rigid regluations on student voting has caused them great concern.

Carter's opposition to student voting was based on his belief that students have no lasting interest in the community as they often own no property here, don't buy state auto licenses or state taxes, are usually here for only a few years and are apt to vote for tax increases even though they probably won't have to pay them in the long run.

Carter's opponents on the issue, however, have pointed out that the same criticisms hold for townspeople and professors who move in and out of the area, but who are not subjected to the same scrutiny when they attempt to vote.

Technically, one supporter of the ouster move said, the law leaves it up to each registrar as to who can qualify to register and vote. However, it was felt that registrars were reacting adversely to student attempts to vote as they knew Carter opposed the idea.

ART PANEL DISCUSSION

A panel discussion on "Art in the Churches" will be held tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. at the Villa Tempesta in Chapel Hill.

Kortner Makes $100 Tackle

A UNC law student was awarded $100 Monday in a suit against a football player for a fight last May.

Steven A. Bernholz, of Greensboro, had asked for $5,000 as compensatory damages and $10,000 as punitive damages. He claimed he had been maliciously assaulted by UNC football tackle Cole Kortner, a senior from Greenwich, Conn.

Bernholz testified that his date shined a spotlight from the car they and other students were occupying on the backs of Kortner and his date near a woman's dormitory.

Kortner approached the car and grabbed the arm of another boy, Bernholz said. The two boys got out and were assaulted by the 230-pound tackle, he said.

Kortner testified that he had not intended to hit anyone when he came over to the car. When the two boys got out, one of them made what Kortner interpreted as an "offensive move."

Kortner said he shoved one student and hit the other. He heard one of them say they didn't want any trouble and to "move along big boy."

Susan Turner, a senior from Raleigh, who was Kortner's date, testified she saw three boys on top of Kortner and started toward the dormitory. Another girl persuaded her to go back and help stop the scuffle.

The fight lasted no more than 30 seconds.

Character witnesses appearing for Kortner were Miss Turner, Joseph Mark, a line coach, and Gene Sigmon, Tar Heel co-captain.

Merit Scholars May Get Help From Phi Eta Sigma

A permanent cooperation between Phi Eta Sigma and the National Merit Scholarship Committee will be decided today at a meeting of the freshman honorary fraternity.

The meeting will be held in Roland Parker Lounge of Graham Memorial at 4:30 p.m.

Howard Godwin, president of the fraternity, stated that a cooperative bond of this sort would provide an ideal opportunity for Phi Eta Sigma to render service to the University.

Each winter the National Merit Scholarship Committee brings to the campus Semifinalists from throughout the state. The committee organizes a two-day program designed to acquaint the Semifinalists with the academic possibilities at Carolina for superior students. Counselors and registrars for the visitors have previously been volunteers, and the Phi Eta Sigma proposal would provide personnel for these positions on an annual basis.

The program for the Semifinalists will be held February 13-15. On the agenda are lectures by professors, tours of the campus and interviews with Chancellor Aycock, the Director of Admissions and the Director of Student Aid.

Jury To Try Integration Marchers

Pendergraft Also Gets Jury Trial

Twenty-two civil rights demonstrators were bound over Tuesday from Recorder's Court for jury trial in Orange County Superior Court in Hillsboro.

Also bound over for Superior Court trial was Howard M. Pendergraft, 44, white, accused of assault on a demonstrator in a December protest at the Tar Heel Sandwich Shop.

Roy Cole, Chapel Hill solicitor, asked for a jury trial for Pendergraft, because he said all cases arising from the Town's racial incidents should be tried in the same court.

Each demonstrator is charged with two to five counts of trespassing, blocking the sidewalk, resisting arrest, assault, or damage to property. Two protesters are charged with assault with a deadly weapon for allegedly kicking police while being arrested.

The cases will come up in the Superior Court session beginning Feb. 24.

The case of Austin Watts, motel-restaurant owner charged with forcible entry and assault against several integrationists, was postponed until next Tuesday in Recorder's Court.

Arson Attempt Brings FBI To Chapel Hill

An apparent case of attempted arson against the home of Rosemary Ezra, a prominent member of local anti-segregation demonstrators, has been turned over to the FBI for further investigation, according to Orange County Sheriff's Deputy W. E. Clark Jr.

Clark said the incident occurred late Sunday night when neighbors of Miss Ezra telephoned authorities that something was burning in the carport of her deserted home.

Clark said the smoking object proved to be a lump carbide, a crystal substance which he said flames up violently when doused with water. It is used in welding, he said.

Enough water had been thrown on the carbide to make it sputter and smoke, Clark continued, indicating that the attempted arsonist is familiar with the potency of the substance.

Clark said he and Deputy Avery Maddry let the material burn itself out on the dirt floor of the carport and notified the FBI. He said FBI notification is standard practice in cases of arson which possibly have racial overtones.

It was the second incident at Miss Ezra's home since racial demonstrations were stepped-up here last weekend. Late Saturday Austin Watts, owner of a restaurant-motel which has been the scene of several sits-ins, allegedly forced his way into the house and struck two persons inside.

Watts was subsequently charged with forcible entry and assault.

LBJ Forces Lead Fight Vs. Passage

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Tuesday narrowly defeated a plan that would have permitted parents to subtract from their income tax bill part of the cost of sending their children through college.

The proposal, sponsored by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) as an amendment to the Senate's $11.6 billion tax reduction bill, originally had the backing of liberal Democrats and most Republicans.

But the administration was against it, and it failed by a cliffhanging roll call vote of 48-45 that saw two of its co-sponsors, Sens. Robert C. Byrd (D-W. Va.) and Frank E. Moss (D-Utah) emerge from the cloakroom to vote against it at the last moment.

Another co-sponsor, Sen. Howard W. Cannon (D--Nev.) happened to be out of town when the vote was called.

Administration forces came from behind to defeat the plan, and the tide of voting bore all the earmarks of Lyndon B. Johnson' strategy when he was Senate Democratic leader.

The Senate also defeated on a 47-47 tie vote an amendment sponsored by Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.) to permit tax deductions of up to $1,500 a year for students working their way through college. Prouty's plan would have cost the Treasury about $55 million a year in tax revenues.

The main argument against the Ribicoff plan was that it would cost too much in tax revenue losses — $1.3 billion by 1970. Sen. Eugene McCarthy (D-Minn.) said $500 million spent under the administration's omnibus education bill, which would provide college tuition loans, would do three times as much good for education as the Ribicoff plan.

There also were objections that the provisions would benefit mostly middle-income parents who can already afford to send children to college. Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) complained that the plan raised the old church-state controversy by helping parents meet the cost of church related colleges and universities.

The AFL-CIO came out against the plan Tuesday as "very expensive" and of no benefit to low-income families.

Sit-In Cases Overload County Court

From The Chapel Hill Weekly

A mountainous clerical job is gradually developing around anti-segregation demonstrators due for trial in Orange Superior Court in Hillsboro.

District Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper said he planned to hold special criminal terms of Superior Court to try members of the Chapel Hill freedom movement arrested in sit-ins here during the past five weeks and charged with trespassing and resisting arrest.

Cooper said he would start trying some demonstrators at the regular criminal term of Orange Superior Court, which opens February 24.

These first demonstrators to be tried are 17 who were involved in the sit-in at the Chapel Hill Merchants Association last July. Four of the Merchants Association demonstrators have already been convicted. One pleaded guilty. Cooper said if he finished with the remaining 17, and enough time remained in the regular term of court (unlikely), he would start trying the other demonstrators arrested since demonstrations started here December 13.

Those demonstrators came to trial in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court recently and requested jury trial in Hillsboro.

The amount of clerical work and expenses in trying these demonstrators is unmatched in the annals of Orange County justice. Since demonstrations started last month, 152 demonstrators have accumulated 255 arrests as of last week (some were arrested several times, at different demonstrations.) Only five of those 255 arrests involve one charge, trespassing. All the others resulted in a dual charge: trespassing and resisting arrest.

Because a grand jury must act on each charge, Cooper must draw up and present to the Orange County grand jury 505 separate bills of indictment.

When Cooper's two, possibly more, special terms of court are held, probably in March or April, there is a strong possibility that defense counsel for the demonstrators will demand that each defendant be tried separately for each arrest. If he does, and if all defendants appear and are ready for trial, and none pleads guilty, there will be 225 trials.

A jury must be chosen for each trial. These juries are chosen from one venire, if possible. A venire usually numbers about 70, and of these about 35 usually appear; the others are either dead or out of the County.

It is possible that considerable delay can occur in choosing the juries. The State is allowed four peremptory challenges of jurors; the defense, six. Both sides are allowed unlimited challenges for cause. Two juries are usually operating at once, one out deliberating, the other either being formed or hearing a case.

The potential delay in choosing juries is one of Cooper's reasons for holding special terms of court. Another is that Orange County holds only four criminal terms of Superior Court every year, and normal dockets keep these terms busy. Still another is the inconvenience to defendants of having to wait for days in the Courthouse to be tried.

Cooper said he did not want to have happen in the coming demonstrators' trials what occurred in December, when four demonstrators' cases were consolidated for simultaneous trial. Consolidation gave the defense 24 peremptory challenges, six for each defendant, and when the original venire of jurors was exhausted by challenges, a new venire had to be called by the next day. Contacting the new jurors kept the Sheriff's Department up half the night.

It is in these special terms of court that expenses appear. A juror is paid $6 per day in court plus mileage for one day only. Mileage from Chapel Hill to Hillsboro is $1.40. In addition to the regular jurors, 18 grand jurors must be called for every term. Grand jurors get the same pay as regular jurors.

In addition to this, a court stenographer must be hired. Court stenographers cost about $120 a week. All told, the cost of a special criminal term of court is about $1,000.

There are other less apparent expenses connected with the demonstration trials, some not calculable. For instance, Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake says that he expects every single one of his 24-man force, including himself and excluding only the parking meter maintenance man, to be called to Hillsboro to be ready to testify at one time or another during the demonstration trials.

Chief Blake said he would confer with Cooper to try to arrange for trials of demonstrators in such a way that policemen on the morning shift would be called to testify in the afternoon and vice versa.

At the same time, Cooper is in the process of arranging special term dates convenient to both himself and to Chapel Hill attorney John Manning, who has been retained as private prosecutor in some of the demonstration cases.

Chief Blake said that in 22 years as a policeman he had never experienced such mass arrests. He said he remembered one UNC-Duke football game at which 19 arrests were made, for public drunkenness or disorderly conduct, but that even that game was an unusually busy one for the police.

Concert Features Louis Armstrong

"Satchmo" is coming to town!

The tubby bandleader, sometimes known as Louis Armstrong, headlines the Winter German's concert, to be held Saturday night at Memorial Hall. Curtain time is 7:45.

Armstrong and his band are internationally known, and his many hits and films have made him the favorite of millions.

Appearing with Armstrong will be the Shirelles, whose recordings have consistently been among the top in the nation. They are known for such hits as "Dedicated to the One I Love," "Thing of the Past," "Baby It's You" and "Soldier Boy."

Watts Carr, president of the German's Club, announced yesterday that tickets held over from the Fall Germans concert cancelled due to the death of President Kennedy, will not be honored at the door. He said that those who are not in the Germans Club and hold tickets should turn them in to the person from whom they bought them and get a refund.

The German's Club, composed of 14 UNC fraternities, will hold a dance in Durham after the performance. Armstrong will play at the dance, and admission is limited to the members of the club.

Anyone desiring further information should call Carr at 968-9086 or 929-2653.

Bigot, Bigot, Who's Got The Bigot

Having spent the semester break in Las Vegas at the Young Democratic Clubs of America (YDCA) national convention, we are moved to comment on several significant occurrences and trends that manifested themselves in that desert retreat from reality.

First, J. Albert House, a North Carolinian and UNC graduate, running on a civil rights platform against an AFL-CIO field representative from Massachusetts, was elected to the national presidency of the YDCA. The ramifications of this are fairly obvious. A labor man is hard to beat in the Democratic party and a man from Massachusetts has also proven pretty hard to beat, but House was still able to run away with the election in spite of the combination. Also, in these national conventions, many states, primarily in the Great Plains and Northwest, vote what is known as a 'gut-liberal' vote, and it is quite significant that most of these states cast bloc votes for House.

It seems apparent that House would never have been elected if his liberal stand had not been taken as credible by these states, and likewise that his stand would not have been accepted as credible if North Carolina's actions had not shown the same liberal tendencies. So it was more than Al House the candidate and his campaign managers who vaulted him to the national presidency. It was also the state's reputation for fairness and progress in the fight for civil rights.

But one very blatant thing marred the whole convention, at least for many Tar Heel delegates. That was a new breed of bigotry that manifested itself in several of the state delegations. Bigotry, as we define it, is holding strong views on a subject—views that can not be changed by any amount of reason—while remaining totally ignorant of the facts.

While 'bigot' is a harsh name with which to brand anyone, that word alone suits many of the ultra-liberal delegates from California, and at least one delegate each from Michigan and Washington, D.C.

These new bigots were firmly convinced that anyone from North Carolina was, by definition, a "red-neck segregationist." As a matter of fact, some of the Carolina delegation learned for the first time that our state is ". . . a fascist state in which no Negro is allowed to register to vote." These are not exaggerations, they are quotes, and no amount of factual evidence to the contrary, including the arguments of Negro delegates from North Carolina, could convince those bigots to the contrary.

These insults to the state are so misdirected that we can only ignore any claim the Californians make to intellectual enlightment. We wish them to know that any bigot, regardless of the issue, is still only a bigot.

We hope that before we meet them again, they at least gain a foggy idea of what they are talking about and don't try to substitute belligerence for knowledge. We also hope our state continues to prove them wrong.

Prof. Carter And The Right To Vote

The cause of democracy in Orange County has taken a giant step forward with the apparent removal of UNC Business Professor Clyde Carter as secretary-treasurer of the county Elections Board.

This is not said in spite. It is said in face of the hard, cold reality that Prof. Carter has consistently acted in such a manner as to disenfranchise Americans who happen to be UNC students over 21 with no other "permanent" residence than Chapel Hill.

Such action is inexcusable. To be sure, Prof. Carter has a point when he notes that students are usually here for only a few years and therefore don't have a "lasting interest" in the community.

But this criticism applies to everyone who moves to Chapel Hill temporarily—whether he gets a job in a local store or at the University. Yet only students have been given the registration run-around.

The main point, however, is that payment of property taxes, proof of state auto registration and the like are not valid qualifications for voting. Prof. Carter, though, installed them as standards—for students. He was therefore arbitrary and capricious in his official actions, and the cause of good government requires his removal.

We are certain that his apparent successor, UNC Political Science Professor James Prothro, will let reason play a far greater role in his official conduct than Prof. Carter did.

The right to vote has been obtained and maintained at too high a cost to allow any official to deny it to his fellow Americans for arbitrary reasons.

Unpuzzling The Press' Many Whys

By HARRY GOLDEN

North Carolina's press is puzzled. Why did the Negroes pick Chapel Hill, of all places, for their current most forceful street demonstrations?

The editorials point out that our famous University town has had a national reputation for progress in human relations. Indeed, it was precisely the University of North Carolina that produced the pioneers of the South in the struggle for civil rights. The late Howard Odum, and Dr. Guy B. Johnson, and Dr. Frank P. Graham began their fight for civil rights for the Negro a quarter of a century before the first Freedom Riders began to study the bus routes of the South. And ten years before the Supreme Court decision Chapel Hill writers James Street, Betty Smith, Noel Houston, Paul Green, and others were urging the desegregation of public accommodations.

So why Chapel Hill? Why should the local CORE direct its most vigorous demonstrations in the comparatively liberal atmosphere of the University of North Carolina?

This should be no mystery to those who have studied the history of such movements for political freedom and the right to move about as free citizens.

The puzzled editors of North Carolina are right when they say there is "more civil rights" for the Negro in Chapel Hill than in nearly any other city in the South, but that's just the point. There are still some restaurants, motels, and other public accommodations which are segregated and it is because a liberality of spirit does prevail, that the remnant of racial segregation becomes even more degrading than the racism in Mississippi's delta where the wall still stands unscathed and unscaled. Thus the assault upon the reason is not as great in Mississippi as it is in Chapel Hill.

This has been the pattern of man's struggle for freedom through all of history. When you are in Egypt, you tip your hat, step off the sidewalk, and bow low before the masters. But when you are on Mount Nebo and you actually see the "Promised Land," it is then that you intensify your efforts to reach it. We should expect the Negro efforts to increase as the wall against them crumbles. The fight for freedom becomes more intense as victory appears more imminent.

And besides, the demonstrating Negroes of Chapel Hill have a right to nudge the great university center of Chapel Hill to make it earn its national reputation for intellectual integrity and sociological reason. Is this not so?

"Why Not?"

Charlotte Editor Examines CH Racial Demonstrations

By DAVID E. GILLESPIE
The Charlotte Observer

CHAPEL HILL — A few months ago I wrote a column asking "Why Chapel Hill?" The question was posed because of continuing demonstrations against segregation there.

The idea was that Chapel Hill had won neither peace nor commendation for its lead in reducing racial discrimination. Instead, it was being penalized. My conclusion: that this was foolish strategy on the part of demonstration leaders and that it would impede the progress of Negroes throughout the state.

Much has happened in Chapel Hill since then. The Congress of Racial Equality has moved from picketing to civil disobedience in its insistence that Chapel Hill businesses become 100 per cent desegregated.

CORE leadership has demanded passage of a public accommodations law. CORE national director James Farmer warned that the full resources of the organization would be turned against Chapel Hill if it was not an "open city" by Feb. 1. This statement was issued at the request of local leaders of the protest movement.

Gov. Terry Sanford answered Farmer's ultimatum with a strong statement of his own after conferring with Mayor Sandy McClamroch and a member of the Chapel Hill board of aldermen.

The governor labeled Farmer's words as "brazen threats." He pledged complete support for Chapel Hill officials in dealing with the problem.

Mayor McClamroch was much relieved by the governor's statement. He had just been asked by the town board, voting 4 to 2, to appoint a new committee to seek voluntary desegregation by the one to two dozen business holdouts. He protested that the committee should not have to work under fear of coercion if Feb. 1 arrived with the matter unsettled.

Now Feb. 1 has arrived without a public accommodations law in Chapel Hill. Nor is voluntary desegregation complete. A new note has been added by the recent advisory opinion from Ralph Moody, assistant N. C. attorney general, that the State Supreme Court probably would find such an ordinance unconstitutional.

CORE official Floyd McKissick of Durham said civil rights leaders would continue to push for the ordinance. He said CORE had made an extensive study of the matter and believes the law would be constitutional in North Carolina.

McKissick threw another faggot on the fire by suggesting that the time might be at hand to run a Negro for governor. He said his remarks were prompted by Sanford's recent statement on the Chapel Hill situation and by the fact that three Democratic gubernatorial candidates had expressed support for the governor's position.

All of this has produced a sort of shock wave in North Carolina. Most of the state's people had pretty well convinced themselves that our racial problems hit a peak last year, and that everything was going to be downhill from there on.

Investigation convinces me that it's time we stopped kidding ourselves. Off-shoots of the Chapel Hill campaign are going to be with us for a long time to come, unless something drastic happens. By that I mean a similar movement will continue throughout North Carolina unless leaders and members of CORE and other civil rights organizations either lose their zeal or run out of funds.

Condemn them as you may, and they do talk and act unwisely at times, those leading the Chapel Hill demonstrations are single-minded to the point of undergoing extreme hardship and danger. They are willing to take any political risk in behalf of their efforts to end second-class citizenship based on race.

John Dunne of CORE and Pat Cusick of the Student Peace Union are white. John is from Ohio and was a Morehead scholar at the University before dropping out to work full-time for CORE. Pat is an Alabamian who worked part-time as a student at the University before assuming his present role.

The third youth is Quenton Baker, a student at North Carolina College at Durham, who is state youth chairman of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

We ask, "Why Chapel Hill?" And they ask, just as seriously, "Why Not Chapel Hill?" They argue that the town basks in a liberal image that it does not fully deserve, especially where the lot of the local Negro is concerned.

If Chapel Hill is going to take pride in being a southern leader in race relations, they say, it is time the town lived up to its reputation.

Without mimimizing the humanitarian motives at the roots of this cause, for they are not only valid but too often underestimated by critics, two other factors enter the Chapel Hill picture.

First, the civil rights group would like very much to have a southern community to hold up as a model of racial achievement. A public accommodations law would be consistent with the idea of 100 per cent success.

Second, the direct-action movement lost much of its momentum after President Kennedy's assassination. Its leaders need major victories, for both personnel and money are at stake.

So. Feb. 1 has arrived with the town still in ferment. What happens now? The answer appears to rest in the hands of people like Dunne, Cusick and Baker.

First of all, there is disagreement as to just what was intended in Farmer's original statement. Chapel Hill's mayor and the governor interpreted it to mean that large groups of outsiders would be brought in for massive demonstrations right on the Feb. 1 schedule.

"All our resources—staff, funds and non-violent training—will be centered there after D-Day," Farmer said.

That seemed clear enough. But Dunne's comments indicated that the timing did not have to be as rigid as the statement implied. He stressed that the initiative was still in the hands of local CORE people, and that their course might well be determined by what happened between Farmer's ultimatum and the Feb. 1 deadline.

Dunne also pointed out that "D-Day" in CORE terminology had not necessarily meant in the past that all forces would land on the target date.

"It could come any time after that," he said.

Farmer later denied he meant his statement to be a "threat." But Dunne said the governor's forceful counter-statement aggravated the situation. His group interpreted Sanford's words as an ultimatum in return. They were bitter against Chapel Hill officials for asking the governor to make a statement.

In any case, the Sanford statement did not lessen the resolve of Dunne and the others. Neither did it disturb them when he warned that the Chapel Hill siege "sets a bad example for the state since it sees that great progress leads to unreasonable demands."

This raises a point that needs to be aired for the benefit of the entire state. The community that is self-satisfied or the one that is defensive because of what it "has already done for the Negro" is just as much a magnet for people like Farmer, McKissick and Dunne as the community that has made no progress at all.

It's like trying to get into Heaven by good works alone. What's a passing grade?

These people want to knock out racial discrimination in community life, not just leave it groggy. They argue that direct action is necessary because progress stops whenever it stops. They are not interested only in opening public accommodations. Their aims include non-discriminatory treatment for Negroes in education, employment, housing and other facets of community life.

This would appear to play into the hands of the movement's foes—those who would maintain race relations in the status quo. It does provide a good argument for them. But communities which are grappling with the problem, and the state as a whole, may as well face the realities now.

The point was raised, for example, that stepped-up demonstrations at this time might be of invaluable assistance to I. Beverly Lake in the gubernatorial contest. That possibility throws no fear at all into the civil rights leaders. They say, for instance, that Lake's attitude on desegregation is more representative of what they are facing in Eastern North Carolina than any other candidate's. They don't figure their course is going to be easy there, with or without Lake in the governor's mansion.

There's a fine point here. It's not that they want Lake, but that they are willing to risk him rather than compromise their movement. This may make some of the Negro political realists in the state shudder, but that's where the Chapel Hill leaders stand.

It's important for the state and individual communities to understand what they have embarked upon. As long as these protest groups are functioning, the number and variety of demonstrations will depend upon the amount of racial progress that is made voluntarily. This requires some kind of continuing effort, not a stop-and-start process.

Also, protest leaders are listening less and less to white people who do not fully and publicly commit themselves to their aspirations. I report this as a harbinger of growing militancy in the North Carolina movement.

The "now" forces have sliced through to the hard kernel of Chapel Hill's "never" element. The mayor's new committee has a hard nut to crack in winning over the remaining segregationists. There is a strong glint of determination in the eyes of the demonstrators.

No outsider can solve Chapel Hill's problem now. But I get the strong feeling that other North Carolina cities—and the protest leaders mentioned the names of both the liberal and the recalcitrant—would be wise to examine themselves to see how they can be spared the same ordeal.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Rebuttal No. 1

Editors, The Tar Heel,
And Mr. Booker:

Criticism - Analysis, a letter from Mr. Eddie Booker in the Jan. 14th edition of DTH, aroused even my vapid spirits. After scanning the letter, I thought perhaps indeed this young man does have the "handle"; however, upon second glance, there seem to be several large splinters. He seems to know about "journalistic integrity" and "bad taste," and best of all he speaks of the "responsibilities of a student publication." His major complaint seems to be that:

A: "Newspapers throughout the state consistently gave the Rinaldi case more 'play' than those . . . almost automatically recurring demonstrations." The Jan. 7 issue of DTH devoted 308 "column inches" to demonstrations and only 39 "column inches" to the Rinaldi case.

Does this not obviously display a lack of "journalistic integrity?" The other "head" of this coin might well read: "Newspapers throughout this state consistently ignore those 'almost automatically recurring demonstrations.'" Because they are "almost automatically recurring" seems to diminish their significance for Mr. Booker. It seems that "journalistic integrity"—or at least the absence of it—can be measured in "column inches." True, demonstrations win with 308 demonic "column inches," but trailing by only half-paragraph are advertisements with 278 virtuous "column inches." I wonder if there is a correlation coefficient for freedom!

Sir, you should include more gore in your news so the sadistic appetites may be satiated; you should include more social facade in your news so megalomania may be perpetuated.

With confidence each day I reach for the DTH knowing I won't have to plow through six pages of muck-n-hobgoblin to read six columns of news.

B: He points out that the incident of the micturating waitress was mentioned twice in the DTH, and that it was reported but "tastefully edited" by the professional journalists on the wire services of those newspapers throughout the state.

Does this not obviously "reflect bad taste on the part of you, the editors?" Those professional journalists who bring us the "tastefully edited," those politicians who bring us censor in the name of saviour, those students of insouciance — those fawning sycophants, these, Mr. Booker, are the "tastefully edited" and these, too, fall under the category of responsibilities of a student publication.

More Fuzzy

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I take this opportunity to answer one of my "critics" who reacted to my DTH letters to the editor.

Frank Crowther is hardly qualified to accuse others of pontification. I have been familiar with his writing style since 1957 and I know that any detached observer of those past years at UNC must give the palm to him for usurping the powers of the popes.

In my approaching senility at age 26, I was wrong about being in Philosophy 52 with him. The correct course was Philosophy 22 or Ethics.

Crowther assumes I called him sophisticated. If he read more carefully he would see that I did not. I said he "alienated less sophisticated types." This is not really a credit to him since most beginning philosophy students in the class were dull and unimaginative. He was more verbose than most, but more bright than right.

Frank should be content being merely brilliant since he doesn't consider himself sophisticated. I couldn't care less whether he sees himself as genius or idiot.

His difficulty in connecting my "dangling phrases" is more a matter of his arbitrary taste in grammatical style than an indication of lack of clarity in my sentences. And if my phrasing abuses the king's English, I could resurrect mistakes in Crowther's style based on his published, public indiscretions in old DTH files. But in doing so I would be laying Crowther open to charges of indecent exposure.

I would have respected Crowther's reply more if he had spoken to the political issues I raised rather than to point to trivial considerations.

He knew who was called what in the business he termed "pronouns that weep for antecedents." I weep for his misplaced poetic talents, bobbing up and down on the seas of inconsequentiality.

Strange to say, I was not among those alienated by him, because I admire spirit, even when it is so proud and willful.

Any 8th grade schoolmarm who develops apoplexy over my logic deserves to have her grade C teaching certificate revoked.

Nothing could have been more "stumbling and bumbling" in logical thought than to call Goldwater a Fascist, which Crowther did not deny saying, Fascism is a philosophy advocating principles of a centralized, autocratic national regime with severely nationalistic policies, exercising regimentation of industry, commerce and finance.

Goldwater fits this philosophy like 50 fingers fit in a glove. His nationalism would never take a fascist form. I advise Mr. Crowther to get hold of Barry's "Conscience of a Conservative," since Crowther has seen fit to recommend reading he should be able to find a copy somewhere.

A career for exceptional men

... Some notes about you, about us, and the advertising business

About you. If you are the man we seek, you have an insatiable curiosity about people and the world around you.

You're alert and responsive to new ideas, new ways of doing things. You like to take on new problems ... you see them as opportunities.

You dig deep into the why of things. And the best answers you can come up with today are never good enough for you tomorrow.

You're an individualist. Yet you thrive on team spirit.

You have conviction about freedom of choice, consistent with the rights of others.

You're the kind of man who could be successful in business for himself, but you see the greater challenge implicit in today's major enterprises.

About us. The J. Walter Thompson Company was formed 100 years ago and has long been one of the world's largest advertising firms. Its stock is owned by more than five hundred active staff members.

We help over 500 companies in the United States and abroad sell thousands of products and services to hundreds of millions of people. Last year alone, we were responsible for the advertising investment of close to a half-billion dollars.

There are 6,900 people working with Thompson around the world. Their backgrounds range far and wide. And so do their assignments, which include writing, art, broadcasting, market research, media buying, international business, marketing and merchandising, accounting, music, styling, the theatre, and the social sciences.

In our experience, superior individuals from every graduate and undergraduate educational discipline find successful careers in a major agency such as the Thompson Company. Staff members in our New York Office alone represent nearly three hundred colleges and universities here and abroad.

Your career with us. You may be surprised to learn that while an advertising company must have artistically creative people, it depends just as much on people who are imaginative and inventive in other ways.

Our business is selling. Communicating through the written and spoken word is how we sell. You must possess the ability to speak and write well so your ideas may be shared and understood.

We are looking for the kind of men who wish and are able to assume substantial responsibility early in their business lives. To such men we offer a remarkable chance to grow and develop —one seldom found in any firm.

Previous advertising experience is not required. Basically, our interest is in the nature of a person rather than in his specialized knowledge and abilities.

We offer you no standard starting salary, no cut-and-dried training program. Beginning salaries are individually considered and compare favorably to those of other national firms. We help you tailor your own development program, based on your interests, your abilities, your goals. Your program will differ from other men's programs just as you differ from other men.

When you join us you will work side by side with experienced advertising men. Your growth will be based on your own initiative, your own development. There are no age or seniority requirements to limit the responsibility you can earn.

We encourage you to follow your curiosity into all phases of advertising, because we want you to become a well-rounded practitioner as rapidly as possible. Experienced advertising men are eager to coach you individually in your efforts to develop your capabilities. Additionally, you are free to delve into every nook and cranny of advertising through our annual series of professional seminars, workshops and classes. You learn from men who are experts in their fields.

About men who join us. A remarkable number of college men who have joined us in the past decade have remained with us and are enjoying varied, exciting careers.

Because of our emphasis on early growth, relatively young men commonly handle major responsibilities in many phases of our business—both in this country and abroad.

All initial assignments are in New York City or Chicago, but we have many other offices in the United States and throughout the world; and if you are interested, you may request a transfer later on.

If you wish to be a candidate, you must graduate in 1964 and be able to join us by June of 1965. You may obtain further information at the placement office. Please check there regarding the possibility of a personal interview. We shall be on campus February 19 and 20.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY EMPLOYER

Medley Relay Team Is Second At VMI

By BILL LEE

Carolina's indoor track team bounced back from exams to participate in the VMI relays this weekend.

About 20 teams ran in the meet, and the Tar Heels, under the direction of assistant coach Wayne Bishop, came away with their share of the places.

In the distant medley relay, Rich Ambrose, David Peltz, and Bob Bennet led the Heels to a second place. Jerry Smith, in a fine performance, aided in a third place for the 4-mile relay.

Harvey Whitley took fifth in hop-step-jump competition, while Mike Folk placed third in the two-mile run. Carolina's remaining place was a third in the 880 relay with an outstanding 220 leg by Dale White.

Two weeks earlier, the Tar Heels' home debut was spoiled by the Quantico Marines in an exciting meet that went down to the last event. The Marines topped a comeback with the two-mile relay win and a 58-50 victory.

Carolina had taken an early lead with victories in the dashes, but Quantico gradually overcame it in the distance events.

Milt Baugess paced the Tar Heels in the hurdles with a first and a second. Dale White was the only double winner with firsts in the 70 yard low hurdles and the 60-yard dash.

Other firsts were taken by Whitley in the broad jump, Folk, in the two-mile run, and Tommy Clark in the high jump.

On the same day, the Freshman team to a 77-26 victory over the Wake Forest Frosh. The meet was capitalized by nine Carolina firsts out of twelve events.

Johnny Johnson was responsible for firsts in the polevault and and high jump, while also taking second in the broad jump behind Bob Ancarrow.

Bud Phillips took firsts in the 60-yard dash and the 70-yard low hurdles. Other firsts were by Bo Wood in the shot put, Robinson in the 600, and Eddie Daw in the 880.

Clark Places At New York

UNC's Tommy Clark, the fine high jumper from Greensboro, turned in two 6-7 performances in Eastern meets last week, but one tie for second place was all that came of them.

Clark's 6-7 at the Millrose Games in New York on Thursday tied him for second with about eight other jumpers while John Thomas, formerly of Boston College, won the event with a 7-2½ jump.

The UNC leaper also had a 6-7 at the Boston Amateur Athletic Association meet Saturday, but the mark failed to place.

Clark's indoor high is 6-8 at the national AAU meet in New York last year. He has jumped 6-9¼ outdoors—in the Furman Relays last spring.

Ronnie Jackson, the small but fleet halfback who competes in the 60-yard dash, also went East with track coach Joe Hilton, but a 102-degree temperature kept him in bed for Saturday's meet in Boston.

Jackson finished third in his heat at New York to Bob Ashworth of Boston, but missed second (and a qualifying position) by just inches.

Bobby Hayes, the Florida A&M sprinter who has run a 9.1 100 outdoors, won the 60-yard finals by nipping Fordham's Sam Perry at the wire. His time was 6.1 seconds.

Ashworth defeated Perry in the 50-yard finals at Boston in 5.5.

UNC's indoor track squad will meet N. C. State here Saturday in the Tin Can at 1:30. Coach Hilton expects some good performances, and is looking for a pretty good crowd after the basketball game. The indoor meet should still be underway up to 5:30.

Mayor Blocks School Door In Alabama

Photographer Hurt In Wild Scuffle

NOTASULGA, Ala (UPI) — A small town mayor, standing in the school house door and backed by Gov. George Wallace's state troopers, presented President Johnson with his first school desegregation crisis Wednesday by refusing admission to six frightened young Negroes.

Six other Negro students were admitted to a previously segregated school in nearby Shorter without violence, although about half of the white student body stayed home.

The state troopers, dressed in yellow slickers to protect them from the drizzling rain, remained on the sidelines during the Notasulga confrontation, but local police clubbed a white photographer into submission and about 50 jeering, cane-wiedling whites roughed up newsmen.

Gov. Wallace remained at the state Capitol in Montgomery during the showdown and later contended Mayor James Rea's stand in the schoolhouse door was a community affair.

"Local authorities should be allowed to handle local affairs," said Wallace. He refused further comment.

The governor made his own schoolhouse door stand last year in an attempt to block desegregation of the University of Alabama. He quickly backed down, however, when the late President John F. Kennedy federalized the Alabama National Guard and gave the Guard orders to enforce the court-ordered desegregation.

The Notasulga violence erupted when a bus carrying the six high school age Negroes rolled up to the entrance of the school that serves both grade and high schol stoudents in the farm community.

Local police, tipped ahead of time that a white photographer was on the bus, leaped aboard and began flailing away with clubs.

The photographer, later identified as Vernon Merritt III, 23, an employee of the Black Star Agency of Birmingham, was dragged from the bus kicking and screaming.

The six young Negroes sat in stony silence staring straight ahead while the wild scene unfolded.

An explosion, which sounded like a loud rifle shot or firecracker, caused them to jump with fright momentarily, but they quickly regained their composuse and again sat silent. Officials later said the noise was caused by one of Merritt's cameras as it shattered against the side of the bus.

Merritt, badly shaken but not seriously hurt, tried to run after he was dragged from the bus, but a sharp command from an officer stopped him short in his tracks.

"Hit the sonofabitch," someone in the angry crowd of whites yelled as Merritt sat moaning on the ground.

While the local police were tussling with Merritt, several of the white hecklers turned on other newsmen covering the showdown.

One white man made three lunges at a UPI photographer, trying to knock his camera out of his hand.

At least one camera was smashed by the cane-swinging whites, and one heckler used the crook of a cane to latch onto the cable of a sound-television camera, and then he started running.

State troopers also stuck their hands in the front of camera lens and tried to impede the

Lab Reports Place Council In Crisis

News Analysis

By DTH STAFF

The Men's Honor Council passed its first major crisis of the new year peacefully last week.

The crisis concerned a Council decision in a case involving lab reports last month.

Four students were tried for lying when the students turned in lab reports without doing the experiment.

The students were found innocent by the Council.

The faculty member concerned, backed by his department, considered taking action of his own against the students. After consultation with Student Government and Administration officials, however, the matter was resolved by the release of the students' grades.

The department said that the students had violated scientific integrity by basing their work on an experiment that they had not performed. The instructor said he felt that the experiment was part of the work involved in the report.

The case was confused by the testimony of the defendants, who said they had not intended to deceive the teacher about doing the experiment.

They said that they had completed a series of equations that made up most of the lab report, but had made up the figures they expected to get from the experiment.

The Council ruled that the students had not intended to breach any code of ethics in the lab reports. It said that the regulations of the Department on lab reports were not clear.

The students, it said, had performed what they thought was the meat of their assignment, but had not realized the necessity of doing the complete experiment.

The Department felt that a bad precedent had been set. It that students could at any time fake an experiment in lab reports.

The Council has said, however, that this decision does not allow students to falsify their lab reports by appearing to have done work they have not actually done. The Council ruled that in this case work had been eliminated without the intent to imply that it had been done.

The Department decided that justice had not been served by the Council and withheld the grades of the four students.

It said it would give a grade of F to the lab reports in question. This would lower the course grades by one leter grade.

Student Government leaders, particularly President Mike Lawler and Council Chairman Whitney Durand, felt that such action would be in complete defiance of the Honor System.

They reasoned that if faculty members were to be allowed to overrule the Council in this way, the whole idea of a student-run Honor System would be invalid.

After several conferences involving Durand, Lawler, Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey and the Department Chairman, the instructor decided Tuesday to release the grades they had originally planned to give the felt that the case would mean students.

Several Student Government leaders and members of the Council feel that the Council made a mistake in this hairline case. The case was clouded a great deal by the special circumstances surrounding it. However, the decision does not set any precedent for faking experiments.

One thing the case shows, critics of the decision said, is that the gathering of evidence was not handled as well as it could have been by the Attorney General's staff. The presentation of the case was sometimes unclear to the Council members who were not versed in the ways of performing lab reports.

They say also that the students have been charged with cheating rather than lying. A conviction for cheating would have resulted in an automatic F for the course, whereas a lying conviction would not.

The Council, the critics said, needs to take a close look at itself after this close call with its intra-University relations. The decision was made before the laboratory procedures had been thoroughly examined.

The Department also came in for criticism for its loosely organized policy regarding lab reports. Policies for lab reports vary necessarily from course to course, and it is often unclear to students as to just what the policy is.

The Council said that the four students apparently did not try to deceive their instructor but were ignorant of the lab policy in their course. This is a weak excuse for them, it said.

A section is to be included in next year's handbook for freshmen telling them to always check with lab instructors about their individual policy on reports.

Student Government officials will try to obtain laboratory policies for each course and include them in the handbook.

Sitterson Speaks On Academics Here

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, will speak at a meeting of the In-Service Training Program for staff members of the Office of the Dean on Women Feb. 13.

The meeting will be held in room 105, Hanes Hall, at 4:30 p.m.

Welfare Money May Be Lost Due To Marches

Juveniles convicted for the recent demonstrations in Chapel Hill may cause their families to lose their welfare payments, according to Orange County Director James Wight.

If the Juvenile Court should sentence demonstrators to a state training school, the welfare payments would cease automatically.

Penalties handed down in similar cases in other areas of the state have included fines, probations and sentences to training schools, Wight said.

However, Wight added, "a surprisingly small number" of the juvenile demonstrators in Orange County are welfare recipients. Most of them are from middle income families.

The County welfare office investigates every case thtat comes before Juvenile Court. There have been none of the demonstrations yet because no petitions have been filed with the court.

200 Protest CORE

By FRED HARWELL

An "anti-CORE" demonstration broke out in the Upper Quad about 9 p.m. Tuesday.

A small group of students began the demonstration in opposition to the Congress of Racial Equality's recently strengthened drive for total integration in Chapel Hill.

Leaders of the rally said it was not a demonstration against integration, but against the tactics of CORE, specifically the February 1 ultimatum.

One student carried a sign reading "Government by law not by threats." Another sign said "We support the Chapel Hill police."

Another student pounded a washtub drum.

They marched around the Upper Quad, across Raleigh Street, and into the Lower Quad chanting "Down with CORE."

Over 200 students poured out of the dorms to join the demonstration.

Many others hung from windows or stood in the doorways watching.

At one point Phil Baddour, chairman of the student Judiciary Committee, came out of a dorm to warn the group against the use of offensive language.

The demonstration lost steam quickly in the face of warnings by other students of possible Campus Code infractions.

Three Chapel Hill policemen arrived at the scene on foot as the crowd was dispersing after the fifteen minute demonstration.

Sit-In Bills In Spotlight

Stormy Session Seen In Legislature Tonight

Opposite Bills To Be Voted On By Body

By PETE WALES

Civil rights demonstrations will be at the center of debate tonight in Student Legislature's first meeting since Jan. 9.

Two major bills wil be debated:

1) A bill upholding lawful demonstrations but condemning civil disobedience. Cases involving the latter will be prosecuted by the Attorney General's office.

2) A bill to prohibit the Attorney General from taking action on the student demonstrators.

The first bill was introduced in January by Borden Parker (UP), but was amended in the Ways and Means Committee yesterday.

The second bill was introduced by Bill Straughn (SP) in January. It was reported from the Judiciary Committee yesterday.

Mike Chanin (UP), former party chairman, said yesterday that the UP would seek to pass a compromise bill that would:

1) Support voluntary integration of all places of public accommodations.

2) Condemn civil disobedience.

3) Leave all investigations of Campus Code violations from demonstrations to the discretion of the Attorney General.

The SP is supporting Straughn's bill.

For both bills, legislators will consider to what degree it is Constitutional for them to interfere with the student judiciary.

In other business, Mike Chanin (UP) will ask that his bill in support of an amendment in Congress granting tax deductions for the costs of education be tabled.

The original bill was defeated in the Senate Tuesday with the help of the Administration. Chanin plans to introduce a new resolution asking the North Carolina Congressmen to introduce another bill similar to the one defeated in the Senate.

A bill urging the University Buildings Department to check into the fire safety problems of the residence halls will also be considered. The bill was introduced by George Lundbury (UP) Jan. 9 as a result of a recent fire in Parker Hall.

A bi-partisan bill, introduced by Neal Jackson (SP) and Chanin, will set the size and membership of the UNC delegation to the Consolidated University Student Council.

The need for the bill, introduced Dec. 12, came from the most recent CUSC meeting. It was felt that the delegations of the three member schools should be changed to be as similar as possible.

An appropriation of $313.00 for the UNC delegation to the State Student Legislature later this month will also be considered. Darst Murphy (UP) introduced the bill.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Peru Beiges Battle-Torn Area

LIMA, Peru (UPI)—The government imposed a state of siege Wednesday in southern Cuzco Province and arrested 14 Communist agitators after clashes between land owners and red-led peasants in which 12 persons were killed and at least 32 injured.

Communications difficulties with the Sicuani area, 75 miles south of Lima, where the clashes occurred, limited details. However, some press dispatches indicated perhaps as many as 22 persons were killed in the clashes involving an estimated 8,000 persons.

The state of siege semi-martial law was decreed by the government for 30 days.

Professional agitators have incited peasants in the Cuzco area to seize privately held lands on grounds it belongs to them.

The trouble started Tuesday when a predominantly Indian mob, organized and led by Communists, tried to seize farmland around the village of San Pablo near Sicuani. Farm owners, farm hands and local Indians rallied to drive the squatters out of the area. The ensuing clashes developed into the worst violence in recent Peruvian history.

U. S. Airlifts From Cyprus

NICOSIA, Cypress — (UPI) — The United States air-lifted most American women and children off this tense island republic Wednesday as hatred between the Greek and Turkish communities boiled dangerously close to a full-fledged civil war.

The U. S. ambassador, standing firm in his bomb-shattered embassy, threatened to call out the Marines to protect remaining American citizens against what he called "an organized campaign against us."

New violence flared in the inter-communal dispute, and long-seething bitterness appeared to be reaching the flash point.

The first of five chartered airliners carrying American women and children to safety in Beirut, Lebanon, left here early Wednesday.

There are about 1,700 Americans on the island, and more than 800 were aboard the flights.

Thefts Being Investigated

By BOB SAMSOT

University officials are investigating a serious rash of thefts which occurred in Everett Dormitory over the semester break.

Chief of Campus Police Arthur G. Beaumont said yesterday, "We've had thefts before, but this is something else."

Over $600 have been stolen from rooms, some of which were locked, by an irony-minded burglar. Rooms have been opened and burgled. Notes have been left, scrawled in obscene language and ending with "the Phantom strikes again."

Chief Beaumont traces the burglaries back to the theft of a pass-key before the Christmas holidays.

A set of keys was taken from the room of a sleeping dormitory official and all of the keys were found in the shower—minus the pass-key.

"It's embarrassing to us," Beaumont said, "since we rent a room to someone, give him the key, take his money and then have him go home and come back to find he's been wiped out."

None of the stolen articles, which range from suits of clothes to typewriters and radios have been traced to pawn shops near here.

Dean of Men William G. Long said he is taking steps to prevent the recurrence of such burglaries. He said the actual time of the thefts has not been determined, but that it is fixed as "sometime between the break." Long said that apparently the thefts occurred while some of the residents were on the floor.

Beaumont said that the thief is evidently someone familiar with the faciilties of the dormitory.

Knowledge of the thefts has led to some false claims of losses.

Beaumont said, "Thefts we've had before have been mainly due to somebody's leaving his room open and somebody else taking a radio or a sport coat. But it's gotten to the bad stage now, where this mobster, to use the term loosely, comes in, decides what he'd like best and takes whatever he wants," he said.

"It's not a case of an outsider just wandering in once in a while, or somebdy needing the money from a pawn shop or even a prank. This character's taking all these things and they're not turning up anywhere. They're just disappearing."

He said his office will continue to investigate the situation as far as it can, "without turning the school into a police state."

"We are hampered, though," he said, "because we can't search everybody as they go in or out of the dormitory. A lot of people advocated that when they came back and found themselves wiped out. But they're the first ones to object if we want to search their rooms. Steps are being taken to stop this rash of thefts."

Eckerd's Druggists Opens Local Unit

Eckerd's Drug Store, the newest business in Eastgate Shopping Center, will open for business today at 9 a.m.

The Eastgate Eckerd's will be the 37th Eckerd store in North and South Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee. It will have a mile and a half of shelf space, 10,800 square feet of floor space, and a complete line of Eckerd's stock. Though Eckerd's has larger stores, the Eastgate store will be one of its largest.

William Christie, manager of the new store, said the nature of Eckerd's business is impossible to define in one word. Eckerd's sells drugs and a wide variety of other items including groceries, hardware, toys, cosmetics, furniture, and seasonable merchandise. The store will also have a lunch counter.

Christie, who will head a staff of 23, has been in the drug business for 30 years, except for four years in the Army during World War II. He is a native of Durham, where he was manager of the Broad Street Eckerd's before coming to Chapel Hill. He and his wife and daughter will continue to live in Durham.

The Eastgate Eckerd's will be open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Saturday, and from 12 noon to 8 p.m. Sundays. The store's telephone number, not yet listed in the Chapel Hill Telephone Directory, is 929-1178.

SL Committee Meeting Ends In Argument

By JOHN GREENBACKER

A bill upholding "lawful demonstrations" but condemining persistent violation of community laws was reported out of Student Legislature's Ways and Means Committee without comment yesterday after a stormy debate.

Initial argument over the bill, originally introduced by Borden Parker (UP), concerned how strongly the bill should condemn student demonstrators, and later progressed into an argument over what was to be considered "lawful demonstration."

The bill was lengthened from the original two articles to three articles.

Article one, as amended, now states, "This body goes on record as feeling there is no violation of the Campus Code for participation in lawful demonstrations which have as their objective the attainment of constitutionally guaranteed rights of all citizens."

Article two states, "This body does not, however, condone the willful, premeditated and persistent violation of the laws established by the community."

Article three states, "This body urges the Attorney General of the Student Body to submit to the Men's and Women's Councils the cases arising out of the recent demonstrations."

Pandemonium broke out in the Woodhouse Room of Graham Memorial when Student Party Floor Leader Phil Baddour was not given the opportunity to submit substitute legislation for the pending bill to the committee.

When lack of a quorum was announced by Chairman Neal Jackson, cries of "railroad job" and "they're pulling the wool over my eyes" arose.

Baddour first termed the action "very impolite," but retracted his statement after he learned that his objectives had been misunderstood by the committe.

Baddour, however, did criticize University Party leader Mike Chanin for threatening to get his party to vote against the bill if a compromise measure was not reached in committee. Chanin denied he said this.

Chanin said he approached the Student Party to seek a compromise measure on the issue, but he was "rudely asked to leave their presence."

The Faculty's Forebearance

The dispute raised over a recent Honor Council decision on laboratory reports raises questions in our minds as to the thoroughness and capability of the Men's Council.

Four students were found innocent of a lying charge when they failed to complete an experiment before writing up a report. The men did the mathematical work, but they started with figures they had faked.

The teacher and his department were properly infuriated.

They felt the students had cheated, and indeed it seems they are right. Whether the students intended to deceive anyone or not, they have an implicit obligation to do the work required of their fellows and expected by the instructor. The department and teacher have accepted the decision nonetheless after consultations with Student Government and Administration leaders.

We admire them for their forebearance with what seems to be a fairly significant mistake on the part of the Council. For the Honor System to work, it must be accepted by faculty and students whether it is right or not.

But this commitment by the faculty and students puts added responsibility on the shoulders of the Council members and the Attorney General's staff.

We hope they will learn from their mistakes.

Who's On First?

The integration movement, or Negro revolution, has played havoc with all disciples of the Associated Press Stylebook and the AP itself.

For example, merely referring to the various names of the movement, or revolution, or whatever, has gotten many a newsman into hot water.

And is it the Negro problem, or the white problem as some integration leaders insist?

Why do newsmen capitalize the word Negro and not white? Are they discriminating? And since when does "white" refer to a race?

But the worst problem is keeping the records straight about who is on whose side.

In a wire story two weeks ago, the AP referred to Rev. Vance Barron, a strong advocate of civil rights from Chapel Hill, as a "pro-segregationist."

A local news story earlier this fall by a UNC student referred to the NAACP as a "racist" organization.

But the final touch for Chapel Hill residents came when the AP referred to John Dunne, the ex-"all white, all right" Morehead Scholar and now local CORE leader, as a "Negro integration leader."

Whose side are they on anyway?

A Little Less Childishness

A seemingly mild resolution presented in the Student Legislature's Ways and Means Committee yesterday touched off one of the most ludicrous displays of temper and partisanship that it has yet been our dubious privilege to watch.

Borden Parker introduced a resolution condemning civil disobedience, but condoning the ends the demonstrators sought and calling for a boycott of segregated establishments by the student body. The Student Party didn't feel the resolution was totally satisfactory and wished to introduce a modified, but not moderated, version of its own. The University Party, the loyal opposition this year, wanted to help write the substitute measure and make it a bipartisan issue, but the SP balked. They felt that they had always taken the lead in civil rights and accused the UP of trying to ride on their coattails on this and every major issue this year.

Mike Chanin, Chairman of the UP, then said that if the SP didn't let them help write the substitute resolution, the UP would vote against it in a bloc. This in itself is a childish thing for the Chairman of a political party to say, but neither does it seem particularly warranted for the leaders of the SP to make a partisan issue out of civil rights. The question is far too important to get hung up in petty squabbling, and if the resolution were to be defeated because of it, the leaders of both parties would have done a great disservice to the student body.

Judge L. J. Phipps And The Angels

(From The Chapel Hill Weekly)

Judge L. J. Phipps, Orange County Democratic chairman and former member of the Legislature, delivered another one of his little journalism lectures at the YDC banquet Saturday night, and while it might be unseemly of us not to accept his admonition without qualm, we wish to take exception.

Judge Phipps told the gathering that of all the newspapermen who had written about his activities during the 1963 Legislature only Charles Dunn (who was standing in for Congressman Horace Kornegay as the guest speaker) had never once "dipped his pen in acid."

Then the Judge concluded that it was improper for newspapers to "dig public servants." We take this to mean that the Judge believes it is wrong for newspapers to criticize public officials and their actions.

Without meaning to be at all acid about it, we would like to suggest that one of the most important functions of any newspaper is to examine, with all of the critical ability it can muster, all of the offices of public trust within its area of concern, and all of the official actions of persons holding such offices.

In our opinion, when officialdom smells, it is the responsibility of the newspaper to hold its nose and point its finger as accurately as possible for the public to see.

We do not automatically place a man on the side of the angels merely by virtue of his having gained public office. Although the division is sometimes unclear, it has been obvious for a long time now that scoundrels, charlatans and fools win elections, as well as unimpeachable and completely dedicated "public servants." If a newspaper has a legitimate role, it is to detect which is which and define them accordingly. (The newspaper world has been singularly free of scroundrels, charlatans and fools, and today is populated almost to a man by unimpeachable, completely dedicated public servants, which explains the meager salaries.)

We willingly concede that many public officials receive criticism from newspapers which is completely undeserved. This is one of the permanent hazards of public office and of newspapering. Perhaps Judge Phipps has been treated unjustly, as he says, by everyone but Charles Dunn. If such is the case, we apologize for our stray shots.

But we dissent wholeheartedly from the view that newspapers have no right to pull the trigger when they honestly believe themselves to be on target. They not only have the right, they have the bounden duty. As for public officials, the walking-wounded and otherwise, and those who seek public office, the minute they venture onto the range they become fair game, with no legitimate claim to safe-conduct.

CORE, Conner Speak Up

Mummers

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Your editorial concerning Philadelphia CORE's reaction to blackface in the annual Mummers parade deserves comment. Whether some people believe it or not, blackface mimicry is derogatory. CORE has not lost its sense of humor, but we are admittedly sensitive to buffoonery which implies—whether intended or not—that Negroes are happy with their lot.

If the truth were told, we would know that Negroes in this country are not now and never were happy in a servile position. Their singing and dancing during slave days were attempts in most cases at recreation after back-breaking work from sun-up to sun-down.

Some have said that the mummers parade is a tradition. True. But so are other forms of degradation traditional and CORE is working to get rid of them too. To imply, as some have done, that other minorities have had fun poked at them and can now laugh at themselves about it is fatuous in 1964. Other minorities, because of their white skin, can hide or blend with other whites who may want to oppress them. The Negro cannot do this—even if he wanted to—because of his "high visibility."

No one likes to be ridiculed, especially if the reason for ridicule persists. Such reasons persist for Negroes in America today.

Finally, the Mummers parade takes its name from the mythical King Momus. The 1963 edition of Webster's Collegiate Dictionary describes Momus as (1) the Greek god of censure and mockery; (2) a carping critic. No thanks for the memory.

Otelia

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I had always liked what I had read about Judge Richardson Preyer in the Greensboro Daily News. He seemed to be just the kind of person you would like to see represent you as head of the State, but I had never met him until I ran into him as I was leaving the reception at the Inn for the N. C. Press Association meeting here this week.

Well, I was more than pleased with him in my brief encounter tonight. He has a lovely face and I fell in love with him on the spot.

I have only one quarrel with him. I would like to see him take a stand against the Gag Law. It makes us look to the world like Tennessee looked when the Monkey Law was passed in that state, a fate we escaped by a hair's breath in this state in the twenties. The life blood of the University is the right to search for and to teach the truth, and the truth was never found by hiding one's head in the sand. There may be a few communists on the campus. But what of it. There always are a few crack pots in every large community, but they serve the good purpose of keeping the democracies (sic) on their toes. In my opinion there is little to choose between the John Birchers on the radical right and the Communists on the extreme left.

I am a died-in-wool Democrat, but I believe I would vote the Republican ticket before I would vote for Beverly Lake. And I would vote for most anybody rather than Goldwater. I always liked Rockefeller, but I would never vote for a man who broke up two homes to remarry.

I am glad the Little Federal plan was beaten at the polls. Maybe it is just as well that the people let it be known where they stand on the issue of redistricting. I hope the Gag Law will be buried as conclusively.

Cavemen

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The first was before remembrance; we are not sure where he lived or when. He was a hunter and forcefully took his food from nature. He was succeeded again and again by Neanderthal and Cro-Magnon and finally by us, the people of today.

Since childhood we have played at caveman. We went as cavemen to Halloween parties. There are even jokes about those primitive people who dragged their women by their hair.

However, the ultimate degradation of mankind has come in Hanna-Barberra's THE FLINTSTONES. The ancestors of God's greatest creation are belittled. Their portrayal as comic characters is a shameful reflection on us, who are a species tolerate of such sacrilege.

And this is what those of us who were reared on Rocky Stone and THE FLINTSTONES must realize: that our old-fashioned stone age comedy is simply immoral and unhealthy ridicule of a people who were willing to bleed and die for the dignity our humor has denied them.

The sooner steps are taken to eliminate this unhealthy menace to our society the sooner we may all rest assured that evil men are not working to undermine the dignity of all the human race.

By protest, both legal and extra-legal, this derogation and campaign of hate must be stopped.

Rebuttal

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In comment to Mr. Booker's recent criticism of your "one-sidedness" in your coverage of the Chapel Hill demonstrations, I feel Mr. Booker to be guilty of failing to remember that The Daily Tar Heel, the student newspaper of the University, has the responsibility of heralding significant changes in our civilization. This "civil rights" issue should definitely be considered as an important step in the ladder of civilization.

Mr. Booker is grossly negligent in comparing the responsibilities of a University publication to other state publications. This campus publication has been in the past, and today, continues to be, obligated to present the liberal viewpoint.

Mr. Booker goes on to say that the Rinaldi murder case was not given enough coverage. I ask you, Mr. Booker, what effect will the passing of this person have on the march of civilization?

I hope that you, Mr. Booker, will come to understand why this "one-sidedness" is indeed necessary in this campus publication.

Cigars—Great, Man

By BOB OSTEEN

Cigar smoking is little understood by too many people. And in view of recent developments it may be that many people would rather go ahead and switch than fight. And since cigar-smoking is the best choice of three possibilities, the public should be informed in the matter.

Some will switch reluctantly, but that is because they neither understand the proper technique of cigar smoking nor appreciate its many subtleties.

Now, pipe smoking gives one a fake sense of being debonaire, but this is a fake and always falls flat as soon as you try to deliver the goods.

Cigar smoking is something else.

But first things first: Buy your cigars from an obscure source in Chinatown or through mail order. Be cagey about it. Drop hints about an unusual South American leaf, or some such. Your individualism will soar. If you are well off, buy nickel cigars. If you are middle class, buy them three-for-a-dollar and smoke fewer.

Cigars are the greatest single confidence-builder on the market. If you are a meek and mild fellow who never can seem to impress the boss, just light up a large cigar and immediately you will become a veritable wise-guy. The swagger comes built-in and the experienced cigar smoker can learn to use it to his advantage. When the boss asks you about that important sale you failed to make, you simply work the cigar over to one side of your mouth and wise-crack out of the other side: "I'll tell ya, J. B. (work cigar to other side of mouth), that guy wouldn't a bought a bucket a water for a nickel if his pants was on fire." This wise answer will turn your defeat into a victory.

Not the least important aspect of this whole thing is your handling technique. As a cigar smoker, you no longer have to fumble wih a small package and betray your nervousness, dumping several white sticks onto the floor, then grappling with the one to get it lit between jittery lips.

Rather, you display prominently a rank of five or six cigars in your coat pocket for all to see, occasionally whipping one out with a slick motion not unlike that of drawing a sword, and offer it to a friend—much to his envy. With practice in the timing and flourish in your manner this can become especially useful in distracting an opponent during an argument, or in heading off the build-up to a "touch."

During an argument over politics you may get considerable satisfaction from crinkling the cellophane wrapper loudly several times as you remove it.

And, of course, you do not merely light up right away. You must run the cigar back and forth between the lips with a twisting, see-saw motion. This is an irresistible attention-getter at any dinner table and can almost hypnotize a roomful of women. The real purpose, however, is to seal the pores, which makes ALL the difference in the taste, as everyone knows. The practice also shows a devotion to your art.

Do not use an automatic lighter. This will seem incongruous. Use something rugged, comparable to a ZIPPO. To light the cigar bring the fire up, not to the tip of the cigar, but to one side of the tip. Flip the cigar over to the flame smartly, drag heavily, then flip it back off the flame. This bit of deftness will not go unnoticed.

But the actual smoking process is the clincher (ignore pun). You do not hold the cigar between the lips like a banana, roundly. There is a better way. While listening, for instance, to points of an argument in which you do not wish to be persuaded, learn to clench the cigar between the teeth, drawing the lips back to expose your teeth, like a smiling dog, roguishly, while squinting at your antagonist through the perpetual smoke haze. Chomp the cigar from side to side occasionally; and be certain never to avert your gaze or respond to his message in any way. Few opponents can withstand such a treatment for more than two or three minutes; the most staunch vociferant will wither in five.

There are many other kinds of affectations, such as the carrying of black umbrellas or empty brief cases, or the culturing of a beard; but these are false and require little imagination on the part of the individual.

The cigar is the thing, Shakespeare notwithstanding.

One last point: Never smoke the cigar with the gold band left on. This is considered a smoking perversion second only to spitting out the juice.

"I'd Walk A Mile For..."

Well, that long-awaited national report on smoking and health has been around for a couple of weeks or so, and there seems to be little room to doubt that its facts and figures are going to be discussed (and cussed) for a very long time.

Some folks will give up, or already have given up, the habit. Others will wage a losing war with the weed and rationalized their way back through a pack or two a day. Probably the largest group will ask why it couldn't have been, say, castor oil, instead, and go right on playing malignancy roulette while they huff and puff.

I've been thinking though about what would happen if the Surgeon General managed to come up with a report so thoroughly dreadful that every smoker in the country suddenly dropped the habit like a paper cup filled with molten lava. The consequences would be, to put it mildly, tremendous.

Now I'm not talking about the immediate consequences like a billion-dollar blow to the economy, a $250 million drop in advertising revenue, or cleaner air. I mean the other things — the important ones.

The first thing that comes to mind, of course, is Julie London. After all, that lovely creature makes pro football fans eager for the end of the first quarter simply because she can extol the virtues of a Marlboro in a voice that reminds you of Orange Blossom honey dripping off one of Grandma's biscuits. She is probably the only girl in the world who can pronounce "Flip-Top" as if it is spelled S-E-X.

A sudden demise of the smoking jag, of course, would put poor Julie out of a job. There's only one other product that you can sell with a voice like heres—and they frown on that sort of thing for television.

Julie being Julie, though, and having a "lot to like," my concern for her is probably unfounded. She'll get along. But satisfying ourselves on that point only leads us to politics.

Yes, politics. Can you imagine a news report referring to the traditional bicarbonate-of-soda-filled room?" Ridiculous. The wheels of national elections are oiled with nicotine, not money. Without the smoke-filled hotels, I foresee a time when the Democats and Republicans would be unable to find a suitable meeting place to select their candidates. That could put Maurine Neuberger in office by default (on the Seventh Day Adventist ticket, of course).

And then there are the millions upon millions of cigarette lighters. Have you ever considered another use for a Zippo besides lighting cigarettes? Probably not. But this could be dangerous. With all those lighters around, and nothing to light with them, we might well turn into a nation of pyromaniacs who go around lighting each other's neckties.

There are many other considerations to keep in mind. Think for a moment about the tattoo industry, whose profits would almost certainly slide with the vanishing of those virile, rugged cowboys and ship captains from "Marlboro Country." And for that matter, what are those cowboys and captains going to do?

One blessing in disguise might be the disapearance of cigarette vending machines with mirrors on them. No longer will your date be able to say "Wait just a minute, dear," while she trowels on lipstick in front of the mirror. A lot of people, of course, have been hoping they will take the mirrors off even if the machines stay. Apparently they're tired of looking at a coward all the time.

Still another thought that comes to mind involves the smoking jacket, which has ben the symbol of obulent leisure for years in movies and television. Somehow the though of Cary Grant sitting around in his suspenders is enough to cause the hope that smoking might not die out.

Enough kiding around with this subject. These are pretty dire consequences, and no doubt you can think of many other American traditions which would go up in smoke (ahem!) if everybody sudenly quit.

One fact to keep in mind, however, is that another habit might come to the fore to take the place of smoking. Like chewing gum, for instance. I can just see a commercial now: "I'd walk a mile for a Spearmint." Or "Have a real chew—have a Beeman's!"

Fortunately for our cancerous culture, though, it probably won't happen. After all, you can't inhale Doublemint.

Clyde Wilson Says

Curry Kirkpatrick's points against Senator Goldwater, which were printed in the last DTH issue before exams, are false and misleading in implication and occasionally in fact. They have been and will be repeated so often, however, that they must be answered.

Senator Goldwater has not said that if he were President he would end United States participation in the UN. He has said, along with many others, that reliance on the United Nations as the holy of holies of diplomacy has been carried too far. He has said that the United Nations is properly regarded as valuable in so far as it serves the legitimate aims of the Free World, that there is nothing sacred about the pronouncements of its dominant Afro-Asian bloc, and that the cause of world peace is best served by the strengthening of ties between the United States and its real friends, especially the Atlantic Alliance.

As for selling TVA, the Senator has merely asserted that it was perhaps time that the production of power in the Tennessee Valley was the realm of private enterprise as is the production of power in most of the rest of the United States. Projects like flood control and navigation, which are in the legitimate domain of the Federal Government under the Constitution, would be continued.

Goldwater is criticized for saying he would undertake military operations against vulnerable Red regimes. This is essentially what John Kennedy was praised for when he advocated stepped up guerilla warfare and exactly what John Kennedy undertook in the Bay of Pigs invasion. The only difference is that under President Goldwater the invasion would have been a decisive victory rather than a tragic defeat.

Goldwater's record as a friend of equal rights of the Negro has been firmly established in a real and personal way that neither Kennedy's or Johnson's ever has been. He has said that the Supreme Court decision was morally right but legally wrong. In short, he believes that there are better ways of settling America's racial problems than dangerous, revolutionary legislation.

No one, especially Senator Goldwater, seriously suggests ending all foreign aid. What he has said is that it could be much more wisely administered to make certain that the leaders of the nations who receive it are determined to try to better the welfare of their people and are firm military friends of the United States. Only those who believe that the United States is obligated to give away its wealth to any and all comers without the right to any return in friendship can seriously oppose such a program.

Senator Goldwater cannot yet be accused of inconsistency for his criticism of Johnson's running for two offices in 1960. Johnson ran for both offices at the same time in the general election. Goldwater has so far only filed for re-election to the Senate while seeking the nomination. If he were to win the nomination and try to run for both offices he might be blamed. Kennedy, after all, did not resign his Senate seat until after he was elected president. A less honest man than Goldwater would have conveniently forgotten his 1960 statements.

And finally, incredibly, Mr. Kirkpatrick charges Goldwater, the most consistent man prominent in American politics today, with changing his position on issues. His voting record in the Senate reveals not a single flipflop on a major issue.

What man in public life could stand an examinatiton of all his statements for 20 years without giving some indications of inconsistency?

The charges of inconsistency against Goldwater are possible mainly because he has been a philosopher of conservatism as well as a politician. He is opposed, as a philosophical conviction, to the progressive income tax, on the ground that it is a brake on the economy and is Marxist in philosophy. That does not mean that he believes it would be practical or even expedient to repeal it at the present time. Arthur Schlesinger, one of Kennedy's chief mentors, has written that he believes complete socialism is the ideal society. Who would say that he advocates the immediate establishment of complete socialism as a political project? The one is a philosophical or ideal position, not the same as a political platform.

Only a few times in a century is there a man of whom it can truthfully be said, the Presidency sought him, he did not seek the presidency.

Goldwater is such a man.

The Senator is backed by a grassroots support that is more strong and genuine than any since Theodore Roosevelt's in 1912. If Mr. Kirkpatrick doesn't believe it let him take a walk down the main street of any ordinary city in the United States. True, he is backed by few Harvard professors and Wall Street bankers. But he has already won the hearts of millions of plain Americans who want to see less rather than more government and who are tired of seeing the most powerful nation in the world brought to its knees by Cuba and Panama.

Those of us who honor Senator Goldwater know that in seeking the highest office he is subjecting himself to a campaign of hate and villification which will probably surpass any other in 20th century America, of which Mr. Kirkpatrick's attack is only a very, very mild example. We know that all rules of decency and fair play will be abandoned by his enemies if he is nominated. We know that Goldwater's complete honesty and forthrightness is the greatest weapon his enemies have against him. But it will also be the quality that endears him most to the American people when he goes before them.

The American people are not usually fooled by political attacks. They even have a way of rallying to the defense of a man who is assaulted too harshly and unfairly. Barry Goldwater is not going to be stopped by misrepresentations.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Questions

Editor, The Tar Heel:

The wave of civil rights demonstrations which has swept Chapel Hill has brought a serious question before our Honor System. Civil disobedience, in the form of violation of trespass laws, has been committed by University students. They have been found guilty by the civil courts and their cases are being investigated by the Attorney General of the Student Body.

Many questions have come up surrounding these cases. The first of these is: Is it really a violation of the law—or just civil disobedience in the name of a good cause? I maintain it is a violation and this is why as told by Thomas Jefferson: "Equal and enact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political." To me this means no matter what a person's reason it is unjust to violate the law. But some maintain that civil disobedience is the voice of discontent now as it was when our very nation was founded. It is not. The Boston Tea Party was an act of civil disobedience against a law (tax) imposed by a nation and parliament in which the American people had no voice. The laws these demonstrators violate are laws set up for the people of a community. They are not laws of oppression. In our democratic society there are peaceful ways to get things changed—initiative for example. Some say this will not work; then if it will not the majority do not want it—since our society is ruled by the majority then we shall not have it.

A second question then is: Is there a violation of the Campus Code? A person who premeditates them willfully and persistently violates the laws set by his fellow men must not be a gentleman. Furthermore after being arrested for a violation this person goes into a limp state and resists arrest. Surely this is ungentlemanly. Then I feel there is a definite reason to question a person for violation of the Campus Code.

Now the real test of the Honor System comes. The system has three choices. (1) It can find the people not guilty; (2) It can fnid the people guilty; and (3) It can do nothing.

If the council chooses the first it will find that it loses a lot of respect among the student body. People who have previously been convicted will say they have been done injustice. Others will ask—if you aren't guilty when you break the civil law when are you guilty? People outside the University will ask if we condone these actions.

If the council chooses the second it will again lose respect—only this time with a smaller segment of the student body and with more of those outside of the University community. These people think, possibly rightfully, that our system is the bastion of liberalism and free thought. But the council is in a position of representing the University through delegated authority.

If the council chooses the third: it will again be in trouble. This time it will condone the violations tacitly — without rendering a verdict and opinion. This puts the students in the position of preferring to ignore the whole situation and really infuriates those outside the university community who should stay out of our business.

There is a final possibility since this is a state school. The University administration will be forced into taking action. If the council chooses to ignore or find not guilty the administration may hand down a verdict prohibiting further participation with threat of punishment or it may punish those already convicted. This is all possible since a state supported institution cannot condone the violation of a community law.

Some of the students under question say that if anything happens they will go to court under the double jeopardy clause. But that has long been a question before the Honor System!

Serve Everyone

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The North Carolina State Attorney General says that Chapel Hill has no right to pass a public accommodations law. That is what the aldermen have been saying. We don't accept it from them and we don't accept it from the state officials either. Not until the full force of the government is brought will this be solved for all people of North Carolina.

But what is so serious is this, if the aldermen won't make so simple a law as the public accommodations law is, and would rather risk the full force of public disobedience (from both Negro and white), what will happen when all people of North Carolina begin to assert all the rights? Because there are many things that will have to follow this law.

First, the continued insult to all true Americans of public monuments to the civil war traitors in the south must be removed. How the American is to tolerate the martyrdom of these enemies of freedom is unthinkable. Our groups propose that each of them be replaced with a monument to our late great President Kennedy, who is acceptable to all people and a white man too, if that matters.

Second, the freedom of all people must be assured on the social as well as the economic levels. The decision in Brown versus Board of Education is clear on this, where it says that a child suffers from the implied inferiority of segregation. Now no logical man can say that this happens only on the public level and not on the social level and so its meaning is clear on that issue as far as the Supreme Court is concerned. All fraternities must accept all people and not on the basis of color or creed, or lose their attachment to the college or their right to own property in the town or both.

Yours truly,

Caveat . . .

Editors, The Tar Heel:

People are funny, and what they will do is often hilarious. Too many of the concerned citizens of our time fail to see the humor present in many of the events that make up the current social revolution.

I do not fully understand the outrage so many are voicing over a recent droll happening at a local motel-restaurant during a sit-in. They have belabored the incident in a very tasteless way by referring to it quite directly (in clinical terms!), and they assert that they are shocked.

But think: If we are not protected by laws, then we enter a private owned establishment at our own peril; and what befalls us there, whether in a position horizontal or vertical, is by our own risk.

Some say no such law or standards should be imposed; that we should bravely face the possibility of insult, of inconvenience (as by untrained personnel) or physical danger (as through poor sanitation) when we choose to enter private domain.

But in its wisdom our society has chosen to call certain establishments "public," and our laws have long protected citizens' rights through their restriction on private business.

You see, you never know what standards people may have, and a waitress-incident could happen to any of us unless a needed law is added.

If you do NOT have blue eyes, for instance, now: Do you always, before entering a public restaurant, scan it for signs indicating that your kind might be unwelcome, that you might be trespassing? And do you always look to see what is above you?

A VIEW FROM THE HILL

ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

An Open Letter to the Rev. B. Elton Cox of High Point, N. C.

Dear Reverend Cox,

With much interest, I read in this morning's NEWS & OBSERVER that you are contemplating setting fire to your person on Easter Sunday.

Your zeal is commendable, and I will not even attempt to dissuade you. For I am certain that you weighed carefully all the consequences before moving forward to this most important aspect of your illustrious career. Before your final combustion, however, there are several questions I would like to ask you. As North Carolina field secretary of the Congress of Racial Equality, you should be well qualified to answer them. There are only three:

(1) WHERE IS "THE LAW OF THE LAND"? For years now, Southern segregation leaders have been warned that "massive resistance" to the Supreme Court decision of 1954 constitutes anarchy. "You may not agree with it," CORE declared, "but you must obey it. It is the law of the land. We are a government of laws not of men."

Then what happened, Reverend Cox? For the past forty days Chapel Hill has been a hotbed of law-breaking. Hundreds of "demonstrators" have willfully and persistently violated ordinances which were enacted for the protection of all the citizens of the community. Feverish ministers and wild-eyed orators have advocated allegiance to something called the Moral Law of the Universe. This law, from all apparent indications, has been laid down by the Congress of Racial Equality.

The very day that James Farmer issued his ultimatum to the town of Chapel Hill, the Brooklyn chapter of CORE threatened to bring all of Manhattan to a standstill if one of its members was not released from jail. And, the day after you announced your plans for Easter, the Negro children of New York were ordered to "boycott" the public schools to "learn to fight for human freedom and dignity." One of the Men of God who instigated the project said, "We contend that there is a law higher than the compulsory attendance law. That is the moral law!"

Are we now to assume, Reverend Cox, that laws are insensitive, useless devices that are designed to be broken? Do you mean to say, sir, that Governor Wallace was acting virtuously when he followed his conscience and blocked the doorway of the University of Alabama? Surely, he was abiding by what he considered to be a "higher law."

And what if—just what if, Reverend Cox—a public accommodations law were passed in Chapel Hill. Could the merchants who had formerly opposed the law then express their dissatisfaction by violating it? And would your remarkably elastic organization once again change its policy towards law-breaking?

(2) WHERE IS YOUR LOVE OF "NON-VIOLENCE"? Did you read about the Philadelphia Mummer's Parade, Reverend Cox? Did you read how attendance dropped drastically, because "protestors" from Harlem threatened to drop bombs from windows (if the Mummers wore blackface makeup)? Do you remember a statement made last summer by your national director, James Farmer? He stated (NEW YORK TIMES, June 17, 1963) that there was a real possibility of violence in Harlem with Negroes directing their resentment at white landlords, merchants, and rent collectors.

You shrieked at Birmingham and Oxford, Reverend Cox. Why didn't these incidents arouse your indignation? Or doesn't your "moral law" encompass this particular brand of violence?

(3) WHERE IS THE "HUMAN DIGNITY" YOU SPEAK OF? Is there dignity in the screaming hordes of demonstrators who stomp and sway and chant and sit-in and "go limp"? Is there dignity in the frenzied fanaticism of a man who resolves to burn himself if a handful of local merchants do not change their policies?

If you feel so inclined, go ahead and light the match, Reverend Cox. But, frankly, it won't make me feel any more inclined to eat lunch with you.

Sincerely,
Armistead Maupin, Jr.

Movie Review

Not Too Scary, But Entertaining

By HENRY McINNIS

"Dead Ringer" starring Bette Davis, Karl Malden, Peter Lawford and Estelle Winwood. Warner Brothers.

Advertised as a sequel to "Whatever Happened To Baby Jane," which it is not, Bette Davis' "Dead Ringer" rings slightly false to its audience, "Baby Jane-type people."

Currently and allegedly offering "total terror" at the Varsity Theatre, the truth is the movie could hardly shock a frail old biddy, but it is vastly entertaining and engrossing because of Davis and the double exposure process which enables her to play opposite herself in the same scenes.

"Dead Ringer" is a dead ringer for a 1946 Davis vehicle, "A Stolen Life" in which she portrayidentical twins, one "good" and the other "bad." In both movies Bette finds it convenient to get rid of her more benevolent sister, assumes the other twin's identity and then gets caught in her deception by a lover, although a well-meaning friend knew about the hanky-panky all along.

Using the same tested formula, and capitalizing on the weakness of moviegoers' memories, this movie could have scared the hell out of people if the script had allowed Bette to do what comes unnaturally. At it is, both sisters are fairly sane and Davis makes too little difference in their interpretation.

Direction by Paul Henried is sluggish and inconsequential. The "surprise" plot twists were more teasing than horrifying.

Andre Previn's music is singularly effective and appropriate, particularly in the harpsichord scoring, which was also used with telling dramatic and emotional impact in "Baby Jane." In both movies, Bette's evil personality is underseored by a strikingly macabre musical theme which reminds one of the leitmotif device in Wagnerian opera. The slashing of the ominous string bass notes renders a properly bizarre mood to be the ghastly proceeds.

"Petah" Lawford was suitably droll and debonair and Karl Malden turned in his usual, competent performance as the sincere suitor. Estelle Winwood is a delight as the religious lady who comes to comfort Bette. These two seasoned actresses have a classic style. Watching them together is like hearing the counterpoint in a bach fugue.

Although it must be said that "Dead Ringer" is a disappointing follow-up for Bette Davis, she manages to hold the center stage with her incomparable presence and electricity, saving the picture's morbidity from developing into rigor mortis.

While this jostling was taking place, the bus was permitted to proceed from the entrance of the circular driveway—where it had been halted—up to the front of the building where Mayor Rea stood waiting.

Newsmen were kept at a distance of about 200 yards, but saw Rea and several other officials climb aboard the bus.

It was later explained that Rea read a city ordinance—adopted Tuesday night—saying he could not accept the Negro students because the school was overcrowded and that additional students would put local authorities in violation of school fire and safety laws.

The formalities took only about three minutes, and then the bus, driven by a Negro, rolled out of the driveway and headed back to nearby Tuskegee, where the Negroes had first assembled in the morning at the Macon County School Board.

Yack, DTH Positions To Be Filled

Interviews for a number of salaried positions on the staff of UNC publications will be held within the next three weeks, Publications Board Chairman Martin Lancaster announced yesterday.

An editor and a business manager are needed for the Carolina Handbook. The salary per year of each is approximately $100.

The Yackety-Yack will need an editor and a business manager. Editorship of the Yack will pay a yearly income of $750, while the business manager will receive about $600.

A replacement for Art Pearce, business manager of the DTH, will also be selected. The job pays approximately $1,000.

Junior-Year-Abroad Program In Lyons

UNC Year-At-Lyons Begins In 1964; Frautschi To Direct First Excursion

By PETER RANGE

How would you like to spend your junior year in France?

Want to speak fluent French, live with a French student or family, soak up a year of French culture and Fifth Republic politics, and still get full credit at UNC?

Thirty UNC (as well as State and WC) students wil lbe able to do this beginning next year when the UNC Year-At-Lyons program will open its doors in Lyons, France. The Carolinians abroad will attend an intensive six-week language course in September and October in Lyons and then register for two semesters at the Universite de Lyons on November 1.

Courses will range largely in languages and the humanities in the beginning years, but more social sciences will be added as the program grows. Emphasis will be on French language, literature, and culture.

To help the students with their course choices and other problems there will be a director from the UNC faculty in Lyons each year. Dr. Richard Frautschi, Associate Professor of French, will direct the first UNC Year - At - Lyons. Dr. Frautschi will also arrange special seminars and tutorial sessions not normally available to French students, administer exams and credit transfers, organize some excursions and group trips, and generally coordinate the junior year abroad.

All students with sophomore standing are encouraged to apply, no matter what their majors are. Each applicant must have finished French 4 (or equivalent) by the end of this semester, he must have a B average in his French courses and a B-minus over-all average. Dr. Frautschi especially encourages students of high academic calibre who are interested in foreign cultures to apply. General selections will be based on academic record, language proficiency, and personality.

The entire cost for the year abroad is expected to run several hundred dollars higher than the cost of an academic year at UNC. Various forms of financial aid and scholarships will be made available for deserving students. No good student should hesitate to apply for financial reasons.

The group will journey to France together in early September, spend several days in Paris, then proceed to Lyons for the six-week language school. After the year in Lyons, they will be free to return with the group or separately, with sufficient time for extensive individual travel in the summer.

Housing will be with French students in dormitories and with some French families. Some students may eat a few meals with families and others in the University cafeteria. The UNC Year - At - Lyons, unlike many American junior year abroad programs, will not have its own building or teachers. It will be very decentralized in an attempt to encourage contacts with French students rather than Americans.

All interested students can obtain further information and application blanks from the Secretary, or from Dr. Frautschi, 315 Dey Hall.

Only Three Cheating Cases During Final Examinations

Two men were suspended and another found innocent in Men's Council post-exam trials last week.

Only one of the three cases involved cheating on exams, very few compared to over 20 exam cases last spring and 13 last February.

One more exam cheating case will be tried next week, according to Attorney General Buzzy Stubbs.

In the first case, a student was suspended for one semester for stealing books last spring and selling them. The student's trial was put off because he was not in school this past semester.

The defendant pleaded innocent to the charge. He testified that he had found the books with no name in them in the social room of his dormitory. He felt that this was not the same as taking the books from someone's room although he did realize that his action was not completely right.

The Council said that his act was just as dishonest as taking books from someone's room, because the books were not his.

The owner of the books traced the defendant through the store where they were sold.

In an exam cheating case, a student was turned in by another student who claimed she saw him look at his notes placed on the floor beside him.

The defendant pleaded innocent, saying he had only reached down to his notes to get some scratch paper.

The accuser spoke to the teacher after allegedly seeing the defendant reach down to his notes five times. The teacher removed the notes.

The Council checked the exam against the confiscated notes and found the defendant had not taken anything from the notes. He was found innocent.

In the final case, a junior pleaded guilty to plagiarizing two term papers for two different courses under the same teacher.

The teacher caught it on the second paper when he recognized some of the student's work as coming from a reference book.

Hospital Is Also School

Children needing hospital care can keep up their school work if they're patients at N.C. Memorial Hospital.

And going to school at the hospital now is a lot more like real school than it was two years ago.

Instruction used to be given wherever a teacher and a young patient could find a little privacy. But now a small observation room located in the middle of the seventh floor play area has become a formal schoolroom, complete with a blackboard.

Soft beige-colored walls, thick wall-to-wall carpeting, a globe of the world on the teacher's desk and shelves of books (ranging from "The Green Fairy Book" to "Adventures in American Literature") provide a cozy and comfortable setting for two hours of classes each weekday.

School must play second fiddle to medical treatment, so some youngsters spend only an hour in school each day. Others may attend the full session from 10 a.m. until noon.

Any convalescing youngster, even if he's confined to a wheelchair or to the hospital's well-known "cast cart," is eligible for professional instruction in grades one through 12.

Library Extends For Modern Civ

William A. Pease, Undergraduate Librarian, has announced that rules in the Undergraduate Library have been changed to provide better service to the 2,500 students in Modern Civilization.

Books will only be due once a day this semester instead of twice a day, as in the fall sefester. A book checked out at any time during the day is due in at 10 a.m. the following day. In addition, books withdrawn on Saturday are not due until Monday.

Pease stressed that these changes apply only to Modern Civilization books in the Library and not to the other reserve collections.

Methodist Elders Reward Chapel Hill Youth Group

By HANNAH MILLER
In The Charlotte Observer

A group of intense UNC students are seeking religious truths in out-of-the-way places —in Broadway plays, in politicians' conversations, even in court.

A group of their elders gave them a new headquarters for their searchings Thursday, a modern building in Chapel Hill that will include everything from a library to a coffee-drinking lounge.

The students belong to the Wesley Foundation at Chapel Hill, a student organization sponsored by the Methodist Church.

Their elders are members of the Methodist Inter-Conference Commission on University Religious Work, headed by Dr. Arthur Kale of the Duke Divinity School faculty.

The commission, meeting in Charlotte, approved the building plans drawn by Cameron Associates of Charlotte. The $250,000 two-story building, to include a chapel, will present a beige brick and white concrete, quartz and stone face to the public.

Rev. Bob Johnson, campus chaplain, said construction will begin in early summer and should be completed by the spring of 1965. It will replace an old two-story frame house that now sits on the new building's Pittsboro Street site.

From this house, the UNC students have conducted far-ranging studies into the whole field of religion that have taken them from books to New York slums and back to books again.

Thirty of the students are now engaged in a special venture designed to make them informed Christian laymen. They form a community of lay scholars. For two years, this community does concentrated study in theology, meeting once a week to swap thoughts gleaned from reading. The students are not necessarily Methodists; they only need to be interested in gaining religious insight while they get a university education.

One of the future goals of the foundation is to add a residential section to the new building so that these scholars can live there while they study.

Each Easter, the Wesley Foundation sponsors a trip to New York, where its members see plays and talk to prominent persons in a variety of fields.

They have met with William Buckley, conservative political writer; Norman Thomas, former Socialist candidate for the presidency; and with Paddy Chayefsky, well-known playwright.

They have toured art galleries and Harlem. In Harlem, they studied the work of the East Harlem Protestant Parish, a religious organization that does everything from fight dope addiction to organize rent strikes against slum landlords.

Baptists Buy Battle Home

The former home of UNC President Kemp Plummer Battle, one of the oldest houses in Chapel Hill, has been sold to the Baptist State Convention for $102,500.

It is currently known as the Booker Property, and is situated adjacent to the University on Battle Lane.

James Canseler, Baptist chaplain of the University, said plans call for a new Baptist Student Union Building to be erected on the property within the next three years. The new building will serve as a center for the activities of both ministerial and other students of the Baptist faith, and will be open to students of all faiths. It will parallel the functions of student centers run by other faiths on campus.

Canseler said the present center, located on East Rosemary Street, will be sold to defray the cost of the new site.

The Cigarette And UNC; Things Back To Normal

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Eccentric old ladies smoking cigars, "jumpy and jittery" girls working behind the counter, former cigarette smokers struggling to keep burning an unfamiliar pipe.

These are some of the sights you might have seen around the UNC Book Exchange the first days following the release of the Surgeon General's report on smoking. But, according to Tom Shetley, manager of the Book Exchange, things are back to normal now.

"Cigarette sales don't seem to have been affected to any great degree," he says, "although certain brands have been hurt. Our volume of over-the-counter sales is very large and does not seem to have changed.

"When the report first came out, a few eccentric old ladies stopped smoking cigarettes and started smoking cigars, but the reports are that most of the cigar and pipe smokers have gone back to cigarettes."

Shetley notes that the sale of Lark, mentioned in the report in connection with its filter, has "more than ttripled." He says the company's factory in Durham is now working a ten-hour day six days a week compared to eight hours four times a week before the report's release in order to meet the new demand for its product. "Before the report came out," says Shetley, "no one was buying Lark."

Shetley says that the report caused quite an uproar in his own backyard, the Book Exchange. "All the girls in the office gave up smoking," he says, "but they have all gone back, and I was glad when they started back. People get nervous, jumpy and jittery when they give up smoking.

"Some people suggested at first, that we stop selling cigarettes on campus, but I don't think that would have any effect. People would just go up town to buy them."

Scandinavian Oldtimers Win; Soviets Now Have 21 Medals

INNSBRUCK, Australia (UPI) —A couple of tireless old-timers, speedskater Knut Johannesen of Norway and skier Sixten Jernberg of Sweden, taught the youngsters a gold medal lesson in the Winter Olympics Wednesday while Russia gained its eighth victory and the United States trailed in bobsledding.

The Soviet team now has 21 medals—tying its team output in the entire 1960 Winter Olympics at Squaw Valley, Calif.

Johannesen, 31, and Jernberg, a living legend in skiing who will be 35 Thursday, both were supposed to be over the hill at winning long-distance races.

But Wednesday it was Johannesen who led the way to a 1-2-3 Norwegian sweep of the men's 5,000 meter speedskating in Olympic record time of 7:34.8 and forced defending champion Victor Kosichkin of Russia to settle for fourth place although he, too, broke the old record.

And Jernberg, coming back in the same race he won eight years ago, led a 1-2 Swedish finish in the 50-kilometer 31-mile cross-country ski race, the longest of all Olympic races in any sport, and then announced he will retire from competition this year.

In other developments:

. . . Victory Emery of Montreal boomed Canadian hopes for the first Maple Leaf gold medal by seizing the halfway lead in the four-man bobsled with the help of a course-record race in the first heat. The U.S. stayed in the hot fight for a medal as Bill Hickey of Keene, N. Y., steered one sled into fifth place and Larry McKillip of Saranac Lake, N. Y., piloted the other into seventh in a tight race.

. . . Russia clung to a slender lead in hockey by crushing Germany, 10-0 after Canada whipped Finland, 6-2. Each has a 5-0 record, but the Soviets have a better goals-per-game average.

. . . Australia finished 1-2 in the men's two-man tobogganing, as a U.S. sled ridden by Ronnie Walters of Garden Grove, Calif. and Jim Higgins of San Gabriel, Calif., sailed off an ice wall in a spectacular crash. Higgins was knocked out, but neither Yank was seriously hurt.

. . . Claudia Boyarskikh, a 24-year-old Siberian schoolteacher, became a double gold medal winner for Russia, adding the 5 kilometer cross-country title to the 10-kilometer she won on Saturday.

. . . The Soviet Union also gained a third place in the women's ski race to run its overall total of medals to 21. Norway has 10, but only two gold.

As expected, the U. S. team did not add to its total of three medals during the day. The Yanks were outclassed in both of the distance races, the best being 28th by Larry Damon of Burlington, Vt., in the 50-kilometer ski and 20th by Dick Hunt of La Crescenta, Calif., in the 5,000 meter speedskating.

The only U.S. sled to finish in tobogganing, ridden by Ray Fales of Royal Oak, Mich., and Nicholas Mastromatteo of Santo Maria, Calif., was last in a 13-team field. There were no U.S. entries in the women's ski race.

Any hopes the Yanks may have had of another surprise in speedskating like the gold medal triumph of Terry McDermott of Essexville, Mich., in the 500 meters Tuesday died quickly.

Johannesen, a gold medal winner at 10,000 meters in 1960, whipped over the 5,000 meters in 7:38.4, almost 10 seconds under the old mark of 7:48.7 set in 1956 bf Russia's Boris Shilkov.

Completing the clean sweep, which started jubilant Norwegians celebrating that they are again kings of long-distance skating, were Per Ivar Moe in 7:38.6 and Fred Anton Maier in 7:42.0. The time for Johannesen, a carpenter from Oslo, was the best of his career.

Jernberg's gold medal was the third of his career and he admitted, "This is the tops — I never expected this."

Phoenix Boasts Finest Field

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI) — The on again, off again Phoenix Open, boasting the finest golf field of the 1964 campaign, gets off on schedule Thursday at the Phoenix Country Club for the 29th consecutive year.

And the happiest man about the whole thing may be Arnold Palmer, who gets a chance to shoot for an unprecedented fourth consecutive championship here.

The PGA and the tournament's sponsor, the Phoenix Thunderbirds, finally got around to signing a contract—just 10 hours before the pros teed off in the pro-amateur competition Wednesday.

The tournament was "canceled" by the PGA Sunday night because the Thunderbirds refused to sign a contract giving the PGA control of television and radio funds.

They field, in addition to Palmer, includes National Open champion Julius Boros; Masters and PGA champion Jack Nicklaus, former Masters king Gary Player, making his first start of the year, British Open champion Bob Charles, left-hander from New Zealand; French Open champion Bruce Devlin of Australia, British Ryder Cup star Geoffrey Hunt, Tony Lema, Gene Littler, Juan Tortillas and a host of other stars.

DTH's King Says Skater Is 'All Right'

INNSBRUCK, Austria (SOB)—Wayne (Snow) King said yesterday he had never seen anything quite like Lidia Skoblokova the famous Russian speed skater who has won four Olympic gold medals here this week.

"She's a whole lot of woman," King moaned in the Innsbruck Ice Lounge here.

"She's not only got poise on skates, but even on her own two feet, she can really move. Lidia's the fastest girl I've ever known."

King, here on special assignment for the DTH from Winter Sports Editor Flurry Iceflatlip, mumbled, "What the hell! Even if the U.S. hasn't made any platinums, er I mean won any medals, we're still ahead of Croatia, Iraq and Mississippi."

"Associations with athletes like Lidia and athletic supporters like Jim McKay give me a warmth that melts all the ice in this goblet.

"And, oh, that Austrian booze."

McKay, a wayward TV reporter, was last seen chasing an Italian bobsledder (female) off into the Lizum Valley. "The Ice Capades were never like this," he shouted back to Curt Gout-E.

Grid Practice Set For 17th

Sports shorts during the semester break:

UNC's football team will get off to an easier start this fall (schedule-wise) than last year, even if one of the opponents is the same team that walloped the Tar Heels, 31-0, in 1963.

The Carolina schedule lists three home games at the start of the year, with Michigan State becoming the first Big Ten team ever to play in Kenan Stadium (Sept. 26). A second Western Conference member, Michigan, will come to Kenan in 1965.

The Spartan engagement in opener (N.C. State) on Sept. 19 and another home game (Wake Forest) on Oct. 3.

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson thinks the schedule insures four sellouts during the grid year. "Our N.C. State opener normally draws a full house, and the Oyster Bowl game in October (against Maryland at Norfolk, Va.) should also be a sellout. Then there is Duke in the home finale and LSU at Baton Rouge."

The schedule (home games in caps):

Sept. 19—N.C. STATE
Sept. 26—MICHIGAN STATE
Oct. 3—WAKE FOREST
Oct. 10—LSU (Baton Rouge, night
Oct. 17—Maryland (Norfolk)
Oct. 24—SOUTH CAROLINA
Oct. 31—Georgia
Nov. 7—Clemson
Nov. 14—Virginia
Nov. 21—DUKE

North Carolina's football team will open spring drills on Feb. 17 with the wind-up against the alumni tentatively set for March 21.

"The starting time is a little earlier than I perfer," said Coach Jim Hickey after his announcement. "But the vacation break here this year practically eliminates any possibility of a later start."

Hickey said the regular practice schedule will call for workouts on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays. A total of 20 days are allowed by NCAA rules.

More than 20 letttermen will participate in the drills, but seniors will be excused from the opening week. Two probable starters next fall, Gary Black and Ken Willard, will miss grid activity because of baseball. Both are outfielders.

Baseball Coach Walter Rabb, whose club figures to be among the best in the ACC, possibly the nation, this spring, has already lost one promising prospect.

Sophomore Tom Weir, a Mormon, has transferred to Brigham Young University this semester. Weir came to UNC from Toyko, Japan, where his father is stationed in the serivice. Rabb admits he could have used Weir's booming bat .

Three UNC football players were chosen to South Carolin's all-opponent team. All-America end Bob Lacey, center Chris Hanburger and halfback Ken Willard were the nominees. Willard was a unanimous choice.

SCEF President Says, 'Seek Your Rights'

Shuttlesworth Speaks Here Last Night

By FRED SEELY

The spectre of Chapel Hill becoming a national target for integrationist forces was painted last night by yet another nationally prominent Negro leader.

Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, told a crowd of 250 at the First Baptist Church that "Chapel Hill could become the center of national attention.

"It would be a shame if this had to happen, because this town is not like Birmingham or Danville—it is a pleasant town which has made great progress in civil rights.

"They say that 95 per cent of the town is integrated, and why should we put emphasis here? Well, there's still a problem, and we want to be able to look at this area as being 100 per cent.

"The integrationist's job is nearer completion in Chapel Hill than anywhere in the South, and we want to finish it so it can be used as an example.

"My mother had nine kids, and she knew she couldn't whip us all. So she just took one or two of the biggest and showed the rest of us how it was done."

Also attending the rally was Floyd McKissick, national chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality. Shuttlesworth was introduced by John Salter, field organizer in this area for SCEF.

In addition to his work with SCEF, Shuttlesworth, in addition to his work with SCEF is secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, headed by Rev. Martin Luther King. He also is chairman of the Alabama Christian Movement for Civil Rights.

Shuttlesworth is currently on a speaking tour which will carry him as far north as Massachusetts and as far west as California, and he indicated he would be "perfectly willing to return to Chapel Hill at any time to aid in demonstrations, whether it be through organization or participation."

He told a press conference earlier that his mission last night was "to encourage people to seek their rights—to protest injustice where injustice exists."

He also expressed his belief that the sit-in techniques be continued, saying that it was the best way to fully dramatize the goals of the movement and bring the problem out in the open.

He commented on the recent threat by Rev. B. Elton Cox of High Point to immolate himself if progress was not made in Chapel Hill, saying "Negroes do not have a tradition or a custom of burning themselves up — they only want to burn up segregation and discrimination.

"I presume that Rev. Cox was expressing his personal feelings at the moment — I was very surprised to read his statement."

Cox today told newsmen that he had been misquoted, saying that he had no intent of immolating himself.

A demonstration through town was scheduled after the rally. Full details wil be carried in tomorrow's DTH, as deadline prevented coverage.

Plans Are Given For Spring Rush

Plans for spring Informal Rush were announced this week by Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils.

Peggy Ann Harriss, president of the Panhellenic Council, yesterday urged women students to participate in spring Informal Rush beginning Friday, February 14. Miss Harriss said, "Rush is a valuable experience enabling you to meet many people who might become lifelong friends."

Each sorority has one or more openings for membership. Rushees are invited to sorority houses for meals and informal parties.

The Panhellenic Council yesterday announced a change in the procedure for signing for rush. All women students interested in spring Informal Rush must sign up in Daryl Farrington's office, 202 South Building, by Feb. 8. This includes all those who signed up for informal rush during the Fall semester.

On Thursday, Feb. 13 an informal Panhellenic Reception will be held from 7-8 p.m. in Graham Memorial. All coeds signed up for rush are required to attend.

All rushees should sign preference lists in Daryl Farrington's office on Monday, Mar. 6 between 9-11 a.m. Bids will be issued that afternoon by each sorority.

Any women students failing to sign for rush or having questions concerning rush may call Peggy Ann Harriss at 968-9005 or Betty Humphries at 968-9189 before the Panhellenic Reception Thursday night.

Charles Battle, president of the Infraternity Council, this week emphasized the importance of spring Informal Rush to each fraternity. "Fraternities," he said, "should be interested in informal rush since deferred rush begins next year."

Each fraternity may decide whether to participate in rush. The fraternities taking part are sending invitations through the campus mail to those men students whom they know are interested in rush. However, Battle pointed out, "Just because you don't receive an invitation does not mean you can't participate."

Informal fraternity rush will be held Monday, Sept. 10 through Wednesday, Sept. 12. During this period rushees may visit fraternity houses during the day and from 7-10 p.m. Bids will be issued at any time during rush and rushees may then pledge.

Job Conference Is Scheduled

The placement Service is sponsoring a career conference next wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in Room 8, Gardner Hall.

Mrs. E. L. Smith of the Procter and Gamble Company will speak on "How to Evaluate a Company", and a discussion period will follow. The meeting is open to all students, and the topic should be especially interesting to those concerned with selecting a future employer.

Peace Corps Recruits Here

Five Peace Corps employees will visit the campus February 16-22 for a special recruititng program.

The week of the Peace Corpsmen's visit has been designated North Carolina Peace Corps Week by Governor Sanford. Other recruiting programs will be conducted in the state during that period.

The recruiters visiting will maintain headquarters in the YM-YWCA building. Part of the program will involve showing the new Peace Corps film, and Peace Corps examinations will be given to all those interested in volunteering for Peace Corps service. Those interested in taking the examinations may sign up with Miss Anne Queen of the YWCA.

Swag Grimsley, a 1961 B.A. graduate of UNC, is a member of the Washington, D. C. Peace Corps recruiting staff and will be among those visiting the UNC campus.

Preliminary interviews are being held for candidates for the position of Business Manager of the Daily Tar Heel for the coming school year. Although the job requires approximately 4½ hours of work per day, the pay is excellent and the experience worthwhile.

To be considered, candidates should have had some business experience and should be in good academic standing with the University. Interested persons should contact Art Pearce any afternoon at the DTH Office on the 2nd floor of Graham Memorial or call 933-1163.

Magic Word Is Checkmate As UNC-Duke Play Chess

UNC will battle Duke in still another field of endeavor this Sunday—chess.

The well-balanced Tar Heel team will host the Blue Devils at 2 p.m. in GM's Roland Parker Lounge No. 3.

Vernon Robinson will probably play the No. 1 board for UNC. Last year he placed fifth in the national junior chess tournament.

Chess Club president Ron Simpson will probably play the second board and Fred Fornoff the third. Simpson says he and the others are about even in ability.

Last year UNC was undefeated in the few matches it played, and the players placed well individually in tournaments.

Last weekend Robinson, Simpson and Fornoff won their games to help a team of UNC students from North Carolina to a 9-5 win over UNC players from South Carolina.

Simpson thinks highly of Jerry Fink, Duke's top player, but he doesn't believe Duke's balance matches UNC's.

The UNC team plans to meet State and Davidson in future dual matches, as well as entering a Duke-sponsored tournament.

Retracts Threat

HIGH POINT—The Rev. B. Elton Cox apparently has retracted his threat to burn himself alive in the streets of Chapel Hill if the town does not desegregate completely by Easter.

Cox, state field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), told a newsman here yesterday that what he had said was: "If I thought it would do any good, and if I were not a Christian, I would do it."

Reporters who covered Cox's address to an integration rally in Chapel Hill last Sunday denied they had misquoted Cox, and pointed out he was asked immediately following his speech to clarify what he had said.

They said he repeated that he was "considering" burning himself in the manner of Vietnamese Buddhist monks, and he was "advocating" that other Negroes give the idea similar consideration.

Cox's statement drew a stern rebuke from James Farmer, national director of CORE.

"If he was serious," Farmer said, "I am sure he was speaking for himself and not for our organization."

McKissick Okays Television Debate

Durham attorney Floyd McKissick has accepted a challenge from a Raleigh segregationist to debate the integration issue on radio or television.

McKissick, national chairman of CORE, acknowledeged receipt of a letter from W. C. Brown, editor of an anti-integration news letter, "The Action Press," challenging him to debate on "integration vs. segregation or civil rights vs. states rights."

"Any time he wants to is fine with me," McKissick said. "I just got his letter today and haven't gotten a chance to contact him but if he wants to go ahead with this, I'll do it."

Brown said the debate could "enlighten the population to the fact that there are several varying opinions in this matter."

Acting as president of the Southern Association for the Restoration of States Rights, Brown said he believed solving the in-

The Panama Crisis

News Analysis

Unpopular though the thought may be, the indications are that the flag-raising incident which triggered off anti-American riots in Panama is going to be expensive for the United States.

Panama, obviously feeling that it is dealing from a position of strength, is demanding at the most that the United States give up the Panama Canal or consent to its becoming an international waterway and at the least that the United States agree to a revision of its treaty rights over the canal.

Pressing its attack, Panama has brought charges of aggression against the United States before the Organization of American States (OAS).

On its own part, the United States has maintained that its forces acted with "restraint" against mobs "infiltrated and led by extremists, including persons trained in Communist countries" and that at no time did these forces leave the U.S.-controlled Canal Zone.

There are unfortunate circumstances on each side.

President Johnson has termed "imprudent" those American high school students of the Canal Zone who raised the American flag in their school yard in violation of a U. S.-Panama agreement which decreed that American and Panamanian flags should be flown side by side. Thus, these students in their teens managed to take over U.S. foreign policy.

It needed no great foresight on the part of U. S. civilian and military leaders in the zone to see that Panamanian nationalists and Communist infiltrators were awaiting only an excuse to repeat the mob action of 1959 which was triggered by the same issue.

Further, there was the attitude taken by the 50,000 zonal residents against the Panamanians across the line.

Unfortunate for both sides was the fact that this is an election year.

Unfortunate also was the fact that the United States never had made concessions in the Canal Zone except under pressure and that it has operated under no declared policy.

Ranged on the other side was this:

An oligarchy of ruling families for years has ruled the destiny of Panama. Any U. S. agreement to give back land no longer necessary to operation of the canal or to permit Panama business firms to operate

Magnuson Puts Up Canal Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D.-Wash. introduced a bill Thursday calling for immediate study of the feasibility of a new sea-level canal to link the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

The Magnuson proposal would require a report to Congress within six months.

The bill would authorize the secretaries of state and defense and the Atomic Energy Commission to conduct the survey. This would include the feasibilty of excavating the canal by nuclear explosives.

U. S. Criticizes Vietnamese

SAIGON, South iet Nam (UPI) — U. S. military advisers Thursday shraply criticized a South Vietnamese army operation against a Communist guerrilla stronghold in the Mekong River Delta as scarcely worth the cost in lives and equipment for the results it brought.

The massive operation, said to have been the largest helicopter-backed assault in military history, was directed against Communist strongholds on Thanh Phu Island, 65 miles south of Saigon. It involved 20,000 government troops, lasted 20 days and ended Wednesday.

Watutsi Army Nears Rwanda

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — A ragged army of 3,000 giant Watutsi tribesmen was reported marching from the Congo on neighboring Rwanda Thursday bent on avenging the alleged massacre of thousands of their tribesmen by tiny warriors of the fierce Bahutu tribe.

The Watutsis, members of a tribe of proud, 7-foot-tall fighting men, were described as armed only with bows and arrows as they headed for Rwanda where unofficial reports have said some 8,000 of their felow tribesmen have been wiped out by the Bahutus.

The newspaper Daily Nation here said the Watutsis will face a Belgian - officered Rwanda army equipped with machine-guns, mortars and automatic weapons. One missionary in the border area was quoted as saying: "They will be mown down like flies."

Olympians Land In Austria Jail

INNSBRUCK, Austrlia (UPI)— Three U.S. Olympic team members Thursday led police in a wild stolen car chase, fought to resist arrest and landed in jail for trial, Innsbruck officials said.

Police said Bill Marolt, 20-year-old Aspen, Colo., skiier, and tobogganers George R. Farmer, 25, of Seattle, Wash., and Mike Hessel, 21 of Eugene, Ore., will be tried Friday in district court on charges of resisting arrest.

According to police, the three athletes "were celebrating" early Thursday morning, allegedly broke into a French automobile and drove it the wrong way around a downtown traffic circle —into the face of a police car.

Police chased the Americans for about two minutes. Officials said Marolt was allegedly driving and tried to park the car, allegedly damaging another vehicle while doing it. Police said when they tried to arrest Marolt, Farmer and Hessel came out swinging.

Alabama Mayor Goes To Court

NOTASULGA, Ala. (UPI) — Mayor James Kayo Rea, explaining in advance he has no intention of challenging the U.S. government, Thursday accepted a summons to appear in federal court Friday to explain why he turned six Negroes away from a segregated school.

Rea told the Negroes during the confrontation Wednesday that he was rejecting them because the school already was overcrowded and that to add more pupils would put authorities in violation of fire and safety codes.

He made clear he would offer this line of reasoning as his defense when he appears at 11 a.m. (EST) Friday before Federal Judge Frank Johnson in nearby Opelika.

"If the court orders me to admit the Negroes, I will not defy the court. But it's my sworn duty to protect the people of my community and that's what I'm trying to do," Rea said Thursday.

It was Johnson who ordered the Negroes admitted. He took the step when the state closed a high school that 12 Negroes were attending in nearby Tuskegee. Whites totally boycotted the Tuskegee school when the Negroes entered under federal court order last fall.

Another school boycott by whites appeared to be mounting Thursday in rural Shorter, where Johnson sent the other six of the 12 Tuskegee Negroes. Only 82 whites showed up for classes out of a total enrollment of 144, and 16 of those who did report later walked out with their books under their arms.

Castro Balks When Florida Arrests 38

KEY WEST, Fla. (UPI)—Cuba Thursday ordered the cut-off of fresh-water pipeline serving the U. S. Navy base at Guantanamo Bay in retaliation for the seizure and jailing of 36 Cuban fishermen caught poaching in Florida waters.

The Navy said that water into the base in Cuba was cut off at 1:58 p.m., EST.

The water source is four miles from the base, and water in the pipes continued to flow after the source was shut off.

A note handed to the Swiss ambassador in Havana at 11:15 a.m. gave the United States until noon—or 45 minutes—in which to release the fishermen or have the pipeline shut down.

The new Cuban crisis developed swiftly a few hours after the state of Florida took custody of the fishermen from federal authorities and carted them off to the Monroe County jail in Key West .

The note demanding the release of the fishermen was handed to the Swiss ambassador by Cuban Foreign Minister Raul Roa.

Less than three hours after the announcement of the action by the Cubans, Key West radio stations broadcast an order for all Coast Guardsmen to report to their base immediately.

In Washington, U.S. officials expressed shock at the Cuban government reaction but said there are ample fresh water reserves at the "Gitmo" naval base to care for the 10,500 military and civilian personnel there.

A representative of the Czechoslovakian Embassy in Washington was reported en route here late Thursday at the request of the Cuban fishermen. The Czech diplomat was flying to Miami, presumably to arrange for legal counsel.

Florida Atty. Gen. James W. Kynes said the state could see no reason for dropping the charges against the fishermen in the face of the retaliatory move by the Cuban government. He said, however, that he was willing to cooperate with the U.S. State Department if asked to do so.

Of the 38 fishermen seized Sunday along with their four vessels, the state actually seeks to prosecute 29. Two of the fishermen defected and received political asylum in this country Wednesday.

The state dropped charges against seven others, all juveniles of 14 to 16 years of age, at a court hearing Thursday morning and asked the federal government to deport them as soon as possible.

A member of the UNC faculty since 1935, Dean Sitterson received B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees at UNC.

Popcorn, Anyone?

The old saw about "I can't stop eating them" apparently applies to popcorn as well as peanuts.

An unidentified man walked into the Varsity Theater Tuseday night and asked for a bag of popcorn. When told that it was closing time and they were out of the stuff anyway, he pulled a gun and pointed it at the doorman, John Bobba.

"I'm gonna shoot you," he said.

He changed his mind.

"No, I'm gonna shoot myself".

Then he left, departing for parts unknown.

The police are investigating.

Also, there will be a skit featuring several prominent faculty members. O'Toole emphasized that the show would not be limited to Freshmen.

Crooks Get Transmission From Local Auto Dealer

Thieves lifted a four-speed transmission from a new car at Harris-Conners Chevrolet Tuesday night.

The car was located in the garage of Harris-Conners' new building on the Durham Boulevard, two miles north of Chapel Hill. It was awaiting service prior to sale.

Orange County Chief Deputy Sheriff Paul Cook said that the theft of the transmission alone took between two and four hours. Also missing were three sets of mechanic's wrenches valued at $1,500, two cases of motor oil and 238 spark plugs. Total value of the stolen materials, including the transmission, was estimated at $2,000.

The garage, not yet a year old, was entered through a forced back door. Inside, a glass partition was smashed to provide entrance to the auto parts room.

The State Bureau of Investigation has been called in, but as yet has uncovered no significant leads, other than determining that the building was entered sometime after 1 a.m., Wednesday. That is the time when Sheriff's Deputy W. E. Clark Jr. last checked the building.

Something To Be Said, But Not Much

For any one of at least 50 excellent reasons, the Rev. B. Elton Cox has retracted his threat of self-cremation in Chapel Hill this Easter should the town not be completely desegregated by then.

He thus deserves the same kind of praise that South Carolina earned last year by admitting Harvey Gantt to Clemson—negative praise, if there is such a thing.

For South Carolina, in admitting Harvey Gantt, simply chose to obey a court order and admit one lone Negro to an otherwise completely segregated school system. State leaders thus chose not to be irresponsible, which they should not have been anyway.

Now Rev. Cox has done essentially the same thing—he has chosen not to be irresponsible, which he should not be anyway. He therefore deserves the same kind of negative praise South Carolina recieved.

And yet, this is not saying much for Cox just as it was not saying much for South Carolina.

We can only hope that his idea has not contaminated the minds of any of his followers. We expect this same prospect is now weighing heavily on his conscience, as well it should. We have had enough rash statements from all sides.

We hope, too, that the three Negro leaders in Asheboro can be prevailed upon to withdraw their threat of self-suffocation in black and white coffins. For it too is an irresponsible threat, and only serves to mar the stern pride of other Negroes who are stubbornly struggle for equal rights, in the best enduring, and thereby winning the traditions of Americans.

The GOP In Wonderland

Our hearts were gladdened immeasurably yesterday when we finally saw the name of William Cobb in print again. The last time Cobb hit print, and hit it in a big way, he was Chairman of the state Republican Party and was caught with a wife and home in Morganton, N. C., and a wife and home in Roanoke, Va.

Needless to say, he made a clean breast of the whole affair and resigned his chairmanship of the party. But now State Sen. Charles Strong (smile when you say that) of Guilford is saying that there is a strong grass roots movement under way to draft Cobb as the successor to J. Herman Saxon, who is currently head of the state GOP.

All this is extremely interesting, but so confused it begs for more facts. In the first place, Sen. Strong is an announced candidate for governor on the Republican ticket. He is currently one of three candidates, which forces the party to hold a primary this year. This is all fine, and could only add strength to the GOP by forcing them into becoming an active, aggressive party early in the year. But one little hitch has come up. Chairman Saxon thinks the field of GOP candidates is so dismal that he has said he will resign and enter the race if someone better doesn't come along pretty soon.

It doesn't look like anyone is going to come along, so we'll probably see Mr. Saxon running hard in the near future. Since he'll be running against Strong, Strong naturally wants to damage him if it is at all possible before he officially enters the campaign.

Now Strong is a fascinating sort himself. He was a minister with a large congregation up until about two months ago when he resigned to go into the insurance business. One of the first sales pitches was a letter to the parents of students suggesting and encouraging them to buy policies on their children from his company. It was written on official state stationery and signed, "Senator Charles Strong." He denied any intent to misuse his position as a Senator in his insurance venture, but refused to withdraw the letter.

Now he has suggested that Bill Cobb take over the party again, and even goes so far as to say there is strong grass roots support for Cobb. We have serious reservations about this support, especially here in the Bible Belt, but it may well exist. If it does, all we need is one or two legends, a folk song and an epic poem called "Paradise Lost" to make Cobb a real folk hero who did what all of us want to do, but just got caught.

How It All Looks From The Outside

From the Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette

A new storm center is brewing in the struggle for civil rights in the South, and a new goal has been set for a Southern town.

The town is Chapel Hill, N. C., site of the nation's oldest state university, and the goal: to open all places of public accommodations to all people.

Though news reports outside of the state have been sparce, several incidents in recent weeks point to Chapel Hill as the coming pivot-point of integration activity in the South.

While demonstrations over most of the nation have subsided since the August March on Washington, the forces in Chapel Hill have doubled, and the number of arrests for acts of civil disobedience have increased tenfold.

James Farmer, national director of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), said, in a recent speech, he considers Chapel Hill the "key to the South" and will offer full support from his national office to see the town totally desegregated.

More than 75 per cent of the town's businesses have already opened their doors to Negroes, and integration is openly advocated by most of the public officials and town leaders.

If there is to be a completely open town in the South, Chapel Hill, with its liberal reputation and history of progress in this area, would be a likely first.

Now, the battle lines have been drawn. The remaining segregated merchants are a determined lot. They have seen the town around them switch sides over the past 15 years, and they have steadfastly held their ground.

But the integrationist forces are on a crusading bandwagon with a long record of conquests. As they see before them the goal of complete desegregation, they drive forward with greater and greater enthusiasm.

Sporadic reports of violence have already been recorded, and when national organizations begin to move into the town in increased numbers, tension will stir the participants to a frenzy.

If something is not done soon to avert the impending crisis, a small liberal community in the South will become a tragedy in the eyes of the nation.

Charleston has faced such a crisis in recent years and solved its dilemma without violence or lasting scars. Chapel Hill would do well to take a lesson from our city in achieving its goal.

It can ill afford to become another Birmingham.

An All-Purpose Statement for Deplorable Events and Conditions

(Suitable for use by civic leaders, ministerial alliances, parent-teacher organizations and various other courageous, straight-talking fashioners of public opinion.)

We, the undersigned _____, deeply DEPLORE the recent outbreak of _____. We are constrained to declare, unequivocally, that it does not represent the thinking, attitude or opinion of the good people of _____. From all appearances, the occurrence was the work of a group of agitators—misguided outsiders who misunderstand the cherished way of life we here in _____ feel bound to uphold.

We call upon all citizens to unite in an effort to restore law and order to our beloved community; at the same time, we commend our local law-enforcement officials for the exemplary manner in which they have dealt with the rabble-rousers and fomenters of strife.

It can be said, on the one hand, that those members of our community who were so rudely disturbed as they innocently went about their business certainly endured inconveniences, not to say suffering. On the other hand, those who, it is alleged, were the perpetrators of the disturbance no doubt were provoked into their unseemly outburst by undesirable outside elements.

Our support goes out to all whose tranquillity has been shattered by this regrettable incident. Let us remember prayerfully that the integrity of our homes and the safety of our women and children depend upon upholding the ancient standards of sober conduct.

Finally, we urge all reporters, writers, editors and radio and TV commentators to remember that by reporting or broadcasting this kind of event they only aggravate the situation and besmirch the image of America around the world, at a time when all right-thinking citizens should be doing the utmost they possibly can to defeat communism before it can destroy our precious freedoms.

SUGGESTION: By mimeographing this all-purpose statement in quantity, you will be able, following any unfortunate development in your community, to let your strong stand be made public in the very next edition of your local newspaper.—Ed.

Student Study Asks About Speaker Ban

BY BOB O'STEEN

Ever since the Speaker-Ban Law was enacted by the North Carolina legislature, questions have been continually raised concerning not only the democratic issues involved, but the basic thinking and attitudes of those supporting the law.

A study made by two UNC graduate students investigating students' attitudes towards the Speaker-Ban Law discovered a pattern of "closed-mindedness" among the supporters of the law.

The report showed, among other things, that those students with the least knowledge of the law were most in favor of it.

The study was made by Gordon Friedman and Kenneth Sherrill, both graduate students in political science and Falk Fellows. It consisted of 104 questionaires, of five pages each, distributed to dorm residents and designed to relate Gag-Law attitudes to psychological, political, social, and economic factors.

In general: 73 percent of all students questioned opposed the law and 21 percent favored it.

Students were found to be "highly knowledgable" concerning the law, 86 percent of the students knowing one or more of the law's three prohibitive provisions.

Political: Not one who classified himself as a "liberal" favored the law. Supporting the law were 33 percent of the "conservatives" and 28 percent of the "moderates."

The report showed evidence that political apathy is conducive to support of the law. Those with the least political interest and no party identity most supported the law. Favoring the law were 36 percent of the "apolitical" students; 27 percent of the Republicans; 13 percent of the Democrats.

Relative to the present gubernatorial race: 60 percent of the I. Beverly Lake supporters favored the law. Thirteen percent of the Preyer supporters favored it.

Humanities majors tended more to be against the law than majors in the natural and social sciences.

If a student's father had a higher education, the student would be more likely to oppose the Ban-Law. Or conversely, the students favoring the law are more likely to come from a less educated family background.

Students who came from families with a lower-middle income ($5,000-$7,500) were more likely to support the law than those from higher income families. (The report cited a well-known study by Erich Fromm, Escape From Freedom, which showed that the lower-middle class in Germany was largely responsible for the ascendancy of National Socialism.)

Some of the larger percentages of religious affiliation favoring the law were: 29 percent of the Methodists; 26 percent of the Baptists; 26 percent of the non-denominational Protestants; 11 percent of the non-affiliated.

The authors pointed out that their study did not sample students living in fraternities or off campus and was not an exact cross-section of the student body, but was still useful for establishing general trends.

Laws

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The last Thursday of publication before exams the Tar Heel contained an editorial defending the recent sit-in demonstrators in Chapel Hill in the following words:

It takes more than laws to make and maintain a civilization. It takes leadership and courage and honesty. Laws, like rules, are merely guides to conduct. Some are good; some are bad . . . . it takes more courage to break laws in full knowledge and acceptance of the consequences than it does to keep them . . . . If a law is bad—if it violates the higher law of morality—then it must be changed. If no other means than intentional violation of the unjust law will work, then—following our forefathers' examples — intentional violation is justified, if not required.

Although I share your basic premise that integration is desirable, I hope you realize that such arguments as the above are very poor ones; the exact same argument, without changing a single word, could be used by someone of a different persuasion to defend the behavior of Governors Wallace and Barnett. The crucial issue is how, if at all, can we objectively determine when a group has the right to violate the law? You have avoided this more general question, yet long after the segregation controversy is a dead one, the right of civil disobedience will still be a burning one.

Georgia's English Course Ain't Bad

By LARRY DENDY
The Red and Black
U. of Georgia

One of them frequent committees which make it their business to critically study and evaluate the efforts of schools and educators recently concluded that English is the worst-taught subject in both high school and college levels.

The committee reported enough stress and emphasis can't put on grammar and tomorrow's adults won't be able to clearly and correctly write and talk.

That's silly. Everybody knows nobody can't graduate from Georgia without they've mastered English 101. And whomever heard of anybody having trouble with it?

All students know, for instance, that a preposition is a bad word to end a sentence with. And to intentionally split an infinitive in English class is just taboo.

Comma splices are rigidly stressed in class, therefore, you don't use a comma between two independent clauses.

And you learn in grammar school you shouldn't begin sentences with conjunctions. And shouldn't use incomplete sentences, either. Sentences fragments also.

Its easy to get confused with pronouns, such as their and there, who's meanings are different but which sound alike. Relative pronouns are especially thorny to students, many of who can't fathom the relationship between pronoun, subject, and object. Problems arise from indefinite pronouns, too. Several of them takes singular verbs, some must have plural verbs, and two take either one. Everyone must devise their own system for remembering what kind of verb each are followed by.

Most English students can understand and follow these few basic rules, however, some become confused by technicalities like participles and gerunds. Being difficult to understand, the student don't always grasp dangling participial phrases. And learning to recognize gerund phrases, as well as connecting them with proper verb forms, are essential to composing good English.

These are some of the fundamental things that English 101 instructors learn there students. These rules are simple, most students know them. To flatly state that English and grammar is taught bad in schools and that adults won't be able to talk and write good is something most of us can't conceive of.

Glee Club

Editors, The Tar Heel:

At the beginning of the year two groups were formed within the University of North Carolina Glee Club. These were formed as a result of the increased membership of the Club. This increased membership came about because of the expanding student body of UNC. It was decided within the club to make each of these groups separate and distinct because of the complications of running the club with two sections. It was decided that of these two groups the original group, the Men's Glee Club, would be the more formal group, a touring concert organization; and that the new group, the Gleemen, would be the less formal group, a non-extended touring organization.

The Gleemen, as a newly formed group, naturally needs more members, especially low basses and high tenors. The gleemen meet two hours a week; Monday, 4-5:00 and Wednesday, 5-6:00. The course carries 1 hr. credit per semester. Auditions will be held in Dr. Joel Carter's office in Hill Hall any week-day afternoon until February 14.

Morgan: Two Of The Best Depart

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC NEWS

In one fell swoop, the government is losing two of its most talented men. The swoop removes them for separate, personal reasons but their similar approach to different jobs produced unusal effect.

Edward R. Murrow has resigned as director of the United States Information Agency and gone to southern California for a rest to regain his health and strength after being, as he puts it, "separated from a cancerous lung."

Jerome B. Wiesner, after prolonging his stay as chairman of the president's science advisory committee, returns this weekend to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Formerly professor of electrical engineering, he will now become dean of science at MIT, a title which makes him slightly restive because it has been his observation that deans don't teach enough. He is privately determined that administrative duties won't keep him from the classroom.

Last week at a testimonial dinner given him in the State Department by his fellow scientists, Wiesner regretted that Ed Murrow could not be there because they had fought so many battles on government policy—and the impact of it—together. Besides their close and mutually admiring friendship, the important link between these two men was—and is—the fact that both of them are humanists, not in a sloppy, sentimental way but in a sense that to them people matter.

In a scientist this is a priceless attribute, all too rare, because particularly in this age of space adventure and awesome nuclear power, it is all to easy for a technician to get lost in the laboratory, swimming in formulae that may seem more important, or at least more exciting, than the human race.

This attribute of warm concern is invaluable to a journalist too because it protects him from the corrosion of cynicism that can develop from prolonged observation of the silly and suicidal things people and nations persist in doing to themselves and to each other.

Late last summer, Wiesner nearly lost his life in a boating accident off Martha's Vineyard. The very day before he flew to Texas, President Kennedy told his science adviser he was going to teach him how to sail next summer and also give him some pointers on how to deal with the press and politicians. Sensitive and impatient though he can sometimes be, Wiesner was appropriately saluted last night for his gigantic assistance in making the test ban treaty a reality. To his successor as President Johnson's counselor, Chemist, Donald Hornig, of Princeton, Jerry Wiesner leaves a legacy of scientific dedication to the fragile affairs of man.

Ed Murrow bequeathes the USIA a taller stature. He increased the quality and the volume of the Voice of America. On the sound theory that if the agency was going to explain and defend policy its head ought to sit in on policy-making meetings he won a seat for himself at the National Security Council, which for the first time will be occupied by a Negro, Carl Rowan who brings his own special talents as a newspaper and diplomat to the job.

Murrow wasn't able to do all he wanted to do in terms of improving programs and personnel but where he could he "substituted leg work for paper work" and the keen attention he paid to the distribution of books and the production of films should pay off in better understanding and good will for us abroad for years to come.

In doing all this, and more, Murrow drove himself, as usual, to the breaking point. He fell seriously ill in Iran many months before his grave bout with lung cancer. He loves the dangerous world he was born into but he has long brooded deeply about the course of men and nations and his almost wanton abuse of his health has been aimed not at any high living with a tomorrow-we-die attitude, but rather at understanding the puzzle of life a little more.

Ed Murrow, you might say, is committed to life and many times he has nearly lost his own in meeting that commitment. This explains, in part, his matchless coverage of the London blitz, why he insisted on accompanying not one but several bomber raids against the Nazis and why he drives himself at everything he does. Not long after he had taken his government post, at drastic financial sacrifice, a friend asked him how it was going. "I've never worked harder," Murrow said, "or enjoyed it more."

Undoubtedly the arresting, impeccable voice, the matinee idol look greatly helped Murrow to success in broadcasting. But the thing that has made him stand so tall in the deceptive, slippery media of radio and television is his integrity linked with courage. It was his determination, and that of his producer, Fred Friendly, which overrode the timid plaints of management and gave the public, via television, its first real measure of Senator McCarthy and his evil doings.

Ed Murrow and Jerry Wiesner are gone, for the nonce, from the Washington scene but they are both still around to voice their wise concern on things that matter and for that we can congratulate ourselves on our good luck.

County Asks Special Term

The Orange County commissioners have asked for an allocation of an extra two weeks of session of Superior Court in an effort to clear out most of the integration cases.

Most of the 500 arrests made in Chapel Hill since the demonstrations began are headed for the court, due to requests by attorney Floyd McKissick for jury trials. Jury trials are not permitted in the Chapel Hill and Orange County Recorder's Courts.

The county solicitor, Thomas D. Cooper, carried the commissioners request to the Chief Justice. The request was for the weeks of April 13 and 20, which immediately precedes a regular term set for April 27.

Zzap! Sen. Russell Plays Buck Rogers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States and Russia are both trying to develop a death ray, Chairman Richard B. Russell (D.-Ga.), of the Senate Armed Services Committee said Thursday.

But barring a major breakthrough on a death ray, an anti-missile missile, or some other revolutionary weapons system, the United States should stay ahead of Russia militarily through the 1960s, Russell said.

The Armed Services Committee and the Senate military appropriations subcommittee Wednesday finished hearing three days of testimony by Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara on U.S. military posture.

Russell did not give details on the death ray, but the United States is known to be conducting research on it.

Wise Guys

Meaning fellows with a measure of wisdom, knowing many (if not all) the ladies require more than a card. George has made it easy for you, piling his selves with Valentine candies by Pangburn and Whitman's. Heart-shaped or conventional boxes. IF HE HAD it to do over again, Horace McKinney would probably do it the same way, only in a different environment. I've seen nothing like it since Emmett Kelly. Bones shouldn't be in Chapel Hill Saturday: Greensboro would be more like it. But McKinney decided on hard wood, rather than sawdust. And Ringling Brothers have never recovered.

McKinney is not at home on a basketball court. He regards his bench as an electric chair and Charlie Eckman as the executioner. You look at the spectacle he makes of himself, and you see a frontier huckster that sells hair restorer—not a basketball coach. If he had been an Indian, he'd be the Witch Doctor.

You thought Bill Gibson was bad? He's just a poor imitation of the real thing. We get it this weekend. Bones says he has his finest shooting team ever this season. But they aren't winning, so he has to go searching for publicity.

He found it shortly before exams in a ridiculous seat which he strapped to the bench to keep himself from jumping up and down like a baboon. It didn't work, but it did make a national magazine this week, and Bones must really be chuckling.

Four years ago, the ACC passed a rule aimed at curbing his excitable antics: a coach had to stay on the bench or a technical foul would be called. Bones could not do it.

But neither could anybody else, so they passed another rule which permits a coach to pace the length of his bench plus three feet out from it. Fortunately, for McKinney, they do not enforce this one. So Bones had to get himself the seat belt.

As everybody knows, McKinney still could not control himself. He ripped it off at a referee's unfavorable call in the Maryland game and raged up and down the sidelines the rest of the way. The Deacons went on to lose, 91-82. The seat belt, of course, is red. Like McKinney's socks. And they even sell pairs of the red things at the Coliseum's home games in Winston-Salem.

Just imagine if they started selling red socks in Woollen Gym. The legislature, the American Legion and Jesse Helms would all be down on our necks. Or feet. Ray Reeve would never get to do another WRAL ball game.

But McKinney keeps it up, and the clown's life is not always a tearful one. Bones' story sometimes has a happy ending. Like when he plays UNC. McKinney, you see, wins against UNC.

He may lose to Maryland, with its babies, and N.C. State, with its granddaddies, but against UNC, he wins. And often. It is getting sickening.

McKinney has taken six straight from the Tar Heels, and now they don't refer to it anymore as "the Wake Forest game," but the "Wake Forest loss."

Another one comes up tomorrow, an important one in UNC's drive toward second place and a favorable spot in the ACC tournament. Last year over here, McKinney walked up and down, waved to the crowd, bowed, quieted the people. He thought he was Lou Bello or somebody. Tomorrow, they ought to bind the guy with ropes.

Smith Looks For UNC 'Big Push'

UNC COACH DEAN SMITH said after his 89-76 win over Virginia Monday night that it was the start of "the big push" for the Tar Heels toward the tournament.

He was pleased about the team's overall performance—in that the mistakes that come after a long layoff were kept pretty much at a minimum. "We threw away a few balls on the fast break," he said, "but we had gone way ahead already because of good work on the break, so that didn't hurt us too much."

"After such a long period of inactivity, we sometimes don't know really what the condition of the team will be. Also, the guys are usually a little more nervous when they have played every other day. But we look in pretty good shape, and I think they're ready to show what a good team they are in this late drive."

Smith scouted Wake Tuesday night in the Deacs' 92-79 win ovr South Carolina, and, while still worrying about the ACC battle, went to New York last night to look at NYU against Holy Cross. (Carolina meets the Violets in Madison Square Garden next Wednesday evening.)

"Wake played real well in the second half Tuesday, after showing the effects of their own exam layoff early in the game.

"They played a zone press most of the time, and put one man on Jimmy Collins for a short while. Leonard (Bob) guarded him, but he still got 25 or something. I expect we may see something new over here."

When the Deacons defeated Carolina in Winston-Salem, 80-71, they played a straight man-for-man with Frank Christie taking Billy Cunningham. The Kid got 27 points, but something went wrong with the UNC offense—Smith never did get the shuffle moving with any effectiveness—and they played it mostly by ear as confusion reigned.

"We were pretty good on defense against them up there," Smith said, "but they shot well—it must have been their best game in that respect—and then we never got started on offense.

"Their pressure took us out of the shuffle and confused the boys a lot of the time. I don't know what they'll do at home Saturday. The only real change I saw against South Carolina was that they use Richard Herring, the sixth man, a lot more than they did."

Of late, Smith has been high in his praise for Bryan McSweeney and Ray Hassell. McSweeney, a defensive specialist, has not played this well since the first game of his sophomore season.

"Bryan's hustle and strong play under the boards have certainly earned his promotion to a starter," says the UNC coach. "Since the Maryland game, I've had to keep Bryan in there. Bennett (Bob) sitting out the other night was not a case of his coming down so such as it was of McSweeney's improved play.

"And that Hassell. Boy, has he been valuable. We need the kid's speed, and he has filled in for Mike Cooke and our other guards real well. He doesn't do much in practice, but he's what we call a good 'game player.' I don't see how a guy can make the mistakes he does in practice and then do so well when the real thing comes. But Ray does it."

UNC Thinclads Open In Tin Can Saturday

By BILL LEE

Carolina's indoor trackmen open ACC competition Saturday, as both the freshmen and varsity play host to N.C. State.

The Wolfpack seems to be keeping its ability a secret, because little is known about the Raleigh thinclads. They participated in the VMI relays but did not place. All that is certain is that last year's jumping expert, Don Corn, is not back in school.

Coach Joe Hilton expects to do a little switching around in the middle-distance and distance events to give some of the boys experience.

Hilton said earlier this week his team was physically ready. "We're in pretty good shape, but (James) Meade and (Bill) Janowitz are still out. Meade has been doing some easy jogging and we started Janowitz back working easy this week."

Meade, star sophomore for this fall's ACC championship cross-country team, was sidelined by a greenstick fracture earler this season.

Ronnie Jackson, speedster of the 60-yard dash, was ailing n Boston this past Saturday, but Hilton thnks that "Jackson should be ready." Second semester newcomer, Tommy Brooks, who also runs the 60, is not yet in shape.

The competition will begin at 1:00, in the Tin Can, with the pole-vault and high jump getting the meet under way. Bill Busby and Bob Bowerman will be the vault men, while Harvey Whitley and Wayne Burchett will compete in the broad jump.

The shot-put will begin at 2:00 with Bill Graham, Tommy Cordell, and Jon Siwik heaving the iron. Tommy Clark and Joe Huffman will participate in the high jump at 3:45.

The running events start at three with the high hurdles. Expected to run are Milt Baugess, Rich Ambrose, Gary Mead, Chip Young, and Adger Stokes.

Closely following will be the 60-yard dash. Dale White and Jackson are definite starters, but the participation of Brooks and John McNench is still questionable.

The low hurdles are next with White, Ambrose, Baugess, Young and Stokes participating; followed by the mile run at 3:45, with Mike Folk and Jerry Smith.

The 600-yard run will feature Bob Bennett, Al Dobritch, Bill Allen, and Don Gabriel. Competing in the 880 are David Peltz, Worth Helms and Bob Everett.

Art Maillett and John Dykstra will be the only Tar Heels in the 2-mile run. The meet will finish up with the mile and two mile relays. Everything is expected to be over by 5:30.

The freshmen, with a victory over Wake Forest under their belts are expected to display another good performance.

They are all in good shape except for Jon Levin, a dashman who dislocated his shoulder before the Wake meet. But Phillips, another sprinter, was hospitalized earlier this week, but is expected to be able to run.

Water Babies Swim Tonight

By PERRY McCARTY

UNC's freshman swimmers play host to two high school teams this weekend. Tonight at eight, the Baby Dolphins face Needham Broughton of Raleigh; Saturday at 11:30 a.m. they go against Charlotte Myers Park. The team is 6-1 for the year.

Coach Pat Earey's young swimmers have been idle since January 16 and are eager to show the fruits of three weeks' intensive training. Several key men remained at school during the brief respite between terms to work with the varsity squad.

Jack Hayden has been impressive in the backstroke and individual medley events all season long. He has looked even better in recent practice sessions. Jay Scattergood, freestyle sprinter, ad Jim Bernuth, distance freestyler, now have additional strength and conditioning and figure to better early season performances.

Strud Norfleet has gained valuable experience which he lacked early in the campaign while record-breaking sprinter Pete Worthen is working toward peak performances in the Freshmen Invitational Championships later this month. Freestyler Allen McDonald joins Bernuth in the longer distances.

Winter Germans Tonight

Armstrong, The Shirelles Appear At Memorial Hall

LOUIS ARMSTRONG

THE SHIRELLES

Louis Armstrong and the Shirelles will be featured at the annual Winter German's Concert tonight in Memorial Hall.

The concert, scheduled for 7:45, stars two internationally-known groups who each have million-sale records to their credit.

Armstrong and his band are internationally known, and his many hits and films have made him the favorite of millions.

Appearing with Armstrong will be the Shirelles, whose recordings have consistently been among the top in the nation. They are kown for such hits as "Dedicated to the One I Love," "Thing of the Past," "Baby It's You" and "Soldier Boy."

Watts Carr, president of the German's Club, yesterday announced that the concert was sold out. He said that tickets left over from the New Christy Minstrel show at Fall German's, cancelled due to the death of President Kennedy, would not be honored at the door and those holding tickets should contact Sammy Thompson or Carr at 968-9086 or 929-2653.

The German's Club, composed of 14 UNC fraternities, will hold a dance in Durham after the performance.

Big Barn Burning

RALEIGH (UPI) — The Angus Barn, popular rural Raleigh restaurant, was destroyed by fire today.

Thad Eure Jr., co-owner of the restaurant situated along U. S. 70 near the Raleigh-Durham Airport, said that damage amounted to about $250,000.

Firemen from three departments —Fairgrounds, Six Forks and Morrisville—answered the 7 a.m. alarm. The Raleigh Fire Department sent a tank truck.

Summer Science Program Pays Off

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Carolina's summer science program for outstanding high school students has been paying off for the University as well as the participants. According to Dr. S. P. Knight, director of the program, 25 of the 50 students who took part in the first program in 1961 are now attending UNC. Of these, four are Morehead Scholars. Dr. Knight says the figures are also very good for the 1962 class.

SCIENCE NEWS

"The program certainly is attracting good science students to the University," he said. "We don't make any effort to recruit the students but I think it is just natural for them to want to go here after a summer in the program."

Dr. Knight points out that in addition to stimulating the students to pursue a career in science, it helps some to realize that their interests lie elsewhere. "Some come to the program," he says, "thinking they want to go into science, but find out science is just not their dish."

A $34,500 award from the National Science Foundation will provide a research boon to the Department of Chemistry. It will finance the purchase of a "paramagnetic resonance spectrometer," which according to Dr. H. Crockford, "will find application in many of the fields of research in the department. Dr. Henry H. Dearman will direct the purchase and installation of the instrument.

Some of the top people in the field of chemistry, both from UNC and other schools, are among the lecturers scheduled for the Sixth Summer Institute for College Chemistry Students to be held here June 8-July 17. Among the visiting lecturers will be Gerhart Friedlander of the Brookhaven National Laboratory, one of the top names in radiochemistry; and Leo Schubert, an authority on the history and philosophy of science from American University in Washington, D. C.

The program, designed for college and junior college teachers whose departments do not have major research programs, will help bring the participants abreast of the more recent advances in chemistry. It will include lectures on various branches of chemistry and will include instruction in laboratory technique ranging from instrumental analysis to glass blowing. Last summer, 32 teachers attended, including one from Rajshahi University in East Pakistan and one from Mexico. In addition, 17 states in the union were represented.

Marines!

The Marine Officer Selection Team will visit the campus to sign up applicants for the Officer Candidate Course as well as the Platoon Leaders Class.

The OCC is designed for seniors or recent graduates. PLC offers a second lieutenants commission after graduation if two six-weeks summer training courses have been completed during candidate's school term.

The selection team will be located in Cerrard Hall, February 11-14.

WAKE HERE!

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The Wake Forest doll—you wind it up and it beats Dean Smith—comes into Woollen Gym today, and, as usual, its raggedy andy appearance is deceiving.

For when the Deacons play UNC, they are not a rag doll. They are more of an iron giant, and in the 2:00 regional TV show they will be aiming for a seventh straight victory over Carolina under its young tutor, Smith.

The Atlantic Coast Conference is a "home court" league, and Wake is not a particularly good road club, but this has not prevented today's visitors from defeating UNC in Chapel Hill the last two years.

This, in addition to three victories in Winston-Salem and one in last year's ACC tourney semi-final (56-55), has had Carolina fans gnashing their teeth and shrinking in horror at the mere mention of Bones McKinney and crew.

But today is something else, and UNC just cannot imagine another loss at the hands of the hated Deacons. Especially when the team has had such a fine practice period this week.

"I'v never witnessed kids more dedicated than we were the last few days,' says Smith. "We are ready to play one of our best games."

If the television aspect means anything, nobody will win. UNC has lost twice on the tube—to Duke by 20 and to VPI by two (in two overtimes) while Wake looked like it was at a wake in its only appearance before the regional audience — a humiliating 87-61 loss to Clemson in which the Deacons made just six second-half field goals.

Carolina dropped an 80-71 decision in an earlier meeting at Winston-Salem as the Deac defense stopped Smith's "shuffle" and "contained" magnificent Billy Cunningham to 27 points and 14 rebounds.

McKinney's legion is 3-3 in league play—a tie with South Carolina for the ACC's fourth place—while Carolina is in a second-place deadlock with Maryland at 4-3.

Wake Forest, coming off an impressive 92-79 victory over the Gamecocks, has all five of

Cuban Water H-Hot

From UPI Reports

The Cuban propaganda apparatus opened up full blast Friday as U. S. Senate Democratic and Republican leaders were joining in a declaration that the United States will not be pushed or parched out of the n aval base at Guantanamo.

As Cuban propaganda groups joined in denouncing the U. S. for "piracy," U. S. senators joined in strong support of a firm stand in Cuba.

The controversy arose over the arrest of Cuban fishing vessels, accused of poaching in American waters. Castro has turned off the water supply for Guantanamo, insisting that the prisoners be returned before the supply is restored.

Democratic leader Mike Mansfield, (Mont.), said, "It is obvious that Castro wants us out of Guantanamo and it is obvious that he is not going to make it any easier for us to stay.

"It is equally obvious that we have no intention of being pressured out."

Mistrial Is Declared

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI)—An all-white jury was unable to reach a decision today after trying for 11 hours to decide if Byron De La Beckwith assassinated Negro leader Medgar Evers, and a mistrial was declared.

"We could stay here a week and never reach a verdict," juryman F. E. Plummer told Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick who declared the mistrial.

It came after 11 hours and one minute of actual deliberation in the case, the most celebrated racial slaying in the nation since 1955 when two white men were acquitted in 67 minutes of the "wolf whistle" slaying of a Negro youth named Emmett Till.

Hendrick will be responsible for setting a new trial date for the 43-year-old fertilizer salesman who told the jury during the 11-day trial he believed in segregation "just like I believe in God."

Hendrick said he would set a new trial date on March 23.

Beckwith told his attorney: "Let's get a new trial as soon as we can."

One juror told a reporter as he left the courthouse: "It was just impossible; we never got anywhere near a unanimous decision."

The jury was reported to have taken about 20 ballots after receiving the case Thursday. It returned the verdict at 11:30 a.m. (CST).

Beckwith was charged with slaying Evers, Mississippi field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, last June 12. Evers was cut down by a high powered rifle as he started to enter his home here after attending a civil rights meeting.

Dist. Atty. William Waller, the prosecutor, received the verdict calmly.

"We expected a guilty verdict but you might say this was our second choice of a verdict," Waller said.

Heated Battle In SL

By HUGH STEVENS And JOHN GREENBACKER

Student Legislature was unable to reach a decision on student civil rights demonstrations at its Thursday night session.

A heavily amended version of a bill by Borden Parker (UP) was cut down by the 10:45 automatic adjournment rule when the bill's supporters were unable to muster the necessary votes to continue debate.

The Student Legislature Hall was packed with spectators who watched partisan votes and parliamentary entanglements dominate a heated three-hour session.

Parker's slightly amended bill, sent to the floor without recommendation by the Ways and Means Committee, was the foundation for an amendment battle between SP and UP members.

The bill strongly condemned student participation in many local demonstrations as being "willful, premeditated, and persistent violation of the laws established by the community."

The bill also called for Honor Council trials of those students arrested in Chapel Hill sit-ins.

The amendment battle followed the failure of the SP to bring a substitute motion to the floor for consideration.

Neal Jackson, Ways and Means Committee chairman, told the body early in the session that a motion to pass the bill out of committee favorably had failed at a Wednesday meeting of his committee.

Jackson then submitted a minority report on the bill which included a substitute resolution containing no mention of support for trials and urging a student boycott of all segregated establishments.

Arthur Hays, speaker pro-tem, moved for acceptance of the substitute resolution saying that the Ways and Means Committee should not have sent Parker's bill to the floor.

"The committee could not reach a decision to favor this bill," he said, "but no vote to pass it out unfavorably was ever taken. The substitute bill, I believe, is more representative of the feelings of this body."

Hays was followed in support of the minority bill by Neal Jackson, who said he felt "Mr. Parker's bill could not be suitably amended to agree with the intentions of this body."

Mike Chanin, UP, then urged defeat of the substitute resolution on the grounds that it had not been properly considered by committee.

Phil Baddour, SP floor leader, rejoined that "Parker's bill has no meaning, and the feelings of the body are much better expressed by Rep. Jackson's bill."

A roll call vote then killed the substitute measure by a vote of 19-18, with one abstention by Judy Anapole (P). The vote was otherwise partisan, with UP mem-

Lawler's Message To SL

Student Government's PAST ROLE in human relations and civil rights is a fact of life at this University. In the past decade our work has included the following areas: admissions, desegregation of the football stadium, human relations seminars and public accommodations. In regional and national meetings, University students have supported efforts directed at alleviating discrimination and its historical products. At the recent Congress of our National Union of Students, Vice-President Bob Spearman sponsored a resolution favoring the Civil Rights Bill now before the U. S. Congress.

These and other student actions are predicated on a singularly important concept. The University has a vital responsibility and creative function in the total community. We are not only a community of scholars; we are also a community of men and women, citizens. And as such, we are "obliged to reflect upon our society and to involve ourselves in its progress."

What of the present situation in Chapel Hill? My comments are limited to two concerns: 1st, that of public accommodations, and 2nd, that of the broader conditions of the body politic.

Some have questions about the legal issues surrounding a public accommodations law. Some have questions about the efficiency of the present forms of protest employed in Chapel Hill. However, I am certain we believe with unanimity that discrimination on the basis of race in public facilities is morally indefensible. There can be no question on that point. And the force of that point is also clear. Upon what basis can you and I support a restaurant owner who refuses service to a fellow student because his skin is black? There is none. Legal questions . . . yes; questions of human dignity . . . no! I urge that this Student Body withdraw its support from those establishments which do not and will not serve us all.

"Will the student demonstrators be tried?" That has been the insistent question beginning immediately after the Student Government's statements of late December and early January. Some, in fact, have doubted the sincerity of those Executive statements. And in their doubt they have attempted to exert inappropriate pressures on the Judicial and Executive branches of this Government. A trial case will go to the Men's Council; the Attorney General will make a public statement regarding this matter. Has not, though, this judicial item actually obscured the larger concerns which are before us? It has indeed.

Both the academic community and the town community

Cites Students' Roles

By PETE WALES

A complete student boycott of all segregated businesses was called for by Mike Lawler, president of the student body, in a message to Student Legislature Thursday night.

"I urge that this Student Body withdraw its support from those establishments which do not and will not serve us all," Lawler said.

Lawler's statement took no stand on a public accommodations law. He said there were legal questions on this subject, but that there were no "questions of human dignity."

"Discrimination on the basis of race in public facilities s morally indefensible. There can be no question on that point."

Lawler called for active participation by the students in the problems confronting Chapel Hill and the state in civil rights.

"The University has a vital responsibility to and a creative function in the total community.

"We are not only a community of scholars; we are also a community of men and women, citizens. And as such, we are obligated to reflect upon our society and to involve ourselves in its progress."

Lawler announced his intention to request civil rights groups in this area to make reports on their activities to the Student Body describing how students may help.

He suggested student activity in the areas of job re-training and employment, voter registration, tutorials and educational opportunities.

Lawler further announced that a trial case on student sit-in demonstrators would go before the Men's Council in the near future.

"The Attorney General will make a public statement regarding this matter."

Lawler added that concern with the sit-in cases has clouded the more important issues confronting student-citizens.

"It is time that the students of this University assert their citizenship in new and meaningful directions.

"Our part in Chapel Hill is our contribution to a better North Carolina and to a better American life for all our people."

Honor Code Policy On Sit-Ins Stated

In accordance with the policy statement of December 20, 1963, the names of all students who have been arrested in recent civil rights demonstrations were forwarded to the Attorney General's office for investigation of possible Campus Code violations.

After extensive investigations, it has been found that these cases fall into two particular categories, both of which involve possible violations of the Campus Code. The first category consists of those students arrested on charges of trespassing and resisting arrest. The first of these cases will be presented to the Men's Council on Thursday, February 13 at 7:15. The second category consists of students charged not only with trespassing and resisting arrest but also with possible violations such as disorderly conduct. The first case in this category will be presented to the Men's Council next Thursday at 9.

The policy of the Attorney General's Office will continue to be that of investigating all possible violations of the Honor and Campus Code from whatever source they may arise. In those instances where there is a possible violation of the Honor or Campus Code, the cases will be forwarded to the appropriate Council for judicial action.

Lawler Leads As Lawler Should

Student Body President Mike Lawler has acted in the highest traditions of his office in calling for a student boycott of all segregated businesses. The fact that he has waited until now to do so does not detract from the meaningfulness of his words.

The fact that he has gone further than University officials felt they could properly go only underlines the difference between voluntary action and official institutional pressure, with its precedent-setting effect.

Lawler's statement was strong and compelling. It deserves the conscious and continuing support of every student on this campus, even though it may sometimes cause momentary inconvenience.

More On Our Lud icrous Legislators

Thursday evening's session of Student Legislature demonstrates perfectly the sort of ridiculous debacle that can come about when partisanship, selfishness, and a lack of true convictions take the place of a solid commitment to the ideals of representative government.

The session itself was a ludicrous display of the I'll-vote-the-party-line-because - the - other - party - is - automatically-an-ass type of maneuvering. The parliamentary procedure became so involved that a recess had to be taken to untangle it That the Speaker managed to keep things running smoothly despite all this was no consolation, for there was no need for the spectacle in the first place

It was obvious from the start that most of the members of the body were in reasonably close agreement concerning what a civil rights bill should say. Jealousy and the inability to compromise, however, forced the legislators to consider two widely separate bills, one of which never reached the floor, and the other of which was amended black and blue.

After one of the bills was subjected to all those amendments the two pieces of legislation were virtually identical. The minor differences that remained could have been resolved by party leaders without much difficulty

As yet, though, we have no civil rights bill of any kind from the legislature. We won't have one before the end of next week, and even then there exists the strong possibility that it will be a weak, half-hearted effort which doesn't say anything.

Some people have expressed the opinion that the SL has no business attempting a civil rights resolution in the first place. We have always thought otherwise, for we feel that this is an area of vital student concern

If the legislature persists in its refusal to reach a compromise, however, and continues instead to play politics over in New East, we might be forced to concur in the opinion that they had better call the whole thing off.

Anonymous Letters Not Worth Reading

There are two letters posted prominently on the main bulletin board in the Chapel Hill Police Department.

The first reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

I would like to give this small amount toward buying gasoline for Rev.? B Elton Cox of CORE for burning himself.

If he can get others to join him, I think I can get money enough to run a gasoline pipeline into your town. Here's hoping the people of your town furnish the matches."

This letter is accompanied by a dollar bill and is unsigned. Below it hangs another. It reads:

"Dear Sir:

I just want you to know how much my family and I appreciate the way you and the whole police force are handling this whole racial situation. Thank Heaven for such a strong, dedicated force, which has kept its sense of humor and its dignity and full human kindness in response to terrific pressures. Because of your control Chapel Hill has been spared the horror of Birmingham and Cleveland.

The average citizen, although not many of us think to tell you, are very much aware of all you are doing for us."

The last letter is signed

We find the same sort of pattern applies to almost all the letters we get. The irresponsible and destructive ones are almost never signed, while the constructive and well reasoned letters, whether in agreement or disagreement with a DTH stand, are almost always signed.

It provides an interesting comment on the type people who write the various types of letters. It is a shame that all are not willing to accept credit for their product.

Taking License With The License

The Charlotte Observer

An anti-digit licensing spirit lives somewhere within the walls of Raleigh's Central Prison.

Some of the inmates turning out nearly three million state license plates annually have demonstrated that iron bars are not a cage for the soul of wit.

These prisoners have attempted to inject some originality into an assembly line chore. Samples: the letters "U-BUM" on a tag which turned up in Franklin and "I-LOVEU" on a plate which landed in Mocksville.

The strange thing is that no prisoner has yet been able to smuggle out a tag reading "HELP."

Prison officials are not inclined to see much humor in the situation. After all, license tags are not like candy hearts which are supposed to fascinate the children with such legends as "WISE GUY" and "YEAH MAN."

But it would be momentarily refreshing to have police radioing their colleagues to be on the lookout for a blue 1963 Oldsmobile bearing license number "GET LOST."

It all goes to show that even prisoners are liable to take license with their liberties when they've got a captive audience.

MM: Top Biography

By HENRY McINNIS

Marilyn Monroe, by Maurice Zolotow, Harcourt, Brace and Co., 1960, illustrated, 340 pages.

"No matter what unpredictable events may lie in her future, they cannot change who she is and what she has become. In her heart is a questing fever that will give her no peace, that drives her on to strive, to seek, to find. Her soul will always be restless, unquiet."

With these perceptive words author Maurice Zolotow closed his 1960 biography of the late Marilyn Monroe. On the Saturday night of August 5, 1962, she was lying nude in her recently acquired, barely furnished Brentwood home, her blond hair dark at the roots and a telephone clutched in her hand. Norma Jean Baker, alias Marilyn Monroe, was dead of barbiturate poisoning.

Zolotow has penned a most remarkable biography; thoroughly factual, tasteful, authoritative and brilliantly literate. Much of the narrative is written from Marilyn's statements to friends and the press and reconstructed from conversations Zolotow had with the actress.

Going to a studio to be made up for a Hollywood premiere, she said, "I want to be all platinum and white tonight. How will I feel when I get out there and look at all the people staring at me?"

On the Monroe's entrance to the theatre, "She felt the strange ecstasy that comes from the sweat and mass love of the mob. It is a sensation of dizziness that is pleasurably painful, that takes you utterly out of yourself. This, in the end, was what you worked for, lied for, prostituted yourself for, got sick at the stomach for, drilled yourself relentlessly for."

Whether or not you liked Marilyn, this meaningful biography is an exceptionally sensitive account of the star's life. Anyone who is a student of the Monroe doctrine will find this book overwhelmingly poignant.

It would have been commonplace to find her life story written in fan magazine hack style, full of gush and cliches. It is a happy thing to report that such is emphatically not the case here. Zolotow has transcended the myth of MM by revealing her as a pathetic human being, tortured by her sordid background, trapped in a maze of conflicting identities.

Her story is significant because it is not the typical American tragedy, nor merely an account of a celluloid sorceress. It is a truthful representation and a profound example of the tragedy of life itself.

By DOLORES MARCOTTE

I saw you with him Friday night
And wished that it were me
I saw him brighten at your sight
With a look of ecstasy
I saw his sad look when someone
Stole you away with his charms
But he'd follow right after you on the run
'Til you were back in his arms
I saw the way he looked at you—
When he had you, I saw his look of pride
When there were obstacles, I saw him break through
And I saw you right close to his side
Day after day, the look in his eyes
I admit I really envy you
The way you hold the attention of the guys
I wish I were a basketball too.

Civil Rights In The North

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC News

(Mr. Morgan can be heard on WRAL radio at 7 p.m. weeknights.)

The North is getting a taste of its own medicine in the civil rights struggle. Or perhaps it would be fairer and more accurate to say that those citizens who live above and beyond the Mason-Dixon line and have been inclined to dismiss the racial issue as "strictly a Southern matter" must now confront the inescapable fact that it is, and in some respects always has been, a national problem.

The recent boycott of New York City's public schools, sponsored by civil rights groups as a protest against de facto segregation of classrooms, is a dramatic but dangerous development. Dramatic because again it shows the determination and the discipline of Negroes in demanding first-class citizenship. Dangerous because the turmoil of resentment and misunderstandings it is bound to engender may cancel out whatever advantages might come from increasing the pressure on the New York Board of Education to hurry a solution to racial imbalance in the schools.

Right here it is easy to see the vicious circle in which so many of the civil rights crises in communities across the country are spinning. The Negro leaders are criticized for moving "too fast" because it will arouse the neighborhood and produce new obstacles to progress. But if they don't move with at least the "deliberate speed" which the Supreme Court prescribed in the school decisions the neighborhood won't be aroused sufficiently to break its pattern of prejudice and discrimination.

In the current New York City controversy, the civil rights leaders may well have over-reached themselves. Not because there is not an urgent need to crack segregated classes. On Manhattan Island, for example, three out of every four public elementary school students are either Negro or Puerto Rican. But there is utterly no point in striking a racial balance in the classrooms if it is done in such a way that it increases rather than decreases tension and leads to more rather than less chaos. The objective of the public school system is supposed to be to furnish the best possible education to all comers. Arotrarily carting children across town to a school out of their neighborhood simply in order to meet an arithmetical formula serves no purpose in itself.

But if the leaders of today's boycott in New York City have been unreasonably committed to such a pattern, I suggest they are not so irresponsible as the other leaders of our greatest metropolitan community who have moved far too slowly for far too long in breaking down residential segregation in the city. Without ghettos, without invisible boundaries which nevertheless are a wall against minority groups seeking a place to live in "restricted" areas, the rigid classroom segregation would never have reached its present explosive state.

Vast and tortured as it is, the problem is not hopeless. Only last week there was a highly encouraging development in Chicago. As the result of a suit begun three years ago by eight Negro physicians, a federal judge on January 31 appointed a seven-man commission to handle complaints of racial discrimination in Chicago hospitals. The doctors had charged that 56 hospitals were by conspiracy systematically excluding Negro doctors from staff appointments. Also named in their suit were the Chicago Medical Society, the Blue Cross-Blue Shield plans and the Chicago Hospital Council. At the heart of the complaint was another vicious circle, for, if a Negro doctor can't practice in a hospital, he must refer his patients to a white doctor who can, or more likely, to a hospital that is, de facto, for Negroes only. The pattern produced a withering side effect: Since 1940, the number of Negro doctors in Chicago has actually declined while the black population has soared. Presumably graduating Negro medical students have shunned Chicago, gone to other cities where the situation is less harsh.

Actually the doctors' suit never came to trial because 52 of the 56 defendants agreed to the commission plan with broad investigative powers. The commission's main enforcement powers, for now, consist of the glare of publicity for uncooperative hospitals but presumably the endorsing institutions harbored genuine good will toward the procedure or they wouldn't have signed.

Organized labor and other groups materially aided the Negro doctors in their long legal battle. Their success would seem to be a signal to hospitals in every American community to become more a living part of it instead of arrogantly pursuing the uncivilized practice, as far, far too many still do, of turning away a patient at the door not because of his wound but because of the color of the skin in which the wound was opened.

Otelia

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I have to make my bow to Duke University for the delightful banquet, served to the delegates of the N. C. Press Association Convention Friday night. I almost missed it. When I arrived at the Inn to join the other delegates on a bus ride to Duke, I found I had left my bus ticket and dinner ticket at home, in another bag. However, I was promptly supplied with two other tickets, and all was well.

I enjoyed this convention. The luncheon at the Inn was unusually good. The panel of UNC professors on the subject of Communism was excellent, much better than I thought the usual professors could do as public speakers.

The meeting at Duke upheld the standard set at noon at Carolina. My friend, Taylor Cole, conducted himself as became the Provost of a great University, and he better had. The speaker, Mr. Harold Styers, was entertaining and rather unusual, plenty of vim and zip!

But the high-light of the conversation was the banquet at Duke. I sent for the head-waiter and told him, "I had criticized Duke once, but "I give you an A tonight," I said. I also spoke to the Director of Foods. Both of these men had read the former criticism, and I am sure they thought amends were in order. The service was courteous and efficient, the food was delicious, and I wouldn't have missed it. Come over to Carolina, Mr. Minah, next June, and we will pit you against Mr. Prillaman, UNC Director of Foods. That should prove quite a contest.

A Challenge

Editors, The Tar Heel:

This week Avery Hall informally accepted your challenge to a basketball duel offered some time prior. This letter is to be the formal acceptance. Let it be known, then, that this battle is to be a grudge match of the severest nature. This ardor stems from the past action, or lack of action, by the editors. Avery invited the editors to attend the recepton for several of the various deans and the Chancellor. The editors, in consistency with the policy of covering campus news, did not show, nor did they send a representative. Avery demands satisfaction in acceptance of the DTH basketball challenge. I doubt that the game will receive any coverage, either, since the DTH team will be wiped off the court.

"It's All The Same War..."

Washington, D. C. and Chapel Hill, N. C. seemed very close together last weekend. As I climbed the interminable steps up to the U. S. Capitol, a damp chill seemed to penetrate to the marrow of my bones, not unlike a walk to class here on a typical winter's morning.

It wasn't just the weather though, that made me feel at home. For inside the Capitol, on the floor of the House of Representatives, our legislators were locked in conflict over the same issue that was being contested in streets of Chapel Hill.

The House convened at noon in an extraordinary session to continue debate on the controversial Civil Rights Bill. At about that same time, dozens of demonstrators were convening in our town for another push against discrimination and injustice. The means were different, but the ends were the same for both sides in both conflicts, and I felt that the House debate and the Chapel Hill demonstrations were simply separate battles in the same war.

Earlier in the day, I had obtained a gallery pass from Horace Kornegay, N. C. Congressman, but I was hardly prepared for the scene outside the gallery entrances. The halls were jammed, unusual considering the time of day. The first three sections were filled, but I managed to squeeze into a line and grab one of the two remaining seats.

As I settled into one of the uncomfortable chairs provided for visitors, I was conscious of an atmosphere of expectancy and busy preparation not common to the Congressional sessions which I had seen before. There was the usual shuffling around of Congressmen, but somehow the attitude was one of thoughtful restraint. The faces of the legislators, pro and con, were serious. I could not refrain from comparing their countenances with those of the CORE members and policemen that I had seen at Brady's and the Rockpile.

As the debate commenced and wound on through the long afternoon, my thoughts were drawn again and again away from the Capitol and back to Franklin Street. The words of our country's leaders mirrored a thousand towns like Chapel Hill or Williamston or Asheboro, and for the first time the true significance of the struggle going on around me struck home.

I had known that I was going to witness a battle of minds over the familiar topic of civil rights, but I was surprised at just how familiar it all seemed. In the words of our representatives I saw the same conflict, the same emotions, the same opposing forces that I had seen dozens of times in Chapel Hill.

Before, the words "civil rights" and "discrimination" conjured up pictures of our local Board of Aldermen debating a public accommodations law, or teenagers camped in front of Colonial Drug. But this was different. Now the lines were drawn, not between local citizens, but between the members of the U. S. House of Representatives.

The debate was not loud, or vicious, or angry. The Washington papers would later comment at length on the dignity with which it was conducted. Perhaps that was why, to one who was unfamiliar with the situation, it might have seemed that the controversy was not really very important, just as local citizens tend to dismiss a few scattered arrests or demonstrations.

The faces, though, told a different story.

They told of the desires of some men to be free and equal, and of other men to be free from what they considered undue interference of government in their private lives. Most of all, though, they reflected the huge revolution that is even now occurring in our land.

I rose from my seat to let in one more person from the long lines that had formed outside the door. As I descended the steps, the day was still a bleak steel-gray. It seemed the perfect setting for the conflict I had been witnessing.

My car radio soon informed me that Chapel Hill had been the scene of conflict that afternoon, too, and that several dozen persons had gone to jail. I did not have to see them. I had seen their faces all afternoon on Capitol Hill.

have long been confronting the products of an historically separate and unequal society. They have labored with liberal attitudes and consistent progress. But, there is much yet to be done. The broader picture of local and regional conditions includes some very thorny problems. There are groups in our community which are grappling with these conditions. They deserve our strongest support as student-citizens. But how?

It is in this broader area that I want to announce my intention to make a personal request that certain of these groups present reports to the Sudent Body. They will answer two questions: (1). What work is being done? (2). What role can the student play in this work? These groups will represent such interests as job re-training and employment, voter regisration, tutorials and educational opporunities.

There is a definite need to fashion a new civic drama in Chapel Hill. We have a part in that human endeavor. It is time that the students of this University assert their citizenship in new and meaningful directions. Our part in Chapel Hill is our contribution to a better North Carolina and to a better American life for all our people.

bers supporting Parker's bill and SP legislators backing the Jackson resolution. Brick Oettinger (UP) supported the Jackson bill in the only jumping of party lines.

Failure of the substitute motion brought Parker's bill to the floor for consideration.

Parker defended the bill, saying that no grounds exist for the breaking of state laws. He called the demonstrations "violent and criminal disobedience."

"An anti-trespass law is on the books, and it is the law," he said. "We don't break the Speaker Ban Law—we should not break this one."

Chanin then introduced three amendments to the bill, affirming the stand against unlawful demonstrations and upholding Honor Council trials for those arrested, but calling for local merchants to desegregate.

Baddour objected, saying the amendments were not in keeping with the original spirit of the bill.

"You are attempting to attach a bunch of mealy-mouthed amendments onto this otherwise conservative bill," he said.

Jackson extended the question further by asking Chanin, "Are you in favor of sit-ins?"

Chanin answered Jackson by saying that he favored sit-ins as a means to call attention to discrimination, but he felt continued demonstrations were "ridiculous."

Chanin then introduced his articles separately. The first, condemning "willful, premeditated, and persistent violations of state laws," passed after an unsuccessful attempt by Jackson to substitute the first article of the minority bill in its place.

The second article, supporting the Attorney General's decision to bring arrested demonstrators to trial, also passed in the face of an attempted substitute by the SP.

Chanin then called for passage of the third amendment, which would call for an end to segregation on the part of local businessmen. Jackson again introduced a substitute amendment, asking for a student boycott of businesses which practice discrimination.

Ron Hendren (UP) made a final attempt to settle the matter by calling all previous questions. Baddour objected. A motion which would have brought the bill to an immediate vote was defeated, and debate on the issue was suspended.

Jackson, acting under new business, re-introduced his minority resolution as a new bill, opening the possibility that it could come before the body at a later session.

The Parker bill, as amended, will be the first order of business at next Thursday's session.

THE INNER MAN

College is fun and frolic and fulfillment—except for one melancholy omission: we don't get to enjoy Mom's home cooking. (In my own undergraduate days, curiously enough, I did not undergo this deprivation; my mother, a noted cross-country runner, was never home long enough to cook a meal until her legs gave out last Arbor Day.)

But most of us arrive at college with fond gastric memories of Mom's nourishing delicacies, and we are inclined now and then to heave great racking sighs as we contemplate the steam tables in the campus cafeteria. Take, for an extreme example, the case of Finster Sigafoos.

Finster, a freshman at one of our great Eastern universities (Oregon State) came to college accustomed to home cooking of a kind and quantity enjoyed by very few. Until entering college, Finster had lived all his life in Europe, where his father was an eminent fugitive from justice. Finster's mother, a natural born cook, was mistress of the hauté cuisine of a dozen countries, and Finster grew up living and eating in the Continental manner.

He arose each morning at ten and breakfasted lightly on figs,

My mother was a noted cross country runner

hot chocolate, and brioche. (It is interesting to note, incidentally, that brioche was named after its inventor, perhaps the greatest of all French bakers, Jean-Claude Brioche (1634-1921). M. Brioche, as we all know, also invented croissants, French toast, and—in a curious departure—the electric razor. Other immortal names in the history of breadstuffs are the German, Otto Pumpernickel (1509-1848) who invented pumpernickel and thus became known to posterity as The Iron Chancellor; the two Americans, William Cullen Raisin (1066-1812) and Walter Rye (1931-1932) who collaborated on the invention of raisin rye; and, of course, Hans Christian Andersen (1805-1875) who invented Danish pastry).

But I digress. Finster, I say, breakfasted lightly at ten a.m. At eleven a.m. his Mom brought him his elevenses. At twelve she brought him his twelveses. At 1:30 she served his lunch: first a clear broth; then a fish course (porgy and bass); then an omelette; then the main course—either a saddle of lamb, an eye of sirloin, or a glass of chicken fat; then a salad of escarole; and finally a lemon soufflé.

At three p.m. Mom served Finster low tea, at five p.m. high tea, and at ten p.m. dinner—first a bowl of petite marmite (she trapped the marmites herself); then a fish course (wounded trout); then an omelette of turtle eggs; then the main course—either duck with orange or a basin of farina; then a salad of unborn chicory; and finally a caramel mousse.

And then Finster went off to college, which reminds me of Marlboro Cigarettes. (Actually it doesn't remind me of Marlboro Cigarettes at all, but the makers of Marlboro pay me to write this column and they are inclined to get surly if I fail to mention their product. Mind you, I don't object to mentioning their product—no sir, not one bit. Marlboro's flavor is flavorful, the filter filters, the soft pack is soft, the Flip-Top box flips, and the tattoo is optional. Marlboros are available wherever cigarettes are sold in all fifty states of the Union. Next time you're in the U.S.A., try a pack.)

But I digress. We were speaking of Finster Sigafoos who went from Continental dining to dormitory feeding. So whenever you feel sorry for yourself, think of Finster, for it always lifts the heart to know somebody is worse off than you are.

We, the makers of Marlboro, can't say whether European food beats ours, but this we believe: America's cigarettes lead the whole world. And this we further believe: among America's cigarettes, Marlboros are the finest.

Wake Forest Beat Mermen?? Sure – Moon Is Blue, Too

The possibility of losing a third straight meet is not of too much concern to North Carolina's powerful swimming team today.

The Blue Dolphins, after semester-break dunkings by Florida and Florida State, face Wake Forest in a make-up meet at 4 p.m. in Bowman Gray Pool.

Inclement weather forced the Deacons to cancel a previous engagement on January 15—thus setting up today's splash. Wake is decidedly weak this year, and Coach Pat Earey anticipates much experimenting with a novel lineup and perhaps an attempt at a conference record in one of the relay events.

Recently, the Blue Dolphins were rated the sixth best collegiate team in the country—and hard work on the part of Earey and his swimmers indicates the club deserving of the national recognition.

The meets (and subsequent losses) Earey arranged with the two Florida schools were part of his "overall training process." "While surely we like to win them all, we feel that only in swimming teams as good, or better than we are, do the boys improve and later are able to relax in the important conference dual meets and, finally, the ACC championships," the UNC coach said.

The UNC mermen have three remaining dual meets after today before the ACC Championships here Feb. 27-29. They face N.C. State here next Wednesday in a big one before going on a road trip to strong Maryland and Virginia on the weekend before the league meet.

Half Of A Divided Mat Team Meets West Virginia Tonight

By PETE GAMMONS

UNC's varsity wrestling team experiences a unique arrangement today, as Coach Sam Barnes will split his team for two meets. One section will meet West Virginia in Woollen Gym tonight at seven oclock; another wrestles, along with the freshmen, at Pfeiffer.

Despite last year's 26-0 Mountaineer disaster, Barnes feels tonight's meet will be a close one. The UNC coach said earlier this week the score of last season's bouts was not a true indication of the comparative strengths of the teams.

"My boys' tremendous improvement will make this thing interesting Saturday," he said. "West Virginia and Carolina have met three common teams this year, and we've both won them all by about the same margins."

The big problem in the UNC lineup tonight will be in the 157-pound class. Carolina's best, Bill Woodall, has dropped out of school—and Barnes will have to go with either Sophomore Bob Hicks or junior Gary Garris. Unfortunately, this class is one of the West Virginia strong points.

Other top Mountaineer strengths come in the 123, 177 and heavyweight classes. But Barnes feels Paul Wellstone, Carolina's unbeaten star soph, Steve Lister (returning from the injured list) and captain Jerry Cabe can handle them efficiently.

The second half of the squad will travel to Pfeiffer with frosh coach Grover Willhoyt. Barnes expects this match also to be tough, for Pfeiffer is expected to be strong—and the split up of the UNC forces will hurt even more.

Both the 157 and 177-pound classes are uncertain for the Tar Heels. Either Hicks or Garris probably will take the former spot, but Barnes has yet to make a commitment in the 177-pound weight.

The undefeated frosh team shouldn't have too much trouble extending its perfect record to 6-0, for the Pfeiffer freshmen haven't had a meet yet. Barnes regards this as a warmup for the big clash between the two local undefeated frosh grapplers, UNC and Duke, here next Saturday. The UNC varsity lineups follow:

WEST VIRGINIA STARTERS
123—Paul Wellstone
130—Ken Furr
137—Russ Simmons
147—Dick Blackmon
157—Bob Hicks or Gary Garris

177—Steve Lister

Frosh Meet Wake Babies At 4 Today

It was one month ago to this very day that North Carolina's freshman basketball team took a 2-2 record to Winston-Salem. Though its line-up was filled with blue-ribbon players, the UNC frosh team was struggling to find itself.

The discovery was made that night. Wake fell, 89-77, and the Tar Babies have not lost since. This afternoon at four Ken Rosemond's sharpshooters will be gunning for their eighth straight victory—and the opponent once again is Wake Forest.

"This is the best offensive team we've ever had here at Carolina," says Rosemond, obviously pleased at the way his team has come along to its present 8-2 record. "Lewis is a blue-chip player—in the class with your Robertsons and Heymans and Cunninghams. And Morrison and Gauntlett are both excellent shooters."

Bobby Lewis (37.6), Ian Morrison (19.0) and Tom Gauntlett (13.8) have been doing most of the scoring while Donnie Moe and Danny Talbott have handled playmaking chores. The combination has been a successful one.

The visiting Deaclets, though beset with backcourt problems, have a fine frontcourt pair in Jim Boshart and Jim Altergarden, and will not be mere mechanical ducks when the Tar Babies take aim in the battle following the varsity game.

– UNC Looks To Break Jinx –

its starters hitting in double figures.

Frank Christie (14.7) who got a career high of 25 in the teams' first duel, and Rich Carmichael (11.9) are the forwards, Ronny Watts (13.3) the center, and Butch Hassell (14.2) and soph Bob Leonard (13.1) the guards.

Richard Herring is a comelately strong sixth man.

For Carolina, Cunningham is top dog (26 points, 16 rebounds a game) while Ray Respess (15) and Bryan McSweeney (7) are the forwards and Charlie Shaffer (14) and Mike Cooke (11) the guards.

Cunningham is, incidentally, the country's 19th highest scorer and its eighth leading rebounder. Only one man in collegiate basketball is ahead of The Kid in both scoring and rebounding.

Jim Barnes, the "Bad News" man of Texas Western, is eighth in points, third in rebounds. His marks are 30.2 and 21.1.

Fifty demonstrators were arrested last night, bringing the day's total to 98 when they broke off from a parade through Chapel Hill and sat down at the intersection of Franklin and Columbia Streets.

A white spectator, whom police identified as Clyde Ray Jones of Carrboro, was forced to the ground and charged with disorderly conduct after he refused to heed police warnings not to drag demonstrators to the police van.

Four of the highways leading out of Chapel were tied up yesterday afternoon by civil rights demonstrations which resulted in 98 arrests and several minor incidents of violence.

More demonstrations were expected last night after marchers regrouped in the Church of God on Franklin Street in Carrboro.

The highway sit-ins followed two marches by more than 300 persons earlier in the afternoon.

Demonstrators gathered in the Church of God between 12 and 1:30 p.m with singing and speeches by civil rights leaders.

Representatives of all 12 of the state's Congress of Racial Equality chapters were here for a leadership conference.

Demonstrators also came from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, (NAACP), the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), the Student Peace Union (SPU) and the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF).

The first march started from the church at 1:45 p.m. Pat Cusick, SPU field secretary, led the non-violent oath by 280 marchers, 68 of them white.

Floyd McKissick, national chairman of CORE and first Negro student to attend UNC, led the march down Franklin Street.

The demonstrators marched silently in double file to the Post Office, then turned and marched back towards Carrboro. At the Columbia Street intersection they split into two single lines on either side of the street and marched back to the church.

Traffic was held up briefly as they crossed at the intersections, but there were no incidents.

Some 60 people joined the march before it returned to the church, half of them white.

Back in the church, demonstrators were told to leave if they did not want to go to jail. They were warned that the next demonstration would involve arrests.

More than half the marchers left at this point, many of them UNC students.

At 3:30 p.m., 110 silent demonstrators left the church in double file. They marched to the corner of Franklin and Columbia Streets and walked in a large S into the middle of the intersection.

At a signal from leaders, all 110 sat down.

After about one minute, the demonstrators rose and marched back to Carrboro along the sidewalk.

Some of the marchers stayed at the intersection and staged another sit-down at 4:15 p.m. The heavy basketball traffic was tied up for 15 minutes before the police could clear the street.

A crowd of 150 spectators, mostly UNC students, gathered to watch and taunt the eight demonstrators who were arrested. Three were white.

Meanwhile sit-down demonstrations were occurring on the Raleigh Road near the Institute of Government, the Durham Road, the Pittsboro Road, the Hillsboro Road and Woollen Gym.

The Raleigh Road demonstration occurred at 3:45 p.m. just as the basketball games ended at Woollen Gym.

Seven demonstrators, two of them white, stood in the road with signs, but were arrested after blocking several cars for about five minutes.

Five demonstrators, three of them white, blocked traffic for 30 minutes just west of Eastgate Shopping Center. Cars backed up for nearly half a mile on both sides of the road, holding up the police cars.

Cars driven by civil rights sympathizers helped form the road block by parking diagonally across the road.

The demonstrators received some harassment before being hauled away by police.

At Woollen Gym, 15 demonstrators blocked both parking lot driveways and were dragged away by Campus Police. The demonstrators received rough treatment from the police but were not arrested.

One Negro girl narrowly escaped being run down when she tried to jump back in front of a car. On the Pittsboro Road, near Merritt's gas station, 11 demonstrators blocked up traffic for 24 minutes.

Dr. Robert C. Miller, a UNC History professor, who was one of the first to arrive, phoned the police.

Several men from the gas station and from the stopped cars, began roughly dragging the demonstrators to the side of the road. The demonstrators jumped back in the road as soon as they had been hauled off.

Signs were torn from the demonstrator's hands, and two or three of them were struck and thrown into the bushes along the curb.

Dr. Miller and other bystanders helped prevent any further rough treatment.

After the police had cleared the road, a photographer from WSOC in Charlotte was rushed by some of the men. He was struck once or twice, but was able to protect his camera with the aid of the police.

Police Lt. Graham Creel, commenting on the hot-tempered men, said: "Boy it's almost too wet to plough."

Seven more demonstrators were arrested in a sit-down on the Hillsboro Road. There was no violence and little traffic tie-up.

An Inside View

By KERRY SIPE

"They will try to tell you that you are trespassing. We know that is not so."

The speaker was a tall blond-headed young man. On his dungaree jacket he wore an emblem of a white and colored hand locked in a handshake. His listeners were young people, too three white and five Negro.

I had followed them on their massive march in silence down Franklin Street in one of the largest anti-segregation protests ever staged in the town of Chapel Hill.

The march was minutes over and this small group of nine had reconvened on the sidewalk in front of the University Baptist Church. I moved closer to hear what was said.

"Remember, we are not looking for trouble. We are only dramatizing the failure of Chapel Hill to insure equal rights to each of its citizens. Our only crime is race." The young man, had the tone of a football coach before a game. One of the girls in the group asked me if I had a match.

"The Police are not going to hurt you. When they ask you to leave, you will let your entire body go limp. You will be carried into a police car and taken to the station. There's a technique to this."

He laid down prone on the sidewalk. Another in the group lifted his hand and let it fall limply to the ground.

"Act like a stick of butter getting ready to melt. You are not resisting arrest. Don't be afraid of that. You are just refusing to assist in your arrest. They are not going to hurt you. Just lie limp and some nice man (laughter) in a blue uniform will come soon and take you away. You are not alone. It's being done all over Chapel Hill today. They won't harm you. Relax, unbutton the top button of your shirt, and let them move you if they want you moved."

The eight who listened nodded that they understood.

Sit-Down At Gym

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Fifteen demonstrators, including six whites staged a sit-down demonstration in front of the two parking lot exits on boths sides of Woollen Gymnasium yesterday, blocking traffic as basketball fans left the UNC-Wake Forest encounter.

Campus Police Chief A. J. Beaumont refused to arrest the demonstrators—instead he and members of his staff dragged the demonstrators away from the exits. Only a few cars were able to get through before the demonstrators were again sitting down at the two exits.

Several drivers got out of their cars and pleaded with the demonstrators to move. One lady said she had to take her little boy to a birthday party.

Things nearly got out of hand when an obviously harried Chief Beaumont told the demonstrators they were going to get hurt if the didn't quit sitting down in front of the traffic.

One unidentified demonstrator repeatedly tried to throw himself in front of oncoming cars and trucks at one of the exits. He was held back by fellow demontrators.

"What are you, drugged or something?" Beaumont asked the demonstrator. "I don't know what you are," he later told the same demonstrator. "You've had your fun, now get out of here." Many of the some 200 onlookers roared their approval to Beaumont's remarks to the demonstrators.

After the parking lots were emptied, the 15 demonstrators got up and walked back to CORE headquarters. Much of the crowd followed them, but later dropped out.

UNC (Finally) Defeats Wake Forest By 81-73 As Billy C Marks 33

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

If ever a basketball game was won in the first half, North Carolina did it here yesterday.

The Tar Heels and their remarkable ace, Billy Cunningham, threw everything but the television cables at Wake Forest in the first 20 minutes and held on later to come off with the sweetest victory this side of February 29—81-73.

Coach Dean Smith got this—his first decision over the Deacons in seven tries—with a first half 59.4 per cent shooting blitz which produced a big 45-30 intermission lead.

But the win did not come before UNC played peek-a-boo in the final ten minutes and let Wake approach as close as five points before, finally, beating the hated rival for the first time since 1961.

Cunningham, playing perhaps the greatest of his great games, scored 18 points in the first half, gathered numerous rebounds and blocked shots like a big cat as Carolina romped to its 15-point early margin.

Smith kept his team running with the Deacons to the middle of the second period as Billy and Charlie Shaffer led an assault off the boards and combined for many easy layups.

But, with the score 67-52 UNC, he called a halt, and for the rest of the time, the Tar Heels looked like they were just biding time till they could give the coach his first top-of-the-shoulders ride of the season.

Carolina scored but 14 points in the final ten minutes; they had started stalling almost too soon.

For Wake Forest came battling back with a sticky press, and the regional TV audience saw the Deacons trail by 10 (78-68) with just 90 seconds left; and by five (78-73) wih 12 seconds remaining.

Cunningham then dramatically settled it with a three-point play —made the All-America way—in reverse. The Kid was fouled at mid-court, got the one-and-one, and made the first. He then missed the second (not deliberately, he said afterwards), but rushed in and jammed the rebound home, anyway. Sum: 33 points, 12 rebounds, and 81-73 Carolina.

Both clubs opened with man-for-man defenses, & UNC jumped out to a 20-15 lead as Cunningham scored 12 points. Frank Christie, who took him most of the game, Ronnie Watts and Rich Herring alernated on the Tar Heel gunner—but not with too much success.

Wake Forest kept it respectable for a few more minutes — UNC was now in a 1-3-1 zone—until, at 26-20, the Tar Heels made the first of two big spurts.

With Billy passing off for baskets underneath, Shaffer hitting a couple of all-alone layups and free throws taking care of missed baskets, Carolina ran it to 35-21. Watts' foul shot at the 6:07 mark was the only counter for Wake Forest.

Then, the Tar Heels really brought the house down. After Rich Carmichael put in two free throws, UNC scored six straight. Cunningham rebounded for a goal, went spinning and pumping for another, and fed Mike Cooke for a third.

It was 42-23 and 2:30 remained before Christie canned a jumper for Wake's first fielder since Butch Hassell had made it 26-20 at 6:25.

Shaffer's drive off a beautiful feed from Billy Galantai and Ray Respess' corner jump gave Carolina its biggest lead of the day (45-25). But Watts hit a lay-up, Carmichael got two foul shots and Watts a third for the 45-30 halftime score.

Wake Forest came from the break determined to make a game of it. The Deacons pressed all over the court and outscored UNC 18-13 after the first seven minutes.

Cunningham got five early points, and it was 58-42, but Christie drove and Herring got two buckets to cut it to 10.

The Tar Heels then ran a little bit more and from 61-52, scored six straight — baskets by Shaffer, Cunningham and McSweeney producing the 67-52 lead before UNC could no longer stand the prosperity and had to play keep-away.

Carolina shot a sizzling 54.5 for the game, but the Deacons had a quite respectable 44.4 themselves. They made 52.9 per cent in the second half.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES

UNC's Ray Hassell was a surprize starter at guard in place of Cooke and performed his ball-handling chores well.

The Beaufort sophomore committed three personal fouls in the game—all offenses against his cousin, Butch, who is a senior starter for the Deacons. But it was Butch's foul on Ray that was the most momentous. It was the fifth and disqualifying one that sent him to the bench with 30 seconds left in the game.

Cunningham said afterward he thought this was the best UNC had played all year. The Tar Heels will need to be just as sharp in New York Wednesday night—in a setting Cunningham and his Gotham teammates have waited for a long, long time.

UNC maintained its hold on seecond place in the ACC with a 5-3 record. The Tar Heels are 10-5 over-all. Wake is now 7-9 for the season, 3-4 in the league.

Bad Day For Weak Ears As Heels Out-Shout Deacs

By MAT FRIEDMAN

You could tell it wasn't just another basketball game.

The grim expressions on the faces of the Carolina players showed it. And you could hear that the buzz of the crowd was just a little more excited than usual.

When the players were introduced, you needed a program to tell the home team. The announcer's voice was completely drowned out by the din.

Even the usually placid Dean Smith seemed caught up in the excitement. He gave one of his players an inspired pat on the backside—and smiled.

At the end he was still smiling—to the tune of 81-73.

It was a bad day for people with weak ear drums—and for Deacons. Even Bones McKinney was slow getting started. More than five minutes were gone before he screamed about a call.

But Bones regained his form. His red socks blazed all afternoon but were often dull compared to his face. The Deacon jumping jack got really hopped up at the end of the half. He thought Charlie Shaffer was goal-tending—and let the referees know what he thought.

Things you might have missed on television:

* Billy Cunningham forcefully lecturing Rich Carmichael on how to conduct himself under the boards. Carmichael knew whose day it was. He didn't try to talk back.

* A Wake Forest cheerleader dressed up to look like a drunk deacon. Before halftime, he looked more like a deacon with a hangover.

* Lou Bello, his usually vociferous self, taking advantage of a pause in the action to cast a quick glance at the Carolina cheerleader, thinking, perhaps, that they were a little better looking than the drunk deacon.

The Obligation To Declare

The initial reaction to Student Body President Mike Lawler's suggestion that students boycott all businesses which discriminate on the basis of race has been heartening. Nevertheless, for the policy to be really effective it must be subscribed to publicly by other student leaders, plus individual students and faculty members.

This will not be easy for some to do. It will mean alienating some friends and risking censure. But, clearly, it must be done. We must use our economic and moral weight to support those businesses which have made a break with the past, and weaken those which have not.

Most of us are tired of carrying the albatross of racial discrimination around our collective necks. If we are ever to throw it off, we must act boldly, positively and in unison. There must be no question of where we stand.

If the long-mistreated Negro can sit-in for his freedom, then we can write-in for ours.

We call on every student and faculty member on this campus to put off this obligation no longer. The future of race relations in Chapel Hill is largely in our hands. Let this be the year we remember as the one in which we stood up for what is right, the year in which we used the tools of our academic training to implement the morals of our background.

Student leaders of every variety have a special obligation to do this, in their roles as fashioners of opinion and leaders of their fellows.

Faculty members, too, especially those in positions of departmental leadership, have an obligation to declare themselves.

For those individuals who waver in making a decision to vote against discrimination with their dollars, it should be recalled that had we acted earlier the tragedy of yesterday might well have been averted and our own sense of honor grown to fuller stature.

The Daily Tar Heel will be glad to publish declarations against discrimination on its editorial page. We hope your name is on one such declaration.

Inventory Time

The Biblical Recorder

"I must say that the churches have been lagging badly in this great human struggle . . . We preachers are afraid of our skins. The church is the most segregated major agency in America—north and south."

The speaker was Dr. H. Shelton Smith, a Durham minister and professor emeritus at Duke University, and the occasion was the meeting of the N. C. Good Neighbor Council at Wilson. We think his words are especially timely as Baptist in this state approach Human Relations Sunday, Feb. 9.

Business, industry and government continue to lead the way in breaking down racial barriers and prejudices. This development is puzzling to some people, especially to those who never attend church. Some progress has been made in our Baptist churches in this state, but much more remains to be done. It's inventory time.

Knavery's Root: Apathy

By RALPH McGILL

A printing shop owner was one of 50 persons interviewed in an informal sidewalk survey on the subject of Col. John Glenn, the U.S. astronaut, becoming a candidate for the Democratic party nomination to the U.S. Senate.

The businessman said he was disappointed that Col Glenn was going into politics because he felt "Glenn is a high-type, an all-American boy, and it (getting into politics) doesn't make sense."

A housewife voiced a similar comment. Politics, she said, was a bad choice because "he's such a good person that he should not get involved."

Here revealed are commonplace reactions by Americans who would, if polled, declare themselves strongly in support of "the American Way of Life." Politics is the American way of life, the American system. We elect all those who govern us, from the most humble local office to the highest, that of the presidency. We are a nation that lives, for, of, and by politics . . .

Our Constitution, which rather elaborately spells out our representative form of government, is the oldest written constitution in the modern world. When it formally was adopted there was a monarch on the throne of France, reigning by divinee right of kings. There was a Czar in the palace at St. Petersburg, a Sultan in Constantinople, a Holy Roman emperor, a Venetian Republic, a Dutch Republic, an emperor in China, and a God-descended Mikado in Japan.

The able British historian, D. W. Brogan, and others have commented that since 1789, when the Constitution was adopted, forms and realities have changed less in the United States than in any other political organization. We have lived within the framework of that Constitution, and our way of life, our "system," is political.

Yet, we find that many Americans tend to create a gulf between themselves and politics, preferring the worst connotation of the world to the best. This has been true with us from the beginning. It is one of the weaknesses of our "system." A high percentage of those qualified do not vote. Some, indeed, fail to register. Others distrust "politics." Politics is not, in their minds, something that an all-American boy ought to get into. Politics is not something for a nice young man.

That politicians have merited distrust and condemnation is true. But public apathy, tolerance, or a feeling of being alienated from "politics" is at the root of all, or almost all, political knavery and inefficiency.

South Dakota's legislature recently made official abolishment of the poll tax in federal elections. We saw then the sorry spectacle of some Southern states, including Virginia, moving to restrict the suffrage by making poll tax payments necessary in all state and local elections. The Southern states have a lower percentage of voter participation than states in other regions. The Negro has, until recently, been disfranchised in the South. The one-party situation and the literacy percentage also contributed to the low total of Southern voters.

But the accusing fact is that the Southern white voter goes to the polls less than white voters in other regions. He has been conditioned, in too many rural localities, to accept the fact that "the court house crowd" ran things and his vote didn't really matter.

This now is changing. The qualified Negro is coming to the ballot. Reapportionment has loosened rural control, though it is not broken. Georgia, kept in literal political bondage, has been freed of the iniquitous county unit system which, along with other things, perpetuated demagoguery and inefficiency, and made corruption more possible—and likely. Politics will improve and attract better young men in the South.

Happily, the American system, or way of life, continues to attract some good young men, nice enough and courageous enough to take the criticism, smearing and emotional jostling that is part of campaigning. President Kennedy's inspiration and contribution in this area was—and is—enormous.

It makes very good sense, the printing shop owner and the housewife to the contrary notwithstanding, for a high type, all-American boy to get into the American business of politics. We, the American people, live and have our being of and by politics.

Letters To The Editor

Mr. Curtis And Mr. Lawler

(Ed. Note: The following letter was submitted to Student Legislature Speaker Bob Spearman at last Thursday's session. We reprint it here for the enjoyment of all our readers.)

Mr. Robert Spearman
Speaker of the Legislature
University of North Carolina
Chapel Hill, North Carolina

Dear Mr. Speaker:

Now that the great Wayne King has departed, I guess that Henry Lawler and myself have the somewhat dubious distinction of being the old men of the undergraduates here at the University. Sometimes as I look back over my years at Carolina I question whether or not it's been worth it.

For instance, for coming to Carolina I was accused of being a communist, a nigger lover, and an alcoholic.

At Carolina I've been bawled out by the girls, held up by merchants, held down by professors, hung over from booze, chewed out by my parents, bulldozed into blind dates, mouched from by friends, and all walked on by the administration.

I've had to pay library fees, lab fees, infirmary fees, a few parking and speeding fines, and now, God help me, before I can graduate, I must also pay a graduation fee.

At Carolina I've been asked to either join, support, attend, read, listen to, work for, or watch the SP, UP, the YAF, the YDC, the YRC, the YMCA, the CAA, GM, the DTH, the NAACP, CORE, the PLC, the IDC, the IFC, the AFROTC, the NROTC, the CUSC, the NSA, WUNC-FM and/or WUNC-TV.

When I was active in student Government, I was accused of doing it for personal recognition, now that I'm no longer active, I'm said to be apathetic.

When I made good grades, they say I'm lucky, when I make poor grades, they say I'm a bad student.

When I attend church, I'm said to be a hypocrite; when I don't go, I'm said to be a hardened heathen.

If I date a girl only once, it was said that she dropped me; If I dated a girl more than once, it was rumored all over the campus that there is some hanky-panky going on.

If I had joined a fraternity, I would have been a Frat Rat; since I didn't I'm now called a dorm rat.

When I have plenty of money to spend I'm accused of being a playboy, and my father is said to be dishonest; when I'm broke, I'm said to be a bad manager, and my father is accused of being a bad provider.

After all this, one might question why I chose to come back to school for one more semester. I guess I just wanted to see what else could possibly happen next.

Tonight it happened. I've been threatened with dismissal from a position from which I have resigned three times. It all started in September when I told Henry Lawler that I did not have time, due to my rather delicate academic condition, to do justice to my appointment. Old Hank just kinda laughed and talked me into trying for a couple of months. Again about a month and a half later, I submitted another resignation . . . this one written, but undated . . . which was simply ignored.

Finally, I submitted a final resignation around the first of December in which I stated that I would no longer be able to continue to perform the duties of the Campus Affairs Board Chairman or as Head of the Department of Campus Affairs under any circumstances. This finally got some action as the President wrote a letter to legislature stating that he would appoint a successor as soon as I submitted a report to him concerning Carrier Current. This was done approximately three weeks ago.

As I told Henry, I do not feel that this report on Campus Radio is at all sufficient. To be complete, such a report would encompass some 100-200pages, and since this was the case I felt that several conferences with him would better serve the purpose of presenting the facts as I have found them concerning Carrier Current. THEN, after some preliminary decisions were made, I would then be more than happy to write a complete report of our progress. Even Arthur Hayes said that he felt that was reasonable . . . and everybody knows that Arthur Hayes knows more about reports than Henry Lawler knows about philosphysing . . . and whatever Arthur says is good enough for me.

With Fond memories of the Henry Lawler Administration, I remain,
Donald William Curtis

Smith On Smith

Editors, The Tar Heel

I would like to take issue with Washington Lee Smith's letter to the editors which appeared in the February 6th issue of the DTH. Mr. Smith, seemingly contends that not only school and public accommodation facilities should be integrated by federal order but that social integration is a valid cause to merit such a forceful method of accomplishment.

I would like to impress upon Mr. Smith the fact that his love for freedom, if this method of integration were carried out, would surely be endangered, along with his freedom of social choice and right to pursue a government-free endeaver of private enterprise.

Using Mr. Smith's formula, America might set up a "Commission on Morality" which would seek out and prosecute all people who do not accept their fellow man or conduct themselves in an arbitrarily defined manner of morality—the French Jacobins tried this during the French Revolution and decapitated 20,000 people before they finished purging the enemies of the Republic and the "undesirable" members of that society. Our country's laws now guarantee every man his rights to his liberties, with responsibility accompanying these freedoms; however, there is no constitutional method of securing moral justice in such cases as segregated businesses and social fraternities — painful reflections upon society's equality but not unlawful institutions.

Also, Mr. Smith's reference to the Confederate soldiers who died during the Civil War, as traitors to their country and enemies of freedom, is the most obscene thing I've heard since the Watts waitress incident. The men of grey, of which the majority were not slave owners, but proponents of states' rights (a still unsettled question in America) were defenders of their beliefs, which was a faith in self government—not a strong central government. The institution of slavery was a horrible and damning mark to our country but this was not the main motive for the War between the states. General Robert E. Lee's freeing of his slaves before Lincoln's emancipation order is an indication that there were deeper reasons for secession from the Union—a love of individual liberty, again with responsibility, which motivated a belief in states' rights. Our country has many reasons for shame — the mistreatment of the American Indians; the persecution of the Mormans; Klu Klux Klan rallies earlier in the century and many more, but we must learn to forget these atrocities and strive for a better society. This will not happen by trying to force, with legislation, humanitarianism upon the remaining diehard hold-outs of biasness who stem from narrow minded origins.

If Mr. Smith advocates a powerful central government with the rights of moral judgment, then he would probably be happy living in some form of dictatorship. There are such governments in the world today—Red China, Cuba, Russia, etc. — from which people are literally dying to escape. I am sure that these governments would welcome the assention to their society of people like Mr. Smith, to fill in the gap caused by those whose love for liberty has made them run the chance of death to escape slavery.

It is ironical that the crux of Mr. Smith's argument stems from a disapproval of slavery.

Republicans

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In your editorial "The GOP In Wonderland" of Feb. 7, your efforts to be cute were achieved only at the expense of a misstatement of facts in both of your indictments of prominent Republicans.

You stated that Mr. Cobb, former State Republican Chairman, was caught with two wives. He was not! Your statement is synonomous with accusing him of committing bigamy — a serious charge. However, when the story first broke, a prominent jurist said that no such infraction had occurred. Then, your statement is libelous.

In the same editorial you stated that Guilford County Senator Charles Strong used "official State Stationery" to solicit insurance customers. He did not!

Apparently, both of these charges were made off the top of your head for only a brief review of the facts first reported would reveal that neither of these indictments is well founded.

Sir, it wouldn't require too much effort to first check the facts in a controversy before blasting away and it would make a lot better reading.

Charles Heatherly

"On The Other Hand, Think Of The Alternatives"

Currently by Fred Seely

The good Reverend B. Elton Cox has sounded the clarion of sacrifice for the Negro cause, but it looks as though he will have few takers.

Cox, who preaches regularly to the people of High Point and irregularly to the rest of the state, has taken it upon himself to suggest that those who believe in the Negro revolt should make a sacrifice for it, namely, themselves.

In a speech here Sunday, he advocated immolation — sitting on a street corner, dousing oneself with gasoline and lighting a match. In fact, he implied that he might do it himself on Easter Sunday if the situation did not improve.

Then, on Wednesday, Cox said that he had been misquoted. The Daily Tar Heel had a photographer and two reporters at the first meeting, and all heard him make the threat. In fact, he was later asked to clarify his statement and repeated it.

As one local wag commented, "It's a pity he won't go through with it—we could get Mrs. Watts to come put out the fire."

Add to Reverend Cox the three gentlemen in Asheboro who plan to lock themselves in coffins on Memorial Day if racial progress is not made in that city. To make it all the more dramatic, they have already ordered them.

The news of the great occasion-to-come was received with laughs, and the three martyrs-to-be haven't said much about it lately.

People like this bunch just don't make the situation any better, and there really isn't much chance that John Carswell, Carlton Mize or Austin Watts will decide to serve Negroes because one or two of them commit suicide.

And I don't think that public opinion will turn in favor of the Negro cause, as the immolators will be viewed as crackpots.

I am a bit disgusted when Floyd McKissick tells the Negro community of this area that they should encourage their children to participate in demonstrations.

These kids are the ones who will bring the Negro to full equality, and they will do it by education and awareness of the times, added to the many dollars that are being spent by the integrationist group to make America cognizant of their situation.

And these kids cannot gain an education in jail or in the streets clapping their hands and singing. This can only breed hate for the white people, and their young minds can only construe the demonstrations as being action against evil people.

North Carolina's gubernatorial aspirants seem to be content with sniping at each other, promising sidewalks and holding rallies. Issues are few and far between.

Preyer has been accused of being soft on Communism (by Lake) and, even worse, of being soft on Terry Sanford (by Moore). Moore has been called a liberal (by Lake) and, even worse, an arch-conservative (by Preyer). And Lake has been called all sorts of bad things by everybody.

If Floyd McKissick, the Godhead of the North Carolina integrationists, decides to enter the campaign, we might hear some debate. If not, it will have to be Ray Stansbury, the grocer from Hillsboro.

Because it looks as though Preyer, Lake and Moore are content with the present situation.

Legendary Smokey: Maybe He's A Pyro

Smokey the Bear is a creep insists THE GUARDSMAN, City College of San Francisco. (California)

Ever since the Animal Decency League gave him an old Mountie hat, he's been romping around the hills shaking his shovel at anyone trying to keep warm.

Are we to stay cooped up in our overcrowded cities just because one lousy bear wants to romp around in the woods? Are we going to hold up progress on account of one rather silly-looking bear?

This was not the idea of our founding fathers. They envisioned a great nation, stretching from shore to shore, not a sanctuary for a neurotic, honey-crazed bruin. In our country's great western expansion, our ancestors met with many hardships such as starvation, bitterly cold winters and Smokey's ancestors.

But let's examine motives. Could Smokey be covering up something besides burnt-our campfires? In his fantatical efforts to stop happy campers from blazing up the forests, could Smokey be hiding his own hidden desires and transgressions?

Might it be possible that this docile bruin in long pants actually is a pyromaniac? Perhaps those pockets in his jeans are hiding the big fellow's Ronson.

After all, someone has to keep Smokey in a job. And who sparks all those fires that are attributed to lightning?

In closing, let us say that there is still hope we may be delivered from this forestry dictator. Remember, forest fires do wipe out bears!

U. S. Skiers Kidd, Heuga Win Medals

INNSBRUCK, Austria (UPI) —A pair of 20-year-old mighty mites gave the United States its first men's ski medals in Olympic history Saturday when Billy Kidd of Stowe, Vt., rocketed from behind to finish second in the dangerous men's slalom and Jimmie Heuga of Tahoe City, Calif., placed third.

The winner was Austria's intrepid Pepi Stiegler but the veteran, who finished second in 1960, had an advantage of only .14 second on ailing silver medal winner Kidd for two twisting runs over different courses and .39 on Heuga, who grabbed the bronze medal. Kidd has been suffering from a heavy chest cold for more than a week.

An eighth place finish by Wallace (Bud) Werner of Steamboat Springs, Colo., further stunned the alpine experts who saw many of their illustrious French, Austrian and Swiss favorites either crash or post slow times.

It Was Smith's Baby So Have A Big Cigar

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Dean Smith leaned up against the tiled wall outside his team's locker room. He looked every bit like a guy who had just spent two anxious hours awaiting that moment when he becomes a Dad for the first time. The Tar Heel coach heaved a sigh of relief—a real big one—and began handing out verbal cigars.

"Strategy didn't win this one," said Smith. "We simply had five guys out there who were playing their hearts out. We just wanted this one too much to lose it. You hear all this talk about a Wake Forest jinx and you know it's time to do something about it."

Sweat dripped from Smith's brow as well as from the can of Coca-Cola which he clutched in one hand. It had been a hot afternoon in Woollen Gym. When Wake Forest and Carolina get together for a game of basketball things are always hot—especially the Deacons these last three years. But the Tar Heels put an end to Wake's six-game jinx yesterday, and they wasted no time in letting the fans know what the final outcome was going to be.

"We got off real fast," voiced Smith, "Especially Billy (Cunningham). He started like a house afire."

"We worked harder this week than ever before," said Cunningham, who came up with one of the best performances of his already dazzling career. "We really wanted this one—especially for coach. And we got it — I think we're rolling now."

"The Kid." who was a real crowd pleaser all afternoon, felt that the team's backcourt work was the best it's been all year.

"They worked the ball in great," said Cunningham. "Ray (Hassell) really helps us a lot."

Down the hallway, in the visitor's dressing room, "Bones" McKinney had his own special version of the game.

"There was no turning point in this game, except maybe the National Anthem," said the human yo-yo who coaches the Deacons. "Cunningham was great. First he shoots from the outside and we can't stop him out there. Then he goes inside for those bloop-bloop things and we can't stop him there either."

McKinney waved and twisted his arms through the air to demonstrate the "bloop-bloop" shot. Reporters chuckled but McKinney found little humor in the whole affair.

Actually Smith didn't find the game humorous either—just immensely gratifying. And, like Cunningham, Smith also had words of praise for Hassell—the little guard who has provided a big spark in UNC's last two games.

"We put Ray on his cousin Butch Hassell, hoping to make a family feud out of it which would spur Ray on. I guess it worked, cause Ray did a great defensive job on Butch."

Yes, it worked. Everything worked yesterday. If Smith can just locate Jeff Mullins' cousin, the Tar Heels might just climb the family tree all the way to Kansas City.

Track Team Rips 88-16 Win; Freshmen Join In State Rout

By BILL LEE

The Tar Heel thinclads pulled double victories yesterday, as both the varsity and freshmen topped NC State. The varsity score was an overwhelming 88-16, and the frosh won 70-38.

The varsity scored eleven firsts out of the 12 meet events, the only loss being in the mile-relay when Dale White stumbled in the middle of the first leg.

In the pole-vault, Bill Busby jumped 12 feet for first place, with Bob Bowerman of UNC and Hugh Cox of State following at 12-6.

Harvy Whitley captured first in the broad jump with a leap of 20-2½. Wayne Burchette of UNC was second at 19-5½, and Cox of State was third.

In the shot-put, Bill Graham heaved the iron 46-8¼ to take first. Dave Ellis of State was second, and Tom Cardell of UNC was third.

Milt Baugess, Rich Ambrose, and Adger Stokes provided a clean sweep in the 70-yard high-hurdles as Baugess posted a winning time of 9.2.

The 60-yard dash was another Carolina sweep as Ronnie Jackson, White, and John McNinch led the Pack. Jackson's winning time was 6.4.

Yet another total victory was piled up in the 70-yard low hurdles by White, Baugess, and Ambrose. An 8-6 was the best time.

Mike Folk turned in a 4:20.4 mile for first, as Mel Woodcock of State and Jerry Smith of UNC followed. Al Dobritch, and Bob Bennett took first and second in the 600, with the winning time set at 1:16.1.

Dave Peltz scored a 2:00 victory in the 880, with Worth Helms of UNC and Paul Haskins of State behind him.

Art Maillett took first in the two-mile run and John Dykstra followed. The winning time was 9:29.6 Helmes, Smith, Folk and Bennett used an 8:13.1 to capture the 2-mile relay.

Tommy Clark was unchallenged to pick up the lone place with a 6-2 high jump.

The frosh were led by Bob McLean and Johnny Johnson as the two together accounted for three firsts, three seconds and a third. Johnson won the pole vault at 13 feet. McLean took first in both hurdle events.

Frosh Rally Sends Wake Down, 88-83

BY AL KAPLAN

UNC's Tar Babies, behind by eight at the half and by as many as sixteen in the second period, came all the way back to eke out an 88-83 victory over the Deaclets of Wake Forest, yesterday at the Woollen Gymnasium.

Deaclets held an eight-point advantage at the half, mainly on the scoring of Tom Boshart and Sherrill Whitaker—two big boys (6-5 and 6-7). Boshart, who averages 21 points per game, had 18 and Whitaker eight.

Wake started off quickly, jumping to an 11-4 lead with only three minutes gone, but Bob Lewis, Tar Baby scoring machine, got a hot hand and led UNC to a surge that knotted the count at 21, with 10:13 left. The next few minutes saw the lead see-saw back and forth four times until the Deacs pulled away.

At the begining of the second half it appeared as though the Deacs would make the game into a mauling for the Tar Babies, outscoring them 16-6, to hold a 62-46 lead with 17:07 left.

From that point on it appeared as if the Deaclets had died. UNC fought back to within five points, 62-57, scoring nine straight. The Tar Babies wouldn't quit and tied the score, 66-66, with 10:00 left, on a jump shot by Tom Guantlett. From 17:07 to the time the score was tied, Wake was outscored 20-6.

Ian Morrison, Tar Baby guard, was the hero of the game. Although he shot sparingly he made his points count. His jump shot at 7:09 gave UNC its biggest lead, four points, and his six foul shots in a row put the game out of reach. Morrison attempted only eight shots from the floor and made five. He was 7 for 8 from the charity line, giving him a total of 17 points.

Carolina Swimmers Splash Deacs, 61-34

By PERRY McCARTY

UNC's Blue Dolphins downed the Wake Forest swimmers by a convincing 61-34 margin yesterday. The Heels took ten of eleven first places as they encountered only slight opposition along the way.

Fred Lipp saw yeoman duty as he won the 200-fly and came came back two events later to swim the grueling 500-free, winning in a respectable 5:48.3. Overdue Rick Forum covered the 200-breaststroke in a brilliant 2:26 to establish a new University record. Forum's mark is eight tenths faster than the previous standard of 2:26.8.

Harrison Merrill covered the initial hundred yards of the 400-freestyle realy in 48.5. This mark, now pending, would be a new university record if given official recognition.

Other first place winners for UNC were Chip Smith in the 50-free, Davis Roberts in the 200-free, Joe Lea in the individaul medley, Earnie Oare—diving, and Scott Smiley in the 200 backstroke.

Mann, Forum, Lipp, and Merrill won the initial medley relay with a splended 3:46.7 clocking while Roberts and John Sheldon joined Mann and Merrill for a 3:20 and first place in the freestyle relay.

The Wake meet provided a relaxing interlude between last week's stiff competition and the all-important N. C. State meet next Wednesday (Feb. 12).

UNC freshmen swimmers posted twin victories over area high schools this weekend (71-24 over Broughton and 58-37 over Myers Park.)

Buzzy Stubbs Resigns As Attorney-General

Lawler Dispute Cited

Attorney General Buzzy Stubbs resigned yesterday.

Mike Lawler, President of the Student Body, apnounced that he had accepted Stubbs' resignation and had appointed Whitney Durand, present Men's Council chairman, to the vacant post.

Student Legislature will consider the new appointment in a special session tonight. The Men's Council will also meet to elect a new chairman.

The letter of resignation and Lawler's acceptance are printed below:

Dear Mr. Speaker:

In light of recent events I'd like to give a bit of explanation surrounding my departure from the Attorney General's office. Contrary to popular belief, my resignation was not related to civil rights or for that matter any particular incident. The dispute between Lawler and me has been a question about the function of the judiciary itself and the process of decision-making. I readily recognize his power to replace appointments and, in view of my own attitudes and methods, I can appreciate, in all honesty, his interest mor suitable to the present more suitable to the present administration. A compromise has been reached, and I am happy with the entire situation.

With gratitude for having had the opportunity for two years, I leave with best wishes to all for a successful and happy Springtime.

Cordially,
Buzzy Stubbs

Dear Mr. Speaker,

I have received the resignation of Mr. Buzzy Stubbs, Attorney General for the Student Body. Buzzy has brought a sincere and refined concern for the larger issues of student discipline to this office for nearly two years. Though Buzzy and I have at times disagreed upon implementation of statutes and/or policy, I want to express my commendation for these two years of service he has rendered to the student judiciary. He has brought a fine composure and personal manner to this office so fraught with difficulties in these times. Buzzy's work has created a thoughtfulness and personality in the workings of the staff vital to the relationship of the student judiciary to its constituents and to the University Administration.

I wish to announce the appointment of Mr. Whitney Durand to fill the vacancy created by this resignation. Whitney's record in University affairs and particularly in the area of student discipline is self-expository as to its quality. The record and our personal relationship enlists my full confidence that the work of the Attorney General's staff will continue at a high degree of excellence .

Respectfully,
Michael H. Lawler,
President of the Student Body

OTELIA!!—Well, it finally happened. Last Saturday night in GM's Rendezvous Room Otelia Connor, Chapel Hill's chamion letter writer and manners expert let herself go. As the Juke box blared out the latest rock 'n roll hits Otelia marched calmly out on to the dance floor and did the twist with an unidentified partner, and as they say in the movies, "it was a night to remember!"

Stubbs-Lawler: The Situation

By PETE WALES

The resignation of Buzzy Stubbs as Attorney General has raised numerous rumors concerning differences between him and President Mike Lawler.

Both men have said the reasons for disagreement between them was not over whether or not the civil rights cases should be tried.

The disagreement is a long-term affair concerning the power relationship in matters of policy between the President and the Attorney General.

Stubbs, a Lawler appointee originally, resigned because of the friction over policies, despite the personal friendship between him and the President.

One major point of conflict was the emphasis to be put on individual rights of defendants in trials.

Stubbs felt that the defendants were receiving their full rights and Lawler need not interfere.

Lawler and Judicial Committee Chairman Phil Baddour said that defendants were not receiving copies of their rights as enumerated in the Judicial Procedures Bill.

They felt that the defendants were not properly informed about the trial procedures.

Disagreement arose over the role of the defense counsel in Honor Council trials. Lawler and and Baddour favored a more active defense than had been customary in the past.

Other disagreements involved the Faculty Review Board decision and the use of students on the staff that had not been oppointed by Lawler.

Stubbs felt that he was doing his job properly and that the staff members he employed were the best qualified.

Under President Inman Allen, Stubbs had run his office independent of the President. Lawler had a different view of how the Attorney General's staff should be run, causing numerous small points of contention.

The most recent dispute concerns the widely misunderstood civil rights cases before the Honor Council.

Lawler and Stubbs disagreed on whether sit-in cases involving assault by the demonstrators should be tried before straight sit-in cases.

Lawler further understood that Stubbs would confer with him before a decision was reached. Stubbs said he had not actually agreed to this.

When Stubbs came out with his decision to try the assault cases first, Lawler felt the Attorney General had gone around him.

Stubbs said he had considered resigning earlier this fall, but had disagreed with Lawler over whom his successor should be.

Over the weekend the two decided on Whitney Durand, present chairman of the Men's Council, as a compromise choice for Attorney General.

Durand will resign from the Council tonight and a new chairman will be elected. His appointment will be before Student Legislature's special session tonight. Action is expected to come on the appointment Thursday.

Seminars Abroad Gets Under Way

"It's human—we meet people," said Claude Shotts who heads the UNC Seminars Abroad Program.

He spoke after returning from Europe, where he has made final arrangements for this summer's program. His trip included Rome, Vienna, Florence and Paris, four high points on the tour. The group will spend a week at each of these cities.

Since Shotts has made the arrangements personally, there are no agencies or middle man involved. He emphasized that all travel except for a few short excursions will be by air on the group plan. These facts reduce the cost of the trip to about one-half that of a commercial tour.

The program has its emphasis on personal contact with foreign students and families. In Paris each UNC student will have dinner and an evening in a French home. Also, there are informal discussions planned with students and professors in several countries.

The seminar will last a little over two months and take the group through 13 countries, four of them behind the Iron Curtain. The total cost is about $1400.

Shotts said, "The whole purpose of the seminar is to reduce the cost and increase the value of a summer in Europe for students . . . of course, we will visit museums and the like, but there will be enough personal contact between to prevent boredom."

He added that the sixty students who go will be well prepared by two weeks of educational sessions. He stressed that "the more you take to Europe, the more the trip will mean to you."

Tickets will go on sale this week from your nearby freshman ticket seller. They will go on sale in Y-Court February 14-21.

Special SL Session Tonight

Petition Is Circulated Opposing Lawler's Civil Rights Statement

Goes To All Residences

By JOHN GREENBACKER

A petition protesting Student Body President Mike Lawler's request that students boycott segregated business establishments in Chapel Hill is being circulated to campus living units.

The petition, sponsored by Armistead Maupin and Clark Crampton, states, "We feel that this would amount to unjustly punishing merchants for exercising their legal rights."

Signers of the petition emphasize that Lawler's actions, "merely reflect his own political opinions."

"We will not participate in any such boycott, and we furthermore urge the Student Legislature to refuse to give President Lawler any support for this proposal," it reads in part.

Lawler's request has been placed in the form of a resolution and will be introduced to Student Legislature tonight.

Speaking for the petition's supporters, Crampton said, "We feel that Student Government has lost contact with the Student Body.

"We feel this petition offers the Student Body a chance to express their views on a very important subject," he added.

In a statement issued yesterday, Lawler said, "My comments to the Student Legislature were the initial steps in an attempt to provide an effective and morally based alternative to the present form of protests in Chapel Hill.

"I submit that the vast majority of this student body would agree that discrimination is morally indefensible," he added. "I and many other students are vitally concerned about this injustice to our fellow students."

The petition was printed Feb. 5 and was first given extensive circulation yesterday. Copies of it have been sent to all the fraternities and approximately half the residence halls.

Maupin said the petition has received enthusiastic support from many students, but he declined to estimate the number of signatures.

50 Arrested As Board Meets

Street demonstrations continued here last night with the arrest of approximately 50 persons as the town's Board of Aldermen met to determine how to cope with the present racial situation. The demonstrators were arrested at 8:40 p.m. last night as they staged a sit-down at the intersection of Franklin and Columbia Streets.

Meanwhile the Board of Aldermen meeting in the Town Hall a block away voted to change the town's picketing ordinance by allowing picketing only from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. The measure passed by a 4-3 vote with Mayor Sandy McClamroch casting the deciding vote.

The action was also supported by Police Chief W. D. Blake who stated that he was worried about spreading his force so thin that they would be unable to prevent possible violence.

Chief Blake also stated that two men have recently left the force and as many as three to four officers have been in the hospital at one time causing the force to be at 2/3 strength during some of the recent demonstrations.

In other action the Board authorized a $25 per month bonus to the police retroactive to Dec. 16, as compensation for part of their overtime work.

It was also reported that the Mayor's Negotiation Committee had made no progress in dealing with the owners of Chapel Hill's remaining segregated establishments.

Last night's arrests followed a weekend filled with sit-down demonstrations.

UNC and the Democratic Party were criticized Sunday night by Robert Gore, personal assistant to the Congress of Racial Equality's Director James Farmer. Gore spoke to a freedom rally at St. Joseph's CME Church.

He promised the local movement that the national office of CORE will support the Chapel Hill Freedom Commitee "200 per cent," and said, "We are going to change the status quo here."

Following the talk, about 175 people staged a sidewalk march to the downtown area. No incidents were reported, except from a crowd of whites including UNC students.

Gore attacked the University for not taking an official stand against segregation. In reference to the meeting of the University chapter of the American Association of University Professors last night, Gore said "it's past time for discussion" of the civil rights situation here. He indicated he thinks the University and its faculty should take the lead in the desegregation movement.

The AAUP agenda included a discussion of the University's role in civil rights in Chapel Hill, sit-ins and academic freedom of faculty and students. A full report will be in tomorrow's Tar Heel.

The controversy in Student Government over whether to try students involved in sit-ins and and other acts of civil disobedience for possible violation of the Campus Code, Gore termed as "one of the most ridiculous discussions I've heard in a long, long time."

Gore hit the Democratic Party for allowing Southerners to hold up action on the Civil Rights bill now before Congress, and rapped politicians "who think they have my (the Negro's) vote in their pocket."

"My vote is too big for anybody's pocket," Gore assured the crowd. Before he votes, Gore said, he is going to have to be sure he is going to get something for his vote.

Playmakers

The Carolina Playmakers' production of "The Busy Martyr" will open tonight at 8:30 in a special Student Night presentation.

Tickets for the Student Night performance will be on sale in Y-Court today at $1.00 each.

Regular $2.00 tickets went on sale Thursday for the evening performances Wednesday through Sunday and the matinee Sunday at 2:30.

The play, written by George Hitchcock, was first produced in San Francisco in 1961. Its first presentation in the Southeast was last April in Nashville, Tenn. It was selected play of the year for 1963-64 by the Southeastern Theatre Conference.

Mock Convention Set For April

Campus political tempers are likely to erupt here April 16-18, when Young Republicans and Democrats battle to nominate their choice for presidential and vice-presidential candidates in the Mock Political Convention.

Interviews for delegation chairmen for the bi-partisan convention will be held each afternoon this week, Tuesday thru Friday from 3-5 p.m. Fifty residential units on campus will be represented by delegations. Persons interested in participating in the convention are invited to appear before the executive committee this week. All interviews will be held at the Mock Convention headquarters which is upstairs Y Court.

Each evening's events of the convention will be highlighted by both a Republican and Democratic keynote speaker. Governor Terry Sanford will launch the convention for the Democrats and the Republican speaker hasn't been chosen yet.

Among Republican celebrities who have been invited to appear are North Carolina Congressmen Jim Broyhill and Charles Jonas as well as Senators Goldwater (Ariz.), John Tower (Tex.), and Senate Minority Leader Everette Dirkson (ILL.).

Democrats who have been invited are Senator Ribicoff, Ambassador Stevenson and Mayor Robert Wagner of New York City.

Both National party chairmen, William E. Miller, Republican, and John Bailey, Democrat have expressed interest in the convention and may appear during the three day affair.

In addition to the two keynote speeches on Friday night (the second day of the convention), delegates will debate on a platform for the convention and will vote on it plank by plank. Persons interested in submitting resolutions should bring them in advance to the Mock Convention Headquarters.

Presidential ballots will be cast Saturday night.

Approximately 1,000 delegates are expected to participate in the convention. Campus living units will be reperesented as autonomous delegations and will not, as in the past, attempt to imitate a state. For example, the delegations from Parker Dormitory will be referred to in the convention as Parker rather than assume the identity of a state.

Convention chairman Steve Nislick said yesterday he encouraged all interested persons to come by convention headquarters this week and interview for selection as delegation chairmen of their respective living units. He added that delegation chairmen will be chosen primarily on their interest in political affairs and ability, rather than party affiliation or ideological beliefs.

Rights Bill Passes House 190-130

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Monday passed and sent to the Senate a civil rights bill broader, tougher and more controversial than any anti-discrimination measure since the Civil War Reconstruction.

The bill passed on a 290 to 130 roll call vote after the longest House debate on a single piece of legislation in recent yars. The vote was lopsided, but the battle was hard-fought to the end.

The House, winding up nine long days of debate and action on more than 120 proposed amendments, had only to take final roll-call votes before it could send the bill to the Senate.

The measure, a broad design for federal action against racial and other discrimination in voting, education, employment, public accommodations and the use of federal funds, came through the House practically untouched by crippling amendments.

Two Charged With Assault

Two Chapel Hill residents, both active in the civil rights movement, charged each other with assault Friday night after an affray over a girl.

Police said the pair, Arthur Simonds, white, and James R. Farrington, Negro, both 20, were found fighting beside the First Baptist Church.

The pair told police they were fighting over a Negro girl.

When questioned the duo told police that the girl had been dating Farrington, but had recently started going with Simonds. A fight developed when the pair started talking and came to blows. The girl witnessed the fight.

Both men swore out complaints charging each other with assault. They were released upon posting a bond of $50.

Chess Team Ties Duke

By BILL STROUPE

On Sunday UNC and Duke tied 2-2 in a chess match spiced with three rapidly-played finishes and no checkmates.

UNC's Keywood Cheves won the first game. He forced Ronald Frazer to resign because of a plain and simple material advantage.

But after that, the sands of time impaired UNC's chess machine. In match play, you must make 50 moves in the first two hours.

First the time limit rushed Vernon Robinson. Contending with this and Jerry Fink's skill, Robinson conceded the game.

Then Old Man Time polished off Ron Simpson.

Finally, Fred Fornoff played Beat the Clock, squeezing nine moves into 30 seconds. He later pulled a knight fork on Richard Katzberg and thus forced him to resign.

On the first board, Fink made a queen sacrifice which Robinson called "unsound." But it enabled Fink to queen a pawn, and Robinson quit soon after the coronation.

The win over Simpson on the second board actually went to Bob Morris (not Old Man Time). Morris forced Simpson's king onto the last row and may have won without the time limit. Before pressure hit him, Simpson had

SP Legislators Want Rights Meet

There will be a special session of Student Legislature tonight at 7:30.

The session was called in response to a petition submitted by 15 Student Party legislators asking for further consideration of the civil rights legislation now before SL.

The meeting will be held in New East.

The petition for a special session was signed by Juan Carvajal, Paul Chused, Judy Freider, Judy Anapol, Martin Lancaster, Diana Wellons, Jeff Davis, Phil Baddour, Dick Ellis, Arthur Hays, Neal Jackson, Lanny Shuff, Clark Brewer, Evelyn Morris and Larry Poe.

Adlai, Bobby, Ralph McGill At Forum???

The Carolina Forum has high hopes of obtaining Ambassador Adlai Stevenson, Attorney General Robert Kennedy, and publisher Ralph McGill when it presents its programs to the campus next year.

Speaking for the Forum, Bill Schwartz stated that efforts had been made to obtain Ambassador Stevenson for presentation this year, but the request had been made on too short a notice. Recently, another attempt was made to secure Stevenson and indications were that the prospects for the coming year were good.

In addition, Schwartz stated that the forum hoped to obtain the services of Burke Marshall, assistant Attorney General in charge of civil rights, for presentation to the student body last in his spring semester. A definite acceptance has already been received from Senator Hubert Humphrey, Democratic Whip in the U. S. Senate.

Tentative offers to speak have also been sent to Sen. Edward Kennedy and to Sen. Barry Goldwater.

Schwartz pointed out that none of next year's commitments were definite and that much depended upon occurrences which can not now be foreseen.

STOCK MARKET

Stocks and bonds expert Paul Conway will discuss "Fundamentals of the Stock Market" at Carroll Hall tonight.

Conway, an account executive with Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith of Raleigh, will speak at 8 p.m. in the main auditorium.

The Graham Memorial Current Affairs Committee is in charge of the program.

Legionnaire Wants Chancellor's Scalp

Joe Butler, a Burlington engineer, has called for the immediate firing of University Chancellor William B. Aycock.

Butler spoke at an American Legion meeting in Dunn Saturday night. He also called for the defeat of every North Carolina legislator who opposed the speaker ban law.

Butler said the facts prove that every hour, 7,000 more people are brought under communism, "but yet we have people like Chancellor Aycock at UNC running around the state criticizing the Legislature for its efforts to help fight communism."

He went on to claim that Aycock was wrong when he said there were no communists at UNC and the gag law is being enforced. Butler continued to say that when Aycock made these statements, he wrote the Chancellor a letter suggesting that the House Un-American Activities Committee be asked to decide whether or not there were communists at UNC. The letter was not answered, he said.

Butler added: "Mr. Aycock is nothing more than an employee of the state and I regard his arrogant campaign against this law passed by the duly elected representatives of the people as gross insubordination of the first order. He ought to be doing the work he's paid to do instead."

State American Legion Commander L. J. Phipps said he does not know who Butler is and knew nothing of the speech; therefore he does not care to comment.

For the past nine years Butler has served as architectural representative of Duke University and has directed the expenditure of over $12 million at Duke.

DTH Editors Offer Yet Another Service

We got a press release from somebody some time ago about a National College Queen Contest. We couldn't find any particular reason to run a news story about it, but just so we don't deprive any beautiful, intelligent and aspiring young coeds of a chance for greater aggrandizement outside the University community, we thought we'd pass along a few bits of information we were able to ferret out of the adjectives in the release.

First, the contest is judged on beauty and scholastic ability. That includes "intelligence and campus activities . . . as well as poise, personality and attractiveness." Then in big letters the release says "The Judges Are Seeking a Typical American College Girl."

Each state has a winner who will be flown to New York for ten days on the town and the final judging. All sorts of prizes are given to everybody apparently, and the United States Grand National Champion Typical American College Girl wins a new car, a trip to Europe, clothes, a year's supply of some sort of hair stuff and various other goodies to help her remain her typical self.

Any unmarried, undergraduate woman between 18 and 22 (that's years old as opposed to other measurements germane to this type of contest) may enter, or be entered by someone else.

For all those coeds interested in being the "most typical", complete details, entry blanks and personal interviews are available on request from (and only from) one of the editors of the DTH.

Inviting An Unwanted Guest

The Chapel Hill Exchange Club is currently observing National Crime Prevention Week, and as part of their observance the members are holding a combination dinner and crime prevention program.

The Exchange Club is a civic organization dedicated to the betterment of the community, and several of the members are high ranking town officials. With this in mind, it does seem strange that the club has picked Brady's restaurant at which to hold its dinner and program.

Brady's, one of the few remaining segregated places in Chapel Hill, has been one of the major targets of the Mayor's three committees which have been and are attempting to erase, on a voluntary basis, the last vestiges of discrimination in our places of public accommodation. The conscientious and civic-minded members of the Merchants Association have also tried to get these places to desegregate voluntarily, as have numerous private citizens.

And now a civic club has in effect decided to reinforce the adamant position of one of the holdouts. It is possible that the decision was not a conscious one, but that would only testify to ignorance and failure to face up to the problem on the part of the club.

One of the sad ironies of this whole affair is that the dinner and program are almost certain to draw protest from the local integration movement, and that protest will most likely take the form of a sit-in. A sit-in is technically a crime, and the club's program is on crime prevention.

More About The Author Than The Subject

The Cheraw (S.C.) Chronicle

"Human Events," an intellectually disheveled weekly report out of Washington, carried a page advertisement in recent issues urging its readers to buy Victor Lasky's distorted portrait of the late President Kennedy entitled: "J.F.K.; The Man & The Myth."

While the book masquerades as a "critical portrait", it is "critical" only in the negative sense of that word. Destructive, yes; analytical and honest, no.

The book is a mish-mash of half truth and fantasy, and it is beyond us why a reputable publishing firm would deign to print it. But publishing firms, like any other business, are out to make a buck, and we suppose there was at publication date a large enough anti-Kennedy market to guarantee a profit.

There are all sorts of obscenities, and the book that seeks to lend fame and profit to its author by damaging a man's reputation unfairly is worse than many kinds of pornography that are banned from the mail.

Mr. Lasky is never content to let a fact speak for itself. By the time he is through torturing that fact to make it fit his preconceived bias against Mr. Kennedy, you can't recognize it. The unwary are easily caught by this kind of sleazy journalism.

Mr. Lasky's volume on Kennedy may purport to tell something about our late President, but it is not biography. It is a political diatribe which reveals much more about the author than the subject. It is a disreputable effort which makes up in the sensational what it lacks in scholarship. Not the smallest, most innocent act of Mr. Kennedy escapes the innuendo, the double interpretation, or the insulting insinuation.

Being all this, it is of course no surprise that Human Events wants to give the book the widest possible circulation. If the book were an accurate or honest, though unflattering, appraisal of the President, it would still be in questionable taste to advertise it so soon after his tragic death. Being an inferior book, it was unfortunate to promote it even when the President was alive and could defend himself.

But to promote a bad book so soon after the President's death is an inexcusable breach of decent political conduct and is an insult to every American who holds the office of the Presidency in respect. The fact that the Kennedy-haters can't quit even after his death, and seek to taunt him beyond the grave, in total disregard for the feelings of his family, friends, and millions of admirers, discredits them completely.

"The Real Question Is, Can We Keep Them In HOT Water?"

Amateur Candidates

By JOHN JOHNSON
Daily Illini
U. of Illinois

Several weeks ago, John Glenn, whose fame is more rightfully reserved for VonBraun and others, announced his candidacy for the United States Senate. This modest action came as a relief to me, for Col. Glenn announced that he would campaign as a Democrat. As a Republican, I had been disturbed by earlier indications that he might have sought the Republican nomination for the same post. Apparently the colonel's political affiliation has been determined in the tried and proven Eisenhower manner.

The Republican party has its own embarrassing political liabilities in this present pastime of well known Americans — running for the Senate. Former pole vaulter, minister, and wealthy cereal muncher Bob Richards is considering seeking ancient Californian Clair Engle's Senate seat, and the perfectionist of the split-T and 54, Bud Wilkinson, has resigned from his coach's post at Oklahoma, apparently to run for the Senate himself. Certainly there are no formal "requirements" for Senate candidacy, but none of these three are bulging with what one might normally refer to as "qualifications."

In 1962, when Teddy Kennedy announced that he would seek the Democratic nomination for his older brother's vacated Senate seat, it was tempting to consider this as some sort of sick joke. The joke was carried too far when young Teddy was successful in defeating George Lodge in the November election. No one expected Lodge to emerge victorious; however, it was a grave disappointment that Teddy was able to defeat the state Attorney General, Edward McCormick, in the Democratic primary contest. McCormick had soundly thrashed Teddy in a series of face to face televised debates and had an impressive public service record. The victory by Teddy, whose claim to fame was expulsion from Harvard, made a mockery of the American political system.

The sick joke in Massachusetts was unfortunately not a unique event. Already, the Ohio Democratic organization has refused to endorse their incumbent Senator, Stephen Young, for the forth-coming primary. The rank and file of the Democratic party now has the responsibility to determine whose name shall appear on their side of the November ballot. It will be an interesting primary. Glenn is at a handicap since he does not have an Attorney General for a brother, a possible factor in Ted Kennedy's success.

Personally, this author would like to believe that American voters look at issues and records, yet the evidence to the contrary is overwhelming. It is no longer important that a man build up a record of public service and responsibility before he is considered as an eligible candidate for the United States Senate. Before this great nation gets too much further absorbed in Gallup polls and hero worship, it had better come out of orbit, and realize that the right to vote carries the responsibility to vote in an informed and educated manner.

Sun Show Is Excellent

By HENRY McINNIS

"The Sun And You"—The Structure And Impact of Our Daytime Star, February 4-March 2.

Reclining under the "stars," you get almost moonstruck over these balls of fire. Each one is an atomic furnace and like the stars of the Hollywood variety, they grow old and lose their glow.

The small audience heard narrator James Wadsworth say that in a star's aging process, the carbon gets hotter, helium changes into carbon and then, no more star. The white dwarf stars, in their last stage before the glow dies, were shown.

The wondrous phenomenon of a sunset was depicted on the celestial ceiling and explained in terms of light from the sun being refracted through the earth's atmosphere.

By far the most impressive sight offered in the show were photos taken of the explosions of gas on the sun. Photographed through a telescope during an eclipse, these fantastic fires leaping wildly out from the sun's edge were a ghastly and gassy vision of the incalculable brute force of nature.

The Zeiss planetarium flooded the heavenly domes with not only the stars, but accurate representations of man's satellites, indicating their orbital positions in relation to the familiar constellations and luminous landmarks (or should we say skymarks).

The adept narration referred reverently to John Kennedy's memorable phrase, "sailing through the oceans of space" and said that 1969 is the target date for Apollo's destination-moon project. A sensitive blend of the poetic, interlaced in appropriate astral images, was effectively employed with strict scientific fact, giving the program a humanistic and wistful, almost profound tone.

Stellar stories of staggering significance were related and illustrated about the stars. A few of the imponderables to ponder were:

There are over 200 billion planets in our galaxy and we on earth are only one planet.

With a billion galaxies in the universe, there are more stars than the number of all human beings who have ever lived.

We can understand somewhat how plants grow from the sun's radiation, but we can't duplicate it.

Does space have an edge and if so, where is it?

Does life exist on those other 200 billion planets? The audience was told that Werner Von Braun believes so. About the possibility of life on Mars, he said, "If life is there, we shall someday communicate with it. Then it will be like one mass plant talking to another."

It's Dizzy

(Ed. Note: Having seen the ridiculous spain existing currently on the Washington political scene, we have decided to endorse the one candidate who seems to stand for ideals every American is interested in—Dizzy Gillespie. In light of this decision, we give you herewith the words to the Dizzy for President official campaign song. The lyrics are by Jon Hendricks, music by Charlie Parker and old Diz himself.)

America: 'God's Own Junkyard'

(Mr. Morgan can be heard each evening at 7 p.m. on WRAL radio.)

Look around you. What do you see? A man named Peter Blake, who is the editor of Architectural Forum, contends that Americans have become blind. In a book called "God's Own Junkyard," which he says was written not in anger but in fury, Blake incriminates us all in a monstrous conspiracy: the planned deterioration of the landscape of what began as and still might be restored to become again America the Beautiful. We must be blind, Blake concludes, to the hideous consequences of our legalized depredation. They are visible on every land. We have obviously become used to them. It is the purpose of Blake's book, I suspect, to make us so conscious of them that we can't bear to look at them anymore and will then bestir ourselves to mend our ways —although it is already very late. And, after all, how much do we really care?

It is a kind of wanton lethargy about our continued public and private littering which Blake appears to find most unbearable. His fine outrage has driven him to put down in burning text and inflammatory photographs perhaps the most cutting and purposeful job of muckraking since Lincoln Steffens tried to move the public to do something about "The Shame of the Cities" three generations ago. "God's Own Junkyard" is piled high with a shocking abundance of muck to rake. Peter Blake describes and decries the vicious circles we have got ourselves so dizzyingly into.

For instance, the politicians, one of whose basic duties in public office is supposed to be to defend the public against exploitation, sells out through a marriage of profitable convenience to real estate promoters. A city government, supposedly maintained to protect its citizens and enhance their welfare, undermines their safety, menaces their health, and corrupts what little sense of beauty and esthetic values they may have left in this day and age by toadying to building interests interested basically in their own narrow selfish ends. One of the most spectacular revolving proofs of the despoiling spin we are in involves our highways, the billboards that clutter them and the automobiles that use them.

The billboard lobby and the highway lobby are two of the most powerful lobbies in the country and the motor car industry, unsurprisingly, has thrust a finger, directly or indirectly, into them both. One of the reasons why the billboard people are so influential is their interesting approach to politicians. Blake quotes a Reader's Digest article which reported that the industry "shrewdly puts many legislators in its debt by giving them free sign space during election time, and it is savage against the legislators who dares oppose it (by favoring anti-billboard laws). It subsidizes his opposition, foments political trouble in his home district, donates sign space to his opponents and sends agents to spread rumors among his constituents." Under such circumstances it is a wonder that federal legislation financing most of the $40,000,000,000 interstate highway system retained any restrictions against billboards at all.

Between 1940 and 1960 the billboard industry almost quintupled its take, from forty-five to more than $200,000,000. Two of Detroit's automobile giants are among the leading accounts. A rather macabre paradox arises here. In the past garden clubs and other groups — which have managed to mount some pretty strong lobbies themselves have attacked billboards as a menace to beauty. But now these ornaments emerge as a menace to safety.

"No one in his right mind," Blake concedes in "God's Own Junkyard," would charge that the automobile industry intended its billboard campaigns to help accelerate the obsolescence of older cars . . ." But that is precisely what has been happening. "For it has been clearly established, through careful engineering studies carried out in several states, that highways with billboards experience about three times as many automobile accidents as do highways without billboards. Those who are fortunate enough to survive such accidents are, of course, potential customers for the nearest car dealer."

Blake quotes a survey released by the New York State Thruway Authority just a year ago which found "an annual average of 1.7 accidents per mile due to driver-inattention on the portions of the Thruway Mainline where advertising devices were visible, and only five-tenths of an accident per mile for this cause (that is driver inattention) on stretches where advertising devices were not visible."

Obviously it would be impossible and inhumane to abolish a multimillion-dollar business. It is also unnecessary. Draftsmen, carpenters, painters and others whose jobs might be involved are all highly skilled workers, adaptable to other assignments. Outdoor advertising is all right in its place but its place certainly is not everywhere though that, in effect, is what the industry has been arguing. In view of its historic, though controversial, ugmification of the landscape and now its proved contribution to traffic accidents, the billboard business better look for another argument.

The Ladies

Editors, The Tar Heel:

My sister is a freshman at the University of Wisconsin. I am a senior here. Naturally, since we hadn't seen one another since September, our discussions over the Christmas vacation turned every so often to the subject of the rules governing our separate dormitories. It was both a shock and a relief to discover that, in Wisconsin, the eighteen year-old freshman is given more credit for having "all the mores of Western society" firmly implanted in her conscience before entering college than is the woman student of any age at UNC.

Judy, the lowly freshman at Wisconsin, exposed to the same high boy-girl ratio we have here, is subjected neither to the closed-study our freshman girls have to endure, nor to constant pressure to obey this or that unwritten rule supposedly covered in our all-encompassing Campus Code. Judy's dorm closes at 11:00 during the week and at 1:00 on weekends, the same as ours do. But Judy also has the option of coming in at 1:00 one week-night per week, after signing out for this late-hour permission. Apparently, Wisconsin realizes that even freshman girls can date once a week if they choose to do so without falling drastically behind in their studies.

At Wisconsin, there is no such thing as a Campus Code. It is assumed, as it should be everywhere, that the student entering college already knows how to behave like a lady or gentleman. There is no need for the student to sign a pledge to this effect; the signing of such a pledge would only relegate him back to the world of children—a world the student is supposed to be stepping out of when he or she enters college.

At Wisconsin, for instance, it is not considered a venal sin for women students to be seen on campus in slacks. True, it gets a lot colder up there, but sometimes, when the thermometer drops to twelve in Chapel Hill, it seems less unlady-like than unhealthy to require a student to brave the freeze in a skirt.

It seems to me that if women students at Carolina were given more opportunity to use their own common sense in matters of this nature, the University would discover that it is not dealing with children after all. Especially at a school where the majority of women students are juniors and seniors, it seems unnecessary to bind them to strict, unbending dormitory rules coupled with the vague, indefinite moral standards supposedly set up by the Campus Code. The woman student of twenty or twenty-one must inevitably have already learned what moral values are important to her; what actions fit in with her own concept of personal integrity. The rules and regulations now governing the woman student at Carolina are rules for a child, not an adult. Only so long as she is treated like a child will she have the need or opportunity to act like one.

Newman Club Backs Lawler

A resolution backing President of the Student Body Mike Lawler's statement on civil rights was passed by the Newman Club Sunday night.

Lawler's statement, delivered to Student Legislature Thursday night, urged a student boycott of segregated businesses and asked students to participate in lawful efforts to solve the integration problem.

The Catholic youth group also set up a committee under Terry Sullivan, who proposed the resolution, to join in all lawful efforts to end segregation.

Club undergraduates passed the resolution by a vote of 17-8 with 11 abstentions. The graduate group took no formal vote, but there were 25 arguing in favor of it and two against, according to Sullivan.

Myron Blackwelder and Alain Fontenay, a French exchange student, seconded the resolution.

appeared to be on his way to victory.

On the third board, Fornoff used a safety valve to help him reach 50 moves. He moved his king back and forth behind a bulwark of pawns when the game didn't demand more urgent moves.

Cheves' game brought football to the mind of this spectator in several instances:

—Frazer's troubles began when he went after a knight, thus bottling up one of his rooks in its own "backfield." Cheves nailed the rook at the expense of only a knight.

—Cheves then used his own rook to try to spring a pawn loose for a touchdown (translation: to try to give a pawn a clear path to the queen row).

—Frazer still showed some offensive life. He had two pawns and his king lined up in an "I" formation. But Cheves used his king as a safety man.

—When Frazer failed to fake the "safety man" out of position with his knight, and Cheves got two pawns open, Frazer resigned.

Simpson, also the Chess Club president, summarized the games: "It could easily have been four to nothing, us." Or 3-1 Duke.

It was that kind of match.

And The Boys To A Garden

It's The Return Of 'Lobo'

By MAT FRIEDMAN

The traditions that fill Madison Square Garden have inspired many basketball players. But for four guys on the North Caorlina team, the inspiration needed against NYU Wednesday night will come from something else that will fill the arena — girlfriends and relatives.

For Billy Cunningham, Bryan McSweeney, Billy Galantai and Art Katz, it's an audience they've been waiting to play before for a long time. In case you didn't know, they're all from New York.

"The big thing," says McSweeney, "is going home to play. All together, I think there will be about 60 friends and relatives at the game. Also, it will be a big prestige game for the conference if we win."

McSweeney will probably have a lot to do with the outcome, for it will be his job to guard All-American Barry Kramer, and many players have spent frustrating nights at that very task. But McSweeney isn't worried. "I've heard that he lunges forward in the air," he says. "Maybe if I can get in front of him, I'll be able to stop him."

Cunningham played at the famous arena for his high school (at age 15) and reached the semi-finals of the City Championships one year. But playing there in college, he says, is different.

"It's something you dream about," he says. "So many great stars have played there. It's like the Yankee Stadium of basketball. I've been looking forward to it for a long time. Many of my friends and relatives haven't had a chance to see me play since high school." Cunningham, by the way, will probably guard NYU's top scorer, Happy Hairston.

Galantai, who also is no newcomer to the Garden, is concerned about things besides friends and relatives. "They will be taking down the dogshow," he says, "so we won't be able to work out."

According to his fellow New Yorkers, however, Galantai is the man to know when you go to the Garden. "They ought to call this game the return of LOBO (Galantai's nickname), says one of his teammates. When you go into Madison Square Garden, everyone knows Billy."

No one seems worried about a possible letdown after the big victory over Wake Forest Saturday. "I think we will definitely be up for the game," says Cunningham.

"And especially," adds McSweeney, "since the people we want to watch us will be there." (P.S.: He didn't mean the sportswriters.)

"Maybe if we win," he adds. "Coach Smith will take us to see the Beatles." (P.P.S.: The Beatles will be at Carnegie Hall Wednesday night.)

Galantai, the unofficial Garden expert, says the Arena's floor is a very dead one. "You can be dribbling up the court," he says, and the ball will just stop bouncing. But the baskets are pretty good."

Both Galantai and Cunningham fondly recall the antics of the Garden's public address announcer, John Condon.

Condon is famous for his colorful descriptions, particularly during high school games, frequently using a player's nickname when he is having a big night. Don't be surprised, for example, if you hear something like "BILLY THE KID MAKES IT 40-30 CAROLINA" over the radio.

So all in all, it figures to be a big night for the UNC basketball team, and for four guys, a night (and two days) they have been looking forward to for a long time. Many a team has vaulted into the national spotlight in Madison Square Garden. The Tar Heels hope they can too.

Cunningham, McSweeney, Galanti and Katz, Off To NYU

Frosh Graps Still Unbeaten

The unbeaten freshman wrestlers are looking forward to their big match with the similarly undefeated Duke frosh Sautrday after a 33-5 obliteration of Pfeiffer over the weekentd.

The win ran Coach Grover Willhoit's baby grapplers' perfect string to six straight.

The team, which is the big hope for Carolina wrestling in the future, is blessed with not only a strong balancd first team, but a large quantity of depth.

Bob Nuckles demonstrated this best Saturday when he stepped in for star 147-pounder Lane Verlindon, and pinned his opponent. All but one of the victories, in fact, were via pins.

Unbeaten stars Jim Goodwin (130) and Jay Jacobson continued their winning ways with ease. They have both won all six of their matches.

Other fall winners were Gary Meyers (137), Tom Spencer (167), and Wyth Quarrells (177) while Al Francizn (123) won by decision.

Neil Baker, a heavyweight wrestling in his first match, was UNC's only loser.

Those Mean Bl'Imps Leave Hell For Here

By JOHN MONTAGUE

It's still eleven days till those big bad Blue Devils come to town, but Carolina fans can practice up on their wrath tonight when those mean little Blue Imps pay a visit to Woollen Gym.

Leadership in the mythical Big Four Frosh race is on the line tonight at eight as UNC's "second half" Tar Babies look for number 9 in a row—with Duke's youngsters the intended victims.

Earlier this season UNC trimmed the Duke frosh 81-78 at Durham—the only loss for the Blue Imps in five Big Four outings. The Tar Babies have an identical 4-1 Big Four record, having lost to NC State in December.

Tonight's contest, open free to the public, also will feature a duel between two of the hottest point-producers this area has seein in some time. Guard Bob Verga, averaging 33 points a game for Duke, and Bobby Lewis, hitting at a 37 point clip for the Tar Babies, are the men to watch when a shot is to be taken.

In their first meeting, which the Tar Babies pulled out in characteristic come-from-behind fashion, Lewis hit for 40 points while Verga was "held" to 23.

"Verga is by far their best man," said Carolina coach Ken Rosemond. "He's fast and shifty and has a good outside shot. He and State's Eddie Biedenbach aree the best guards we've seen this year."

What Carolina will probably do with Verga is put Donnie Moe on him. Rosemond is particularly pleased with the defensive work of Moe, who never played high school basketball (in Brooklyn).

"The defense must run in the family," said Rosemond in a reference to the great defending abilities of Donnie's older brother Doug. "Donnie has real good instinct—he reacts quickly to the situation."

What Duke will do with Lewis is beyond speculation. Sportswriters all over the state are looking for a nickname for this guy who jumps almost as high as he is tall (6-3) and who considers anything under 30 points as an "off night." Opposing coaches already have some names for him, but you won't find them here.

"We consider Lwis as our inside man," said Rosemond, "buf he can shoot from the outside when he has to. He proved that against Wake Saturday."

The "wing men" or forwards in the UNC attack are Ian Morrison, the team's number 2 scorer, and Tom Gauntlett.

Two Losses In Same Day

North Carolina's unique wrestling experience of splitting up the varsity and meeting two teams in the same day turned out to be disastrous for Coach Sam Barnes Saturday.

The group that stayed at home came close, but a forfeit in the 157-pound division hurt and the grapplers lost to powerful West Virginia, 18-13.

The other half of the team—they went to Pfeiffer—also lost, but it wasn't too close. This group went down, 32-0.

West Virginia's Bart Diondillilo gave the Mountaineers enough points for at least a tie in the Woollen Gym match when he pinned Carolina's Gary Garris at the 167-pound weight, giving his team a 16-6 margin.

But UNC's Steve Lister pinned John Luckini in a match of 177-pounders to pull the Tar Heel matmen up to 16-11 with one struggle to go.

Carolina's Jerry Cabe could have tied the match with a pin in the heavyweight bout—the final event—but the star football guard had to settle for a draw with WVU's Ken Woodeshick, and the Mountaineers had their clinching points.

Besides Lister, UNC had two other individual winners. Paul Wellstone, the superb 123-pounder, kept his undefeated string intact with a decision over Dave Cain. Wellstone now has eight wins and a tie in the Tar Heels' 4-6 season.

Dick Blackman, at 147 pounds, was the third Carolina winner. He decisioned Jerry Gooden.

In other matches, Mike Gaich of West Virginia decisioned Ken Furr in the 130-pound class, and the Mountaineers' Bill Meacci won by decision over Russ Simmons of Carolina at 137 pounds.

Jim Joio was West Virginia's forfeit winner in the 157-pound division.

Sit-Ins Can Get 2-Year Sentences

By JEFFREY DICK

Persons arrested in civil rights demonstrations here may find themselves on the long end of two-year prison sentences when the Orange County Superior Court begins its first regular session in Hillsboro next week.

According to statute, such charges as resisting arrest and disorderly conduct are misdemeanors punishable by a maximum of two years imprisonment and up to $500 in fines.

The Chapel Hill police department estimates that as many as 150 to 200 people are still awaiting jury trial in Orange County Superior Court on such charges. Some individuals have as many as 10 to 15 counts against them.

The court normally holds four terms per year. It is expected, however, that a special term will be held in April to clear the books of the large number of arrests and charges which have accumulated in connection with anti-segregation protests in Chapel Hill.

Persons arrested for violations of town ordinances such as obstructing traffic and blocking sidewalks may receive a maximum of thirty days imprisonment. In one such case, Pat Cusick, national field secretary for the Student Peace Union was sentenced to thirty days in December for trespass and resisting arrest. Cusick served twenty-six days and received four days off for good behavior.

In the past, courts of this state have been lenient towards first offenders. Precedent reveals, however, that habitual offenders have met with severe penalties. It is not unusual for a person with several counts of a particular misdemeanor to receive sentences to be served consecutively.

IVEY TO STAR

"This is Carolina," WUNC Radio's interview series, will feature Pete Ivey, Director of the UNC News Bureau, this week.

Ivey and interviewer James Wadsworth will discuss the News Bureau's efforts to give the state and the nation a picture of things which happen at Carolina.

The program may be heard each Wednesday night at 7:30.

This is the second interview in the series. Next week, "This is Carolina" will feature Anthony Jenzano, Director of the Morehead Planetarium.

Jason Named Council Head Last Night

Peter Jason, a senior from New York City, was elected chairman of the Men's Honor Council in a special meeting of the Council last night.

Jason, the former vice-chairman of the Council, replaces Whitney Durand who resigned to become Attorney General.

In other elections, Bryan Simpson, a junior from Jacksonville, Fla. and former scribe of the Council was elected vice-chairman.

Pete Wales, a junior from he Virgin Islands and Loudonville, N. Y., was elected scribe.

Jason was first elected to the Council in the spring of 1962. He was elected vice-chairman last spring.

He is president of Zeta Beta Tau fraternity and was a member of the Orientation Committee this fall.

Jason receives his first test with the Council tomorrow when the first of the sit-in cases is tried. The defendants are charged with ungentlemanly conduct for trespassing and resisting arrest by going limp in a policeman's arms.

Durand's appointment as Attorney General went before Student Legislature last night for approval.

Gripes Uncovered By UP Committee

Noisy quiet hours, undersized mirrors and lazy maids are some of the complaints of men and women dormitory residents uncovered in a two-month investigation by the University Party Campus Action Board.

The Board, chaired by Faryl Sims, disclosed a list of 67 different complaints in various areas of campus life.

The Board's reports are being submitted to several different student government and administration committees and agencies for solutions to the problems.

The complaints were broken down into four areas under four subcommittees: academic (8), dormitory facilities (34), campus (14) and social and miscellaneous (11).

The dormitory facility complaints included things such as inadequate telephone and mail facilities, lack of repairs when things are broken, lack of cleanliness and shortage of facilities in general.

Campus complaints included the lack of paved walks and poor parking facilitis.

REDRESS—Dr. Joseph Straley of the UNC Physics Department and the Rev. Clarence Parker lead a march down Franklin Street last night in protest of the Board of Aldermen's 4-3 vote Monday limiting picketing to the hours from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. The march followed a meeting by "concerned citizens" to discuss efforts to nullify the amended ordinance. The group, formed last night, is not connected with any of the civil rights organizations presently operating in Chapel Hill. (Photo by Jim Wallace).

Press Club Hears UPI Photographer

By FRED HARWELL

A United Press - International photo-journalist told the UNC Press Club Monday night that "we are living in the age of visual communication."

Jim Holloway spoke at the group's monthly meeting in Howell Hall, saying "what we need is more picture oriented news people, not more news oriented picture people.

"Photographers consider themselves newsmen," he said, "but too often reporters don't recognize this fact."

Holloway showed slides and told the club something about his past five years with UPI.

"News photography is really enjoyable work if you don't mind missing an occasional meal, leaving the house at any hour, or flying all over the world.

"Let me add," he smiled, "that I don't."

Holloway stressed the point that working in journalism — whether with photos or with words—is working with people.

Some of the people he has worked with and photographed are President Johnson, the late President Kennedy, Goldwater, Nixon and John Glenn.

He was on hand for Glenn's flight into orbit and for President Kennedy's funeral as chief UPI photographer.

Some of his "regular" assignments include the Masters Golf Tournament in Augusta, Ga. each year and at least one national political convention every four years.

He also covers most of the athletic events in this area and readily concedes that they take up "a great deal" of his time.

About 35 students and faculty members attended this meeting.

Coed Gets Probation Indefinitely

The Women's Council placed a student on indefinite probation Thursday night after she was found guilty of violating both the Honor and Campus Codes.

The student was charged with lying to members of the Women's Residence Council, drinking to the extent that her judgment was impaired and gaining entrance to her residence after closing hours without being admitted by a member of the residence administration.

The defendant entered pleas of nolo contendre to the first and last charges and a plea of guilty to the second.

The Council found the girl guilty on all counts and placed her on indefinite probation. This was the second offense for which the defendant had been found guilty by the Council.

Merit Scholars Are Here Friday

By CHARLES STOVER

National Merit Scholarship semi-finalists will be on campus this weekend learning about the academic side of Carolina life.

The group of 86 high school seniors, whose primary interests are math and physics, will have interviews with Charles Bernard, Director of Admissions; Julian Mason, Director of Student Aid; Dr. Peter Walker, advisor for the Freshman-Sophomore honors program; and with Chancellor William B. Aycock.

They will attend lectures Friday and Saturday by prominent professors to simulate Carolina classroom experiences. Six professors will speak to the prospective majors in their fields.

Dr. David G. Brown will lecture on Business Administration and Economics; Dr. Claiborne Jones, pre-med. and the biological sciences; Dr. D. C. Jicha, Chemistry; Dr. E. A. Cameron, Math; Dr. Raymond Dawson, political science and history; and Dr. Albrecht Strauss, English.

Members of Phi Eta Sigma, the Freshman Scholastic Honorary Fraternity, will direct the group on tours of the campus Friday afternoon, showing them the library, the computer and other major points of interest. Later that afternoon there will be an informal reception with members of the student legislature, fraternity presidents, and other student body leaders.

Dean James L. Godfrey will be the speaker at the banquet Friday night at the Carolina Inn. After the banquet the group will attend the Carolina Playmakers production, "Busy Martyr."

Housing for the group will be in the Institute of Government and they will eat in Lenoir Hall.

AAUP To Seek Its Role In Local Racial Situation

By GARY BLANCHARD

The UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) moved Monday night to investigate its role in the current racial crisis here.

The group of about 140 professors agreed to have its executive committee:

1. Form a committee to look into claims of racial discrimination on campus, including employment, graduate student admittance and hiring of Negro professors.

2. Consider if the faculty group has a role to play in the civil rights situation in the community.

3. Develop a position for transmittal to appropriate faculty members and university officials if students involved in sit-in demonstrations are found guilty of student Honor Code violations, when the first such cases are heard by the Men's Council Thursday night.

Four matters were up for discussion, but the group never got past the first two—the role of the University community in the present situation, and whether the academic freedom of students involved in demonstrations is impaired if they are penalized by the student councils or University officials.

Reporters present were asked not to quote speakers directly in the interest of "free and full discussion."

A motion to commend students involved in demonstrations drew critical comments from several faculty members.

"I'm puzzled that faculty members can incite students to violation of the law," one professor said.

Another commented: "Civil rights is not an umbrella under which you justify anything . . . it seems to me that some methods of protest are right, morally and legally, and some are not. One of our duties as professors is to make such a distinction."

The reply drew applause.

The motion was ordered committed to the Executive Committee for further study.

Another faculty member drew applause when he asked "Why should the student council even consider these (sit-in) cases?"

The professor reasoned that, "If the AAUP differentiates between law violations involving civil liberties and regular criminal violations and the student courts do not, shouldn't the AAUP protest the delegation of this authority to the students?"

One professor, who said he had just returned from the Board of Aldermen meeting, criticized Alderman Roland Giduz for asking in a statement that citizens "cease and desist in their confrontations with hold-out merchants, as it is holding up progress.

"It seems to me," the professor said, "that he's asking citizens to renounce their constitutional rights in a situation in which there's not one shred of evidence that any progress has been made since last summer."

The professor said he has been active in calling on segregated businesses in an integrated group, then filing complaints with the Mayor's Mediation Committee. As a result, he said, he and other professors "have begun receiving nuisance calls.

"This is a type of harassment which goes on when one attempts to follow the channels set-up by the Aldermen," he said.

Another motion was made that the AAUP chapter state that it feels the action of student demonstrators is not a violation of the Campus Code.

This brought several professors to their feet.

"I've heard several proposals that the faculty take authority away from the student government," one professor said "This should not be done," he said, noting the long tradition of student self-government at UNC.

The group voted unanimously to meet again within a month to discuss the civil rights situation further, rather than waiting until the next scheduled meeting in the spring.

Local Court Transfers 82 To Hillsboro

Eighty-two civil rights demonstrators were bound over Tuesday to Orange County Superior Court in Hillsboro.

Three demonstrators appeared late in Recorder's Court. They were obligated to put up $400 bond for each set of two charges against them— compared with $175 per set for the others.

The three—Rosemary Ezra, 32, white; Walter Mitchell, 18, Negro; and Arthur Crisp, 19, Negro—also had to post $300 per charge to be heard in Recorder's Court March 17.

Mitchell had to post a total of $1,500 bond, and Miss Ezra a total of $1,400 bond.

Two Negroes did not appear for the hearing—Charliese Pearl Cotton of Carrboro and Thomas L. Riggsbee of Chapel Hill.

All were charged with combinations of resisting arrest, obstructing traffic, obstructing the sidewalk and trespassing.

Graham School Looted, Burned Monday Night

Vandals broke into Frank Porter Graham elementary school outside Carrboro Monday night, set two fires and littered floors of classrooms and the library with books, records, and ink.

Sheriff C. D. Knight said that a report was turned into the Chapel Hill Fire Department at 8:10 a.m. indicating there were two fires in the school. When firemen arrived they found the fires, one smouldering in a classroom and one burned out in the library. Evidence pointed to vandalism and the Orange County Sheriff's Department was called.

Knight said that the vandals, probably juveniles, broke into the school and poured ink over books and records they had strewn on the floor. They then attempted to set fire to a group of books and desks in a classroom.

Firemen estimated the damage in the neighborhood of $1500. The school is insured against fire losses.

The Sheriff's Department has not completed its investigation, and several youths have been questioned. No charges or arrests have been made.

"In the event the vandals are minors," Sheriff Knight said, "they will be remanded to juvenile authorities, and action will then be taken accordingly. If the vandals are adults, they will be charged with arson and vandalism."

Chief Blake On The Sit-Ins — 'We Must Keep The Peace'

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The integration spotlight is on Chapel Hill and Chapel Hillians aren't enjoying the top billing.

"The general mood of the town is one of growing resentment toward the racial demonstrations," said Police Chief W. D. Blake, who can safely admit to extensive knowledge in the field of demonstrations. "We are, of course, concerned with this hardening of feelings, but at the moment our concern doesn't border on fear."

Blake, a tall, heavy-set man, took time out from his hectic 15-hour day one afternoon this week, and spoke quite frankly on the current wave of sit-ins and sit-downs.

"We've got to keep the peace—that's the only way to look at it," said the chief, whose face showed the strain that keeping peace can bring. "These demonstrations are awfully hard on our force. The situation disturbs them, but they have adjusted to it well."

The Chapel Hill force consists of Blake and 22 others. A 24-hour day is divided into three shifts for these officers—shifts which have become almost meaningless in the last two months.

"Our men are putting in an awful lot of overtime," said Blake, "and they may never get paid for some of it."

The chief also commented on the demonstrators' contention that by "going limp" they were not resisting arrest, but merely refusing to assist in their arrest.

"The charge of resisting arrest has always been interpreted by our department as including actions which either obstruct or delay the arrest of an individual," explained Blake. "By going limp, the demonstrator is failing to heed the officer's demand. Therefore, he is delaying his arrest."

Another point which CORE leaders have expressed dissatisfaction over is that the townspeople (and onlookers) have blocked the sidewalk, thereby interrupting the march. Blake threw some light on this situation.

"In Chapel Hill we do not have an ordinance for parades, marches and the like. Therefore CORE does not have to have a permit to march through town. Also, however, this means that the townspeople have just as much right to the sidewalk as the marchers do, as long as the people do not intentionally block the march."

This means that the marchers have no right to force their way through a crowdde sidewalk. It also means that people on the sidewalk have no right to force blockage of the march.

The overall impression you get from Chief Blake is simply a mirror of the overall impression he gets from the town. Chapel Hillians, by most standards, are a patient, understanding group of people. Their patience is being tested and it shows signs of weakening. That this growing resentment will not turn into violence is everyone's hope. Unfortunately, it is not an impossibility. Chief Blake and his staff are aware of this—thus they are pushing themselves twice as hard —just to keep the peace.

SP Vacancies Are Filled Monday

Six legislative vacancies in the Student Party were filled at a meeting Monday.

Paul Dickson, party chairman, announced the appointments yesterday, commenting, "I am very pleased with the quality of our new legislators and am confident that they will serve their constituencies well."

Appointments include Jim Weeks, Dwight Wheless, John Church and Bill Bowerman, Town Men's IV; Tom Mimms, Dorm Men's VI; and Dave Rendleman, Dorm Men's VII.

The party also adopted new by-laws at the meeting.

Boycott Ala. School

NOTASULGA, Ala. (UPI) — Six Negroes found themselves sitting alone Tuesday in another boycotted "desegregated" school — a situation which has spurred speculation that the federal government might issue a blanket school integration order for the state of Alabama.

The six Negroes attended school in nearby Shorter—the only public white high school in Macon County that conducted classes Tuesday.

Six other Negroes assigned to the Notasulga school did not show up for classes — but neither did any of the whites.

The 12 Negroes were transferred to the Shorter and Notasulga schools from nearby Tuskegee, where another white boycott left the 12 the only pupils in the entire high school. State officials closed the school on grounds it was financially unsound to operate it for so few students.

The six Negroes assigned to the Notasulga school apparently are waiting until after a federal court hearing Thursday before making another integration attempt. The hearing is on a government request for an order barring Notasulga Mayor James Rea from interfering with the desegregation.

The real showdown in the Macon County school desegregation battle, however, may come Feb. 21 at Opelika where a three-judge federal panel has been asked to enjoin the State Board of Education from operating segregated schools.

What? Us Worry About Consistency?

Not being versed in the rites of lawmaking, we are hesitant to take a position on the Board of Aldermen's action Monday night in making it illegal to picket except between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m.

However, we do have a few questions, based on the Aldermen's past performance. Seems like there was some doubt about the constitutionality of the proposed public accommodations ordinance when it was up for consideration some time ago. In an attempt to clear up this point, the Aldermen quite correctly requested the advice of the Institute of Government and the assistant Attorney General of North Carolina.

As there was obviously some doubt about the constitutionality of the new picketing ordinance, we feel certain the Aldermen also checked into it before taking any rash action.

What we would like to know is what the assistant Attorney General and the Institute of Government told them about the new picketing law. This information hasn't been made public yet, but we feel certain it will be. The Aldermen obviously wouldn't have acted on such a questionable matter without consulting these two authorities.

Also, we would like to know if the new restriction on the constitutional right of Americans to peaceably assemble and picket is only in effect until Daylight Saving Time rolls around, or does the ordinance provide for both Eastern Standard Time and Daylight Time?

Lastly we would like to know when the Aldermen are going to quit coping with the effects of the demonstrations and deal with their cause. When are they going to put teeth in their declarations against discrimination? When are they going to put the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee out of business by removing its reason for existence?

A Short Course In Fascination

For those of us who grow up in the United States and only read and hear about foreign lands, there's nothing in the world to match the experience of actually visiting some of them.

It's positive spine-tingling, for example, to see the clouded cliff of Gibraltar first-hand; to take a stroll down the celebrated Champs-Elysees of Paris; or to wake up in Rome and see the sun come up over The Eternal City.

There is more. There is the chance run-in with other American students studying abroad; the informal conversations with people of another tongue and background; the perspective that comes with seeing America from afar and realizing to what a great extent its shadow dominates the council of world power.

There are the memories one brings back with him, to be retained and mulled over on quiet evenings. There is the feeling of having grown, of having enlarged one's field of experience and understanding. And there is the hunger that grows in you to go back and look deeper than the fascination of your first glance permitted.

All this we say by way of urging those of you with sufficient loot to get in on the Seminars Abroad Program this summer. It combines a great deal of traveling through Europe with a well-planned seminar program. If you have a yen to see many of those places you've previously only heard or read about, and learn a lot as well, this is the way to do it.

According to our information, it's also the cheapest way for a trip of this type. For further information, check at the YM-YWCA office in Y-Court.

Morgan: Our Ugly Nation

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC News

Do we Americans really realize what we are doing to ourselves as a country? Probably not. But now we have no excuse because Peter Blake's book of scandalous pictures and blistering text entitled "God's Own Junkyard" provides an inescapable reminder of our wanton handiwork. Although the editor of Architectural Forum expresses his views on the basis of more sweeping research and professional knowledge than this lay critic could possibly muster, Blake and I apparently share some basic angers. With gusto I reported last night his outrage over what the billboard lobby had done to despoil the scenery and the safety of our interstate highway systems. Now it is time to get into the urban and suburban scandals of planned deterioration and why the public and its politicians have let this happen.

In the United States, Blake writes, that maniacal specialist, the highway planner, "has succeeded in destroying almost every city in which he has been active. One of his standard devices is to build his Chinese Walls along the waterfronts of our cities, thus making it impossible for the citizens to enjoy one of the potentially most beautiful assets of the townscape. Almost every civilized city in Western Europe has a waterfront dedicated to its inhabitants. . . . American cities have six or 12-lane highways instead. It is entirely possible that some of our cities fronting the Atlantic, the Pacific or the Gulf have more water frontage than Venice; alas, there is no way of finding out, unless one is airborne."

One explanation for this unplanned planning is that the planners don't talk to each other. ". . . The park planner puts his parks where there are no people —or, at least, where there are no people who would want to use the park, or where (if they were there and did want to use it) they could not reach it, because it is surrounded, and often bisected, by highways.

Outside of or in addition to sheer incompetence, what is the reason for all this mess? "Since 1920," Peter Blake writes in "God's Own Junkyard," and even earlier, architects have known, more or less, how to solve the ghastly traffic problems that have strangled or are about to strangle most United States cities—how to separate pedestrian from automobile traffic; how to relate expressway traffic to local traffic; how to relate mass transport to individual - automobile transport and how, finally, to relate the terminals of these various systems to one another and to the various structures within the city.

"All this has been known; all this has been repeatedly, indeed endlessly, advocated by individual architects and city planning commissions; and none of it has been translated into reality. Why?

"The reason is, quite simply," Blake goes on, "that just about the only factor that determines the shape of the American city today is unregulated private profit; profit from speculation with land, profit from manipulating land and buildings, and profit from the actual construction and subsequent lease or sale of buildings." (Was there, one wonders, some demurely hidden esthetic value entwined in the Florida land project near Cape Kennedy in which, by the most inspiring example of the free enterprise system, Senator George Smathers was able to realize more than $75,000 in a modestly short time on a $9,000 investment and was able to share his good fortune with that promising young family man so reverential toward the profit motive and who so sorely needed help, Bobby Baker?)

Blake muses that "highway engineers may yet succeed in wiping out pedestrians altogether: they are busy surrounding almost every public park, civic or cultural center with labyrinths of concrete spaghetti which appear diabolically calculated to prevent the terrified pedestrian from entering them and have the effect as well of turning motorists into whirling dervishes."

He is aware that our population surges upward and that countless more homes, highways and other facilities will be required to cope with the increase. As part of the answer, in addition to imagination, he poses that subversive function, planning. He challenges the whole monotonous concept of suburbia and, for that matter, residential urbia, pointing out that the average front yard is a functional waste; houses would achieve more distinction and room privacy if they were all joined together on the streetside, as in Boston's Beacon Hill or Washington's Georgetown, with enclosed private gardens in the back.

The "intellectual elite" in America, he charges, "has failed miserably to accept its basic responsibilities, and to set an example for the rest of the country to follow—an example of self-imposed restraint, an example of quality rather than novelty."

Even to give our civilization a chance, he concludes, we must demand more stringent zoning laws, take the profit out of land speculation, use the tax policy to encourage good building and discourage bad building, rid the country of the bureaucrats who have strait-jacketed most government-subsidized architecture, and get rid of their moribund agencies.

But beyond laws, he pleads, we need a new creativity. His militant, shocking book "God's Own Junkyard" should help inspire it.

'My Dorm Was Named For . . . ?'

Was Conner Residence Hall named for Otelia? Does the name of Manly Hall refer to the qualities of those who dwell therein?

No, but those are interesting thoughts indeed. Actually, however, the origins of the names of the 24 residence halls on our campus are varied and interesting, and the thought recently occurred to me that most students are probably unaware of the sources from which they are derived.

A thought which followed closely on the heels of this one was that I, too, was almost totally ignorant of the persons for whom the Univesity housing units were named.

For partial relief of this ignorance, I turned to Louis R. Wilson's "The University of North Carolina, 1900-1930," and a little reading soon shed the light on the problem.

Let's begin with, say, the four dormitories known collectively as the Upper Quad. Grimes, Manly, Mangum, and Ruffin were constructed in 1922 (at the terribly burdensome cost of $100,000 each). Grimes was named for Col. John Bryan Grimes, a long-time member of the Executive Committee and a chairman of the Trustee's Building Committee around World War I. Mangum's name represents a family which contributed several members of the list of the University's early benefactors, while Matthias E. and Charles Manly contributed their name (as well as a generous portion of money) to the third structure. Ruffin's namesake was Thomas Ruffin, a professor and dean of the Law School shortly after the turn of the century.

Spencer Hall (1925) bears the name of Cornelia Phillips Spencer, a champion in the cause of education for women in the late 1800's. The largest women's residence, Cobb, derives its name from Collier Cobb, an outstanding early professor of geology.

Mary Ann Smith Hall (1901) is one of the oldest residences on the campus, and bears the name of the benefactor whose contribution ($16,000) made its construction possible.

Moving over to the Men's Lower Quad, we find that Stacy Hall honors the memory of M. H. Stacy, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts in 1910; that Everett was named for W. N. Everett, a large contributor to the University in the early 1920's; and that Aycock's title comes from Charles Brantley Aycock, Governor of North Carolina and a strong backer of the University. All these structures were erected in the period 1924-25.

Alexander Dorm was named for one of the University's most influential and important historical figures, Eben Alexander. In addition to serving as supervisor of the library and as dean before 1900, he is credited with organizing the Order of the Golden Fleece and securing the charter for the local chapter of Phi Beta Kappa.

Conner, which houses graduate students, owes its name to R. D. W. Conner, class of 1899, who served as a trustee for many years. As chairman of the N. C. State Literary and Historical Association, he worked closely with President E. K. Graham on behalf of the University.

Graham himself, probably the University's best known figure early in this century, is immortalized in the name of Graham Dormitory.

Winston represents still another president of the University, George T. Winston, who served in that capacity in the latter stages of the 19th century.

Finally, there is Whitehead, named for Richard H. Whitehead, one of the first chairmen of what is now the Medical School, though in his day it offered a two-year curriculum only.

These are only a few examples of the persons who have left their names as University landmarks. Kenan, McIver, Carr, and Alderman were all named for early professors, deans, or benefactors of the University.

Of all the residences, however, by far the best known is one which appropriately enough bears no one's name but its own—Old East. Its cornerstone was laid October 12, 1793. For 130 years it housed many of the University's greatest scholars and gentlemen, including Thomas Wolfe. In 1923 it appeared to be doomed, but generous contributions by alumni saved the crumbling structure.

Its story alone would more than fill a column, and it is probably the only dormitory in the country which really deserves to have its residents preface their remarks about it with the single word "historic."

Aycock On 'The Whole Power Of Education'

An address delivered to the University Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. Mr. Aycock, an honorary member of the chapter, is Chancellor of the University.

By WILLIAM B. AYCOCK

Traditionally, universities have been so busily involved in supplying the needs of almost every institution in our society that too little concern has been given for their own requirements for trained personnel. Henceforth, those of us entrusted with the affairs of our universities must search for, locate, and "sign-up" recruits for the teaching profession with the same diligence and efficiency characteristic of our most successful athletic coaches in recruiting student athletes and department heads in search for top-flight graduate students. The most fertile grounds to search for teaching talent are among the membership of Phi Beta Kappa.

You are aware of the prediction that only half of the required new faculty members needed in 1970 for higher education will be secured. This is a disturbing prediction, especially when we recall that over two centuries ago Montesquieu said that "In a republican form of government . . . the whole power of education is required." The "whole power" cannot be achieved with only half the required manpower. Fortunately, certain developments are taking place which, I believe, should close the predicted gap between supply and demand for faculty members. Competition among universities is now becoming as acute as that already existing between universities and other consumers of trained intelligence such as business, industry, and government. In fact, the material rewards for those who serve higher education are beginning to resemble the benefits long associated with other professions. Salaries, for example, are moving up at a rate unanticipated a few years ago. Persons with substantial means may soon begin to advise their sons as well as their daughters to consider a career in education along with other professions when choosing their life's work. Other developments are unfolding which promise to be attractive to well-educated people in an "affluent society."

A few examples will illustrate what I have in mind. The rank of instructor for beginning Ph.D.'s in many disciplines is disappearing in favor of an initial appointment as an assistant professor. Promotions are tending to become automatic on the basis of a period of service in rank and it is not unusual for a teacher to rise to the rank of full professor in eight or nine years. Fringe benefits are more and more considered to be "essential" benefits. In many universities, leaves with pay are becoming a reality. Improved retirement payments, insurance protection, and released time for outside money making are increasing. To the foregoing must be added tenure, which provides extraordinary job protection for the faculty member. The financially dehydrated graduate student is likely to be impressed with these inducements. Enough has occurred in this direction to lead me to conclude that the shortage of faculty members will not be as great as it has been predicted to be.

My basic concern, however, is not with recruiting sufficient numbers but rather with recruiting the kind of people needed to bring to bear upon the Republic the "whole power" of education. Those of you who have excelled in your undergraduate studies form the greatest potential source for the kind of faculty member which universities need. Thucydides, in the introduction of his book on the Peloponnesian War stated that his work was not written "as an essay to win the applause of the moment, but as a possession of all time."

A university — especially one supported by public funds—may well win the applause for the moment simply by employing enough faculty members to accommodate more students each year, and still fail to meet the test of doing teaching, research, and service which gives its students and constituents a "possession of all time."

To make a permanent impress on its world, a university's activities must make a positive contribution toward resolving the acute problems of this age. Leadership able and willing to lead us through a maze of difficulties must be developed. Recently, Walter Lippman described the dilemma of our time: "For as long a time as we can see into the future we shall be living between war and peace, between a war that cannot be fought and a peace that cannot be achieved." It will take a special type of faculty member to accomplish that which is required. The prospective new faculty member whose primary concern is with the material benefits he may expect for his efforts is not the type of person I have in mind. An uneasiness comes over me when I see a person in his twenties dwelling on the scope of his retirement benefits some forty years hence rather than inquiring about opportunities offered by the institution for him to make an effective contribution to society. My reaction is that both he and his security, along with the rest of us, may be lost in the rubble long before his retirement age.

Education at all levels has been blessed with many teachers who have chosen deliberately at personal, material sacrifice to serve in our schools, colleges, and universities. These people, in essence, constituted the first domestic Peace Corps. The results of their efforts are not susceptible to precise measurement, yet it is clear that we have a better America because of their work.

We need to recruit in larger numbers faculty members who posess the personal qualities of leadership which have been characteristic of the great teaches of the past. One vital intangible attribute required of faculty members is truthfulness. To borrow from Montaigne, "to hunt after truth is properly our business, and we are inexcusable if we carry on the chase impertinently and ill . . ." But it is not enough to concern ourselves with truth only in the sophisticated sense of teaching, discovering, or recording it in a professional way. Equally important is to practice truth in our day-to-day relations with our fellow men. In short, take the same care in the footnotes of our professional writing. I like the way John Steinback described one of his characters as possessing ". . . a fine steel wire of truthfulness—that cut off the heads of fast traveling lies."

The "whole power" of education cannot be achieved until every campus becomes, in fact, a citadel of truth. That includes the mundane as well as the dramatic episodes of life. We should constantly be mindful of the famous words of Pasternak: "What for centuries raised man above the beast is not the cudgel but an inward music: The irresistible power of the unarmed truth." Obviously, in order to prepare leadership for the dilemma between war and peace, which has been tremendously complicated by the implications of the space age, all institutions of higher learning must be free to pursue the truth in all things. This essential attribute of a university is of much greater importance than the material benefits which it may bestow upon its faculty members. As you look to your own future explore fully the opportunities which are available to you in our universities utilize your talents to the highest degree. In these difficult days if Phi Beta Kappa graduates are not willing to assume the vital tasks demanded of faculty members—the rest of us may well inquire—to whom shall we turn?

Symposium Has Led Long And Happy Life

By VIRGINIA CARNES and HARRY DeLUNG

The Carolina Symposium, which will present its bi-annual program April 5-9, has a unique role at UNC that extends back to 1927.

Thirty-seven years ago the Symposium innovated the week-long program of speakers, panels, and discussion groups which deals with varied facets of a central topic.

This year's topic is: "Arms and the Man, National Security and Aims of a Free Society." Speakers will include news commentator David Brinkley, two U. S. Senators and the President of Duke University.

One of the first organizations of its kind on any American campus, the Symposium was founded as an institute on human relations under the auspices of the YWCA. It was first presented as a quadrennial event, so that students could attend at least one of the programs during their college career.

The Institute subsequently adopted a biennial schedule and the fourth program was held in 1937. It gained wide participation from the entire academic community and presented 17 speakers, 22 public meetings, 94 classroom seminars and had a general attendance of 25,000.

Until 1939 the topics for the Institute had ben largely local or regional in scope. The fifth Institute, however, faced the beginning of a second global conflict and turned its attention to the United States' eminent role in world affairs.

In 1941, '43, and '45, the Institute devoted its topics to the critical issues of the war: "The U. S. in the World Crisis," "Total Victory vs. Global Peace," and "The Prices of Peace."

President Roosevelt said in 1945, "As we dedicate our toal efforts to the task of winning this war, we must never lose sight of the fact that victory is not only an end in itself, but in a large sense, victory offers us the means of achieving the goal of lasting peace and a better way of life."

The 1945 Institute sought to recognize the problems that existed after the most devastating war in history. Specific topics as "The Stabilization of World Economy" and "The United Nations" were discussed.

After a ten-year period of inactivity, the Institute on Human Relations was revived in 1956 as the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs. The topic selected was "Old Problems in the New South; the Emerging World Community and the U. S. in the World Today."

The scope of topics continued to broaden when in 1958 the Symposium presented "Dimensions in Survival: American Culture in World Focus." This was an effort to analyze the problems of living in a world where man had proven himself capable of annihilating civilization.

In 1960, after shortening its name to the Carolina Symposium, the program entered a new decade and focused on the rapidly fluctuating world scene with the topic, "The Image of Man: The Individual in an Accelerating Culture."

The Intercollegiate Seminar, in which students from other colleges and universities throughout the country are invited to participate in the Symposium week, was introduced by the 1960 planning committee.

In 1962, the Symposium analyzed and evaluated "Today's Revolutions," the rapid changes in political institutions, the arts, science and society.

This year the Cold War is the subject for examination and discussion. National and international figures will come to the campus to speak on its effect in their particular field. Broader issues will also be dealt with, such as the extent to which civil liberties and academic freedom can be abridged in the interest of national security.

In the past, the Symposium has been supported by the entire university community, through financing and in attendance. It has gained national acclaim through publicity and the televising of many of the programs. Recent speakers have included Senators John Sparkman, Gail McGee, and Henry Jackson, General James Gavin, James Reston, Gerald Horton, Thurman Arnold, and Malcolm Cowley.

Dix Hill Wants You!

Want to do something worthwhile this spring?

Volunteers and interested students will meet Tuesday at 3 p.m. in Graham Memorial to work out the spring schedule for the YMCA Dix Hill Volunteers.

The program involves one to two hour visits to the Dix Hill mental hospital every other week.

Volunteers talk to the patients and play games with them. In the spring there are outdoor activities as well.

"The patients are so shut up all the time, they're delighted to see people, particularly young people, from the outside," one volunteer said.

"It's very rewarding when you can communicate with one of these people," said another. "You learn something about life."

There were about 25 volunteers during the fall, according to Committee Chairman Joe Burns. More are expected this spring.

Controversy And Concern Cover Appeals Procedure

By NANCY VON LAZAR

Controversy and concern surround the issue of the appeals procedure which Federal employees can use in cases of suspected racial discrimination, says Arthur Shostak, author of an article appearing in the current issue of "Social Forces," a sociological journal edited at UNC.

Examining this how the appeals procedure operates in one Federal manufacturing concern, Shostak concludes that "it is a limited tool with an essentially negative character," even though both employees and employer can benefit from use of the procedure.

The appeals precedure should be "supplemented by more positive measures if it is not to undo its own slim contribution to industrial race relations," says Shostak.

Take the case of a Negro alcoholic who, dismissed from his job because of his alcoholism, believes that he may have lost the job because of his race. Shostak points out that the appeals procedure may confirm "justness of his dismassal, but it does not quiet a lingering doubt that MORE (author's italics) violations may be allowed a white than a Negro employee." Shostak says that the employing organization should go "beyond the narrow facts of such a case and explore this sort of related concern."

The appeals procedure is currently a hot issue, according to Shostak, as a result of the Negro's "new militance in race relations" and as an answer to the questions: "Is the status of appellants really protected? Who seeks status protection? And what is the FULL (author's italics) usefulness of the appeals procedure?"

Site of Shostak's study was a large Northeastern Federal manufacturing and repair center of 10,000 employees — 3,500 of whom were Negroes—where 27 appeals cases were filed between 1952 and August, 1962. Twenty-five of these cases involved Negro employees: one of the 27 appeals was decided in favor of the appellant, and the nature of most appeals concerned failure to secure promotion.

In addition to failing to secure promotion, appeals were also filed for the following reasons: work assignments; hiring and recall; unpleasant attitude; ineligible rating; dismissal; and inadequate placement.

According to Shostak, most of the appeals cases involved failure to secure promotion because: this problem is a traditional source of resentment and is usually blamed on "outside" causes rather than one's personal capabilities; and also because the Negro appellants were generally high seniority employees and might have felt vulnerable and reacted sensitively in situations where white supervisors made the decisions.

Considering the record of appeals, Shostak says, "One cannot conclude . . . as do some officials at the center, that the loss by appellants of 26 or 27 cases confirms the absence of discrimination. The appeals are narrow rather than general tests."

The one appeal which was upheld, Shostak reports, "entailed a finding of personal, rather than radical prejudice."

Actual appeals and their outcomes include the following cases: and appellant charged that only whites were being rehired in his trades while facts showed that 41 per cent of the recalled employees were Negroes; an appellant charged that his assigned job was uncomfortable, dirty, and underrated, while facts showed that these conditions were inherent in the work, conditions which both the whites and Negroes in the position had long understood; an appellant charged that his shop had no Negro foremen although 75 per cent of the shopmembers were Negroes while the facts showed that there were two active Negro foremen and that six others had held such posts plus the fact that few Negroes qualified in competitive tests for supervisory posts; a Jewish ex-employee charged that his allegation of a "tense, anti-semitic atmosphere" had not been supported by an informal inquiry while the facts showed that a dismissal case against him for poor work had been in process prior to his resignation.

In stating that one cannot conclude from 26 losses that the center is free of discrimination, Shostak says, "Indeed, one may suspect, as with smoke and fire, that the regular recurrence of appeals reflects some degree of discrimination in employment opportunities at the center, or at least such a belief among the center's Negro minority."

Considering why the appellants lost, Shostak presents four possibilities: "a few 'come into court' with soiled records; many evaluate events in a different way than does the center; most do not have a complete picture of the situation; and all set themselves a very difficult task."

Shostak suggests that uses the appellants find for the appeals procedure are: it provides a day in court which commands the attention of highly placed officials; it is a source of answers for the appellant learns how things really are from the investigator; it is a "locus of hope"; it is a "protected sounding-board"; and it is a "tool for personal development."

Likewise, the center too benefits from the use of the appeals procedure, Shostak says, suggesting that: the procedure is a "safety valve," permitting the airing of grievances; it is a "spotlight on sources of friction"; it is a "device for correcting mis-impressions"; it is "effective check on the conduct of the supervisory personnel"; and it is a "symbol of goodwill."

No Warrants In Carrboro

The head of the Carrboro Police Department quieted rumors that he was planning to swear out warrants against leaders of Saturday's anti-segregation protests which started at the Church of God in Carrboro.

Chief John M. Llewellyn told the DTH that warrants had not and would not be sworn out even though the demonstrations violated a town ordinance prohibiting parades without a permit obtained at least twenty-four hours in advance.

The demonstrations led to the arrest of 99 persons on Saturday.

Moe's Passing Provides Spark

Lewis Hits 48 As Tar Babies Topple Duke, 90-82

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Bobby Lewis acted like Bobby Lewis Tuesday night, drawing fouls and dropping in points from here, there and everywhere as North Carolina's red-hot freshmen bumped off Duke, 90-82.

When it was all added up, the Tar Baby sensation had 48 points for the evening, including a 24 for 28 showing from the free throw line. And his success was just part of the ninth straight success for Ken Rosemond's sparkling frosh.

Led by the brilliant floor work of Donnie Moe, the UNC yearlings jumped off to a big lead early in the contest — a lead which they never relinquished though the visiting Blue Imps did rally late in the first half and early in the second half.

"Moe was really great tonight," said Rosemond. "He was driving in along the back line and passing off under the basket real well. His defensive work on (Bob) Verga was also pleasing."

Verga, who comes close to being a one-man team when the Imps are in trouble, got 26 points for the night, but hit on only 8 of 23 attempts from the floor.

Baskets by Moe and Tom Gauntlett got Carolina off to a quick 4-0 lead. Then Ian Morrison, who had 15 for the night, caught fire with three successive sets to put the Tar Babies up, 10-3.

From here the UNC lead swelled to 13 points before Duke began a rally with about six minutes left in the half, cutting the margin to six (36-30) at the intermission.

The crowd of nearly 3,000 saw Duke cut the lead to four, but never get closer, early in the second half. With the score at 41-37, Lewis hit on a foul shot, Danny Talbott scored on a feed by Moe, and Lewis followed with 11 straight points to bust the game wide-open once again, 55-40.

Morrison connected on a field goal moments later to give the Tar Babies their biggest bulge, 57-40. From here on Duke slowly whittled away at the spread, but never seriously threatened as the two teams came down to the 90-82 finish.

Lewis got 32 of his points in the second half, showing a remarkable knack at drawing fouls.

"He just moves for the basket so quickly that the defensive man is thrown off balance," explained Rosemond. "Also, when he's got an easy basket, he'll wait an extra second — often getting a three-point play out of it."

Rosemond, who has seen his team recover from a dismal 1-2 start to its present 10-2 mark, felt that overall his team played better defensively than at any other time this season.

"We gave them some real easy under-the-basket shots there late in the first half," commented the the blond-headed coach, "but all in all I was real happy with our defense."

Rosemond also had words of praise for reserve guard Tom Parrish, who turned in his best formance of the year.

Carolina In Big Town Tonite

DTH Sports Editor Curry Kirkpatrick is in New York City today with Dean Smith and the Tar Heels. Read Curry's on-the-spot account of the important UNC-NYU contest in tomorrow's DTH. The game will be aired locally by WTIK and WRAL AM-FM.

By MAT FRIEDMAN

North Carolina's basketball team rolls into New York's Madison Square Garden tonight to do battle with New York University, a team fighting for its national life.

Picked by many in pre-season polls to be at the top of the national heap, the Violets have been a great disappointment to their followers in posting a 10-4 record.

For the Tar Heels, the appearance in the famous arena represents a rare and long-awaited opportunity to bolster their slightly blemished prestige. An impressive performance in New York could have considerable influence with the people who make up the weekly polls.

The last time these teams met was in the Garden in 1956 when Carolina defeated the Violets and moved on to an undefeated season and the national championship. The following season, the Tar Heels were knocked out of the NCAA in the first round by losing to Navy in the Garden. All told, UNC has five wins and eight losses against NYU.

There has been talk in the Carolina camp of moving Ray Respess into the backcourt in place of Mike Cooke or Ray Hassell and putting Billy Galantai in Respess' spot. Such a move would help off-set NYU's height advantage. The Violets' starting front-court—made up of forwards Barry Kramer and Happy Hairston, and center Ray Bennett—averages better than 6-6.

Before the season began, few people thought NYU could miss being a national power. They had spent half the previous season without Hairston, lost guard Tom Boose through scholastic ineligibility, and still managed to finish in the top ten and reach the semi-finals of the NCAA Eastern Regionals before bowing to Duke. Kramer, a consensus All-American as a junior and second leading scorer in the country, seemed destined to succeed Art Heyman as player of the year.

Also, Boose was back, along with all but one player from the starting five, and in addition, 6-8 Ray Bennett had transferred from Tennessee A&I.

But somehow the team never got started. First Neil O'Neill, the team's leading playmaker, was lost through grades, then Kramer became hobbled with a leg injury, and the Violets lost four of their first ten games including a stunning upset (77-76) by little Wagner College. Other defeats were to Toledo (87-74), Michigan (83-74) and St. Joseph's (82-76).

Since semester break, however, in spite of the loss of Boose, NYU has scored four lopsided victories over Santa Clara, Holy Cross, Army, and Brandeis. Those close to the team say that Kramer has recovered from his injury and is now back to form.

With Kramer's slump—though he is still averaging 20.4 points per game and is NYU's all-time leading scorer—the 6-7 Hairston has taken up some of the scoring slack with 25 per game. He recently became the fifth Violet in history to top 1,000 points for a career. Hairston is a native of Winston-Salem.

Bennett, the sophomore center, has hit for 12 a game and sometimes shares the pivot with 6-8 senior Clem Galliard. The guards, with Boose gone, are senior Bob Patton (2.9) and junior Gene Fisch (2.6).

The bench is strong with forwards Stan MacKenzie, a 37-point performer for the frosh last season, and sharp-shooting Steve Jordan ready to come in.

Despite all this individual talent the Violets have not been able to get together as a team. Tneir game, for the most part, has been extremely ragged and marked by very little passing. In the Toledo game, the entire team was credited with just four assists. Some have blamed this on the absence of O'Neill.

The game could easily turn into a scoring battle between Cunningham and Kramer-Hairston. "The Kid," bidding for All-America honors with 26.6 points and 16.3 rebounds per game, will be playing before sportswriters who will have much to say about the post-season selections. He will probably guard Hairston.

To defensive stalwart Bryan McSweeney will fall the task of guarding Kramer, and the outcome of the game could easily hinge on his success. Respess (14.8), if he starts in the backcourt, and Charlie Shaffer (14.3) will be sponsible for stopping NYU's running game.

None of the players seem worried about a letdown following their inspired 81-73 victory over Wake Forest Saturday. For many the prospect of playing in the famous arena will be enough to get them "up" for the game. Only Cunningham and Galantai have ever played there—both in high school.

The NYU-UNC game is the featured part of a double-header with Niagara and Iona meeting in the opener. Niagara is one of two teams to have defeated national power Villanova. Iona features Warren Issac, a sharp-shooting 6-5 sophomore center.

Tar Eels Tackle Tough State At 8

By PERRY McCARTY

UNC's nationally ranked mermen square off against Willis Casey's NC State squad in an important ACC tilt tonight at 8. The ACC crown is awarded both for duel meet records and performance in the championship meet. Neither team can afford a loss tonight and still hope to contend with perennial threat Maryland.

Though State has a more than adequate team, Coach Pat Earey believes that his Dolphins "should be able to win." Letterman Dick Paoletti (backstroke), Dan Derby (breaststroke), and sprinter Bill McGinty rate high among area swimmers. Superb sophomore Pat Gavagan has only average speed but possesses remarkable "staying power" and, at 200 yards, a threat in any stroke. A fine individual man, Gavagan holds the ACC record for 200 yards butterfly at 2:01.2. Then too, junior college transfer Frank Lumous, along with several others, gives State vital freestyle strength.

UNC will rely on stalwarts Thompson Mann and Scott Smiley (backstroke), Fred Lipp (butterfly), Rick Forum and Dick Boardman (breaststroke), sprinters Davis Roberts, Chip Smith, Scot Taylor; distance men John Sheidon and Mike Bissell, divers Ernie Oare and Dave Moody, individual medley, Joe Lea, and of course, versatile Harrison Merrill.

Prior to the varsity meet, the freshmen swim a powerful group of yearlings from State at 6. The youngest of the Wolfpack poses a serious threat to UNC's proven group of freshmen swimmers. Not since December 6 and Navy has the freshmen chart been marred.

Steve Hildenbrand has made a remarkable recovery from a badly broken arm, and, though still a bit below full tilt, gives the Baby Dolphins a big boost in backstroke and freestyle events. Butterfliers Tom Adams, John Trull, and Ron Worley all have shown marked improvement, as have Fred Tygart and Bob Bottomly in the breaststroke.

Freestyle sprinters Pete Worthen, Jay Scattergood, Strud Norfleet and Russ Sleeper, along with splendid distance men Allen McDonald and Jim Bernuth, provide an abundance of freestyle depth.

Davidson, Duke Rated 4th, 5th

NEW YORK (UPI) — Two North Carolina powers, Davidson and Duke, led a full-scale upheaval Tuesday in the United Press International major college basketball ratings.

Top-ranked UCLA was the only member of the top 10 to retain its ratings from last week gathering the same 32 first-place ballots it has received for the last month.

Kentucky grabbed the other three No. 1 votes from the 35 coaches on the UPI rating board to replace Michigan No. 3 in the runnerup spot while the Carolina dandies, Davidson and Duke, jumped to fourth and fifth respectively. The two teams collide Saturday at Duke.

Vanderbilt, which clipped off three straight victories last week, rebounded to seventh-place behind Wichita, No. 6, which slid two places after its upset loss to Bradley.

Oregon State, the first 20-game winner in the ratings, moved up two places to eighth, Villanova dropped from sixth to ninth and 10th-ranked Texas Western became the first new top 10 entry in a month.

"As Fine A Personnel . . ."

"This club we play Wednesday night,"—and UNC's Smith almost, but not quite, shuddered—"has as fine a personnel and as great a depth as I have seen all year. Only Duke, among the teams I've seen, is as good in these respects."

Now Smith has not seen UCLA. Nor Michigan. But he has seen almost everybody else worth seeing. Like Davidson, of course. And he played Kentucky. So this is not talk to take lightly—especially when the team the talk pertains to is nowhere near the ratings.

"One magazine rated the Violets number one in a pre-season poll," Smith said. "I saw their handling of Holy Cross—and that certainly gave an indication of their tremendous strength."

Since exams, NYU, under Coach Lou Rossini, has won four games and won them big. The schedule sounds like Davidson's, but it does have one clue to what the club from the big city can do.

The Violets defeated Santa Clara, Holy Cross and, just last Saturday, killed Brandeis—whatever that is. But the big key was a 22-point decision over Army—AT Army.

"This, alone, shows the tremendous improvement of NYU," says Carolina's Smith. "Army has a real strong team this year, and to beat them by that much up at West Point is a feat. Besides, you've got to remember NYU gave Michigan a better game than Duke did (NYU lost to the Wolverines in the Los Angeles Classic by 11)—and that was before they straightened themselves out."

So, Smith gets his point across well enough. But he is not through. He wants this win (if it is to be a win) not to be taken lightly. And, make no mistake about it, he thinks his Tar Heels can win.

"Sure, we can win, but we'll have to play our best game to do it," he says. Like the performance against Wake Forest Saturday (81-73)? "Yes, only 40 minutes like the first 20 against Wake.

"I think that win will give us the confidence we need for NYU. We are up against age, experience and depth this time. It's going to be tough."

NYU Learned It's A Team Game

Before the semester break, NYU was tough, all right. Tough on themselves. Barry Kramer, the Violets' supposed ace, was hurt for awhile and, when he wasn't, was busy looking for something to get him out of his slump. It probably was the ball. Kramer seldom saw it. The other guys were too concerned with keeping it away from each other. One game, they got seven assists. Rossini got five of those.

When Smith says they shoot it up, he ain't kiddin'. They shoot it and shoot it and shoot it and . . . then a foul is called. It is likely, too, the foul is on Hairston for pushing Bennett away from the ball.

Hairston is 6-7 Happy Hairston, a Winston-Salem boy, and Bennett is 6-8 Ray Bennett and no boy. In fact, if Bennett were any older, he could draw a pension. But sometimes he acts like the sophomore he is. Like the afternoon he missed the Farleigh-Dickinson game because he thought it was at night. He was probably taking care of the grandchildren.

Apparently, NYU has found that this game they're playing is played best by a team—not one man. And now they're playing it that way. And what they do best is rebound.

Hairston and Bennett are undoubtedly the second best 1-2 board punch in the country (second to Michigan's fabulous Bill Buntin and Cazzie Russell) and in Kramer, the Violets have as fine a rebounder for his size (6-4) as there is.

"They'll get a jump on Billy—with all those boardmen," Smith says, intending no pun. "We're just going to have to do something different to stop them underneath."

What he may do is start the 6-5 Galantai at a forward, move Ray Respess to backcourt and remove either Mike Cooke or Ray Hassell—whichever one you consider UNC's second starting guard. Charlie Shaffer and Bryan McSweeney should remain as is.

But then NYU has good backcourt height (with the exception of 5-9 Gene Fisch) and great depth. Six of the Violets' first seven men are at least 6-4, and they have a guy on the bench (Stan McKenzie) who averaged 25 points as a freshman.

How do these guys ever lose?

We may find out tonight.

NYU Tops Tar Heels By 69-68

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

NEW YORK—If you didn't see it, you wouldn't have believed it.

Fantastic North Carolina, its meal ticket on the bench most of the second half and a Madison Square Garden crowd of 11,138 screaming it on, came within six inches of incredibility here last night.

The Tar Heels fell before strong NYU, 69-68, but not before a chilling comeback that almost sent this place into wild delirum.

UNC trailed by as much as 11 in the final half, and were down by five when marvelous Billy Cunningham fouled out at 11:29.

But Carolina unbelievably came back from the dead and led 66-65 when Bryan McSweeney hooked with 2:04 left. The lead was short-lived. NYU's Carleton Rooks put in a pumper at 1:44 and Stan McKenzie converted a mid-court steal from Mike Cooke with 51 seconds left to give the Violets a 69-66 lead—throwing hot water on UNC's deep freeze tactics.

Ray Respess made a "must shot" from the corner at 38 seconds for 69,68 but the Tar Heels could not get the ball and had to fouli. NYU's "Happy" Hairston missed his free throw with six seconds left, and UNC called time out. Charlie Shaffer passed in bounds to Billy Galantai, but no one was free and Galantai had to hurry his up-court pass. It went over Respess, the intended receiver, and McSweeney scooped it up and fired long as the buzzer sounded.

Cunningham topped all scorers with 23 points, on 10 of 16 from the field and despite three of nine from the line. He also got 11 rebounds, one short of the heralded Hairston, who played the entire game. Barry Kramer, the Violets' All-America, got 22 points (eight for 18 from the floor) and seven rebounds. Hairston finished with 18 points.

For UNC, Cooke and McSweeney, who combined to keep Carolina in the game after Cunningham left, got 16 and 15 respectively. Cooke was eight for 11 and McSweeny six for 12. UNC outshot the much-bigger Violets 50.9 (2 for 55) to 41.8 23 for 55). That's ten more points from the floor, and UNC's miserable night at the free-throw line undoubtedly meant the difference. The Tar Heels were plain bad (12 for 27)) while NYU was a fine 23 for 29.

With Cooke taking dead aim from outside, the Tar Heels rallied late in the first half, chopping what had been a nine-point NYU lead to a mere 2-point advantage at the intermission, 36-34. However, it seemed that the rally had been in vain as the Smith men hit a cold spell to end all cold spells early in the second stanza. The Violets poured in nine straight points before the Tar Heels could find the range. McSweeney finally broke the ice with 15:30 on the clock and the Tar Heels then began a slow charge led by Cunningham. The Kid hit from inside and outside until floored with his 5th foul.

SWIMMERS WIN

UNC's varsity swimmers remained unbeaten in ACC competition, turning back NC State, 59-36, here Wednesday night.

TO JAIL—Junior Edge, Carolina's star quarterback, is led to a jail cell late last night by Patrolman Earl Allison after he was arrested and charged with assault and attempt to commit rape. The case was staged for the Law School's Annual Mock Trial and will be tried in the Law School Court Room Friday night.

Junior Edge Is Arrested On Attempted Rape Charge

(The following is printed with permission of the participants in connection with the annual Mock Trial Friday night.

By KERRY SIPE

UNC Football Star Junior Edge was arrested by campus police late last night and charged with the attempted rape of a Carolina co-ed on a path of the Coker Aboretum.

Campus policeman Herbert Ellis, investigating the sound of a woman's screams at about 10:30 p.m., apprehended the quarterback as he attempted to leave the scene.

Edge was taken immediately to Chapel Hill Police Headquarters and booked for assault with the intent to commit rape upon the body of a female.

The victim, Phyllis White, 20, of Greensboro, was reported undergoing examination for possible injuries at Memorial Hospital.

Miss White allegedly left the campus dining hall shortly before 10:30 p.m. and walked alone through the Arboretum on her way to her residence in Spencer Dormitory.

She has identified Edge as the man who jumped from the shrubbery and forced her to the ground, tearing her coat and blouse. Ellis reported he turned and fled when she resisted and screamed for help.

County Solicitor Joe Roberts has presented a bill of indictment to the Grand Jury. The bill is expected to be returned sometime tomorrow.

Edge has been released on $5,000 bond.

Picketing Law Gets First Try

By JEFFREY DICK

The first application of the newly amended Chapel Hill picketing ordinance came a scant two hours after the Board of Aldermen passed it Monday evening.

Police officers said that two persons were picketing in front of Clarence's Bar and Grill on Franklin Street when the new ordinance was passed.

Police officers approached the two at 9:30 p.m. and informed them of the new law prohibiting picketing after 7:00 p.m., then asked the pair to leave. The twosome complied with the request.

The amendment to the new law, which set times between 7:00 a.m. and 7:00 p.m. as the only hours when picketing may lawfully take place in Chapel Hill, was passed after Mayor Sandy McClamroch broke a tie vote over the law.

Voting against the amendment were Aldermen Paul Wager, Mrs.

26 Are Arrested

Twenty-six persons were arrested Tuesday night following an anti-segregation protest at Brady's restaurant.

Captain C. E. Durham of the Chapel Hill police department stated a patrol car was at the scene when the demonstrators arrived at the restaurant. After observing that the intent of the demonstrators was to stage a sit-in, officers on the scene requested that a paddy wagon be dispatched. When the van reached the scene, the demonstrators were placed under arrest.

Restaurant manager Louis Taylor, pressed charges against the group for trespass. When the demonstrators went limp while being removed to the police van, police added the charge of resisting arrest.

Durham said the group was composed of twenty-five adults, Negro and white, and of one juvenile, a Negro.

Compromise Bill Passes

SL Supports Lawler; Urges Student Boycott

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Student Legislature passed a resolution urging its constituents to boycott segregated business establishments in Chapel Hill by a roll-call vote of 22-11 during a special session Tuesday night.

The compromise resolution, "directed toward the alleviation of tensions in Chapel Hill," was introduced by Neal Jackson (SP) and Darst Murphey (UP).

The first article of the bill opposes the present form of local civil rights demonstrations as "not proving rational or successful in the attainment of equal opportunities for all students of this university."

Article II supports Student Judiciary investigation of possible Campus Code violations arising from the demonstrations.

Article III urges all local merchants to desegregate and calls for a boycott of segregated establishments.

Articles IV and V ask that two students selected by the President and Vice-President of the Student Body be placed on local integration mediation committees.

Action on the resolution began after Student Party Floor Leader Phil Baddour moved that the body table a previous bill on the subject which was sponsored by Borden Parker (UP). Parker's bill, which strongly condemned student demonstrators, was tabled by a vote of 21-15.

Neal Jackson (SP) then rose to move that the boycott resolution be substituted for another civil rights bill sponsored by Bill Straughn.

"This matter would best be resolved by a good bi-partisan bill, and I feel our bill will be much easier to work with," Jackson said.

Jackson and Murphy's bill was substituted for Straughn's by a vote of 33-2.

Miss Murphy opened debate on the resolution by charging the University and its officials had ignored the civil rights situation.

"This town will become another Oxford, Miss.," she warned, "unless something is done to ease tension."

Following Murphy in support of the bill, Jackson said, "I do feel that we, as responsible members of the university community, should express our responsibilities and do what we can to alleviate racial tensions in Chapel Hill." Calling for the boycott's enaction, Jackson added, "Each dollar will be a vote."

Ron Hendren (UP) then moved to have the boycott portion of the bill stricken, charging that it was a legislated version of the opinions expressed by Student Body President Mike Lawler. "I am against legislating our own personal feelings on this matter," he said.

"This deletion will make this into a wishy-washy little old bill," Straughn retorted.

Arthur Hays (SP) moved that Hendren's deletion be tabled indefinitely, and more discussion followed.

Mike Chanin (UP) urged that Hendren's deletion not be put off. He was followed by Baddour, who explained Lawler's reasoning on the boycott issue and urged the body not to delete the passage.

Rep. Murphy rose again to stress, "This is a resolution, not a forceable boycott."

"Many may be alienated by this bill, but it is our job at times to lead our constituents," she said.

Parker then rose to address the body. He presented to the legislature copies of the petition circulated by Clark Crampton and Armistead Maupin which said that the students who had signed the petition were not in agreement with President Lawler on the civil rights issue.

Parker announced the petition had been signed by 1500 students within 24 hours.

"The Student Body does not want you to pass this resolution," he said. "They are violently opposed to your telling them where they can buy.

"How about shifting some of the blame to the demonstrators," Parker asked. "They are the ones who have caused the tension, have been dragged from the streets and have put policemen in the hospital who have broken their backs to drag them off."

A motion to close debate was passed.

Hendren's deletion was defeated by a vote of 19-18.

Speaker Bob Spearman then spoke for the resolution.

Calling segregation in Chapel Hill "a moral wrong," Spearman affirmed the University's role in this issue. "We are not establishing a legal code," he said. "What this resolution is, is a moral statement by the legislature."

Spearman discounted the Clark-Maupin petition, as it was reported to have obtained only 1500 signatures as opposed to the 10,000 students enrolled in the University here.

A second attempt to delete the boycott portion of the bill was defeated by a roll call vote of 19-16.

Parker then called for the omission of Article III, but his motion was ruled out of order by the chair as being dilatory.

Don Carson, University Party Floor Leader, moved the adoption of Articles IV and V, and they were approved.

Parker rose before the final 22-11 vote to tell the body that "I have made my point and that of our constituents."

Student Party legislators for the resolution were Baddour, Brewer, Carvajal, Ellis, Frieder, Hays, Jackson, Morris, Straughn, Wellons, Lindsay, Linney and Davis.

Student Party legislators against the resolution were Anapol, Lancaster and Shuff.

University Party legislators for the resolution were Carson, Kramer, Murphy, Oettinger, Ogden, Simpson and Chanin.

University Party legislators against the resolution were Arrington, Dotson, Meade, Parrott, Ragland, Lundburg, Parker and Allen.

Independent legislator Poe voted for the resolution; all other legislators were absent for the vote.

Legislators for the resolution with the exception of the boycott in Article III were Lancaster, Parrott, Allen and Ragland.

Legislators for the resolution with the exception of the entire Article III were Arrington, Kramer, Chanin, Carson and Hendren. (Chanin, Carson and Hendren voted for the bill.)

Against the entire resolution was Rep. Anapol.

First Demonstration Case At Men's Council Tonight

The Men's Honor Council will try its first sit-in case tonight under the charge of violation of the Campus Code.

The defendant, a Negro student, is alleged to have participated in a sit-in demonstration in a public place of business. It is further alleged that he went limp when arrested, an action generally considered to be resisting arrest.

The court case for the defendant, who is charged with trespassing and resisting arrest, has not yet been decided.

Student Government leaders decided that the Council should not wait for the court decision since the Council is not concerned with the legal questions of trespassing and resisting arrest.

The Council will deliberate as to whether the defendant is guilty of an act of ungentlemanly conduct.

A conviction in civil court does not necessarily constitute a violation of the Campus Code, according to Council precedents. Traffic violations are an example.

Kellis Parker, a senior, and Jim McCorkel, a graduate student in sociology, are defense counsels for the case.

Both students have participated in civil rights demonstrations over the summer but have never been arrested.

They plan to bring in several witnesses from the faculty to give opinions as to the guilt of the defendant under the Campus Code. The names of the witnesses were not revealed.

Police officers and the owner of the business where the sit-in occurred will also present statements to the Council.

Other cases will follow in the next few weeks if the Council delivers a verdict of guilty.

If the defendant is found innocent, all similar cases pending will be dropped.

Another type of sit-in case involving alleged assault by a demonstrator will be tried Tuesday night.

SEX!

By DIANE HILE

Liz is coming to town, folks.

She'll speak on sex, alcohol and riotous ways to live. She'll also get your soul if you don't watch out.

After all, if you are the daughter of a millionaire and unhappy, vice is nice.

However, this Liz needed Richard the Lionhearted for a mate instead of Richard Burton.

This Liz is Gert Behanna, known as the "Auntie Mame of the Holy Spirit," and author of "The Late Liz," her own confession of sin and salvation.

Miss Behanna, who has been through three husbands and an attempted suicide, will speak to the Di-Phi Monday night at 8 in Carroll Hall.

She will speak on her life, what it was and how it changed.

Miss Behanna has been speaking at various colleges and universities across the nation. The unhappy and alcoholic daughter of a millionaire, she is the first woman ever to speak at the Yale University Chapel.

She is coming to Chapel Hill Saturday night after a speaking engagement at the University of South Carolina.

According to the USC Episcopal Chaplain, Miss Behanna's speech "was the main attraction for the week. She talked for an hour and the students sat spellbound. Students can identify with her. She made a great contribution in their lives, not only with problems concerning alcohol, but in their search for their personal relationship with God."

Miss Behanna is being brought to Chapel Hill on an interdenominational church program.

Pickets Are Told Law Not In Effect

A dozen persons sought last night to violate the town's new picketing regulation — but were informed by Police Chief William D. Blake that the new ordinance isn't in effect yet.

Blake said he was told by Town Manager Robert Peck that if a proposed ordinance doesn't pass by a two-thirds margin, then it may be brought up for a second reading at the next Aldermen meeting.

Tuesday's vote on the ordinance, which would limit picketing from 7 a.m. until 7 p.m., passed by a 4-3 vote. When it is read again Feb. 24, a simple majority would be suffficient to pass the ordinance.

Despite yesterday's "new discovery," the 12 went ahead with plans to picket in front of Town Hall, and later at Clarence's Bar and Grill. Dr. Robert Sitton, philosophy instructor and spokesman for the group said Blake's statement "doesn't make any difference to us. We feel the fact that it is even considered by the Board of Aldermen justifies our protesting against it. We plan to continue," Sitton said.

American Civil Liberties Union Says

Academic Freedom Applies To Sit-Ins

By FRED M. HECHINGER
In The New York Times

The American Civil Liberties Union told the nation's colleges and universities Sunday that it was their duty to protect the constitutional rights of students arrested for taking part in public demonstrations against racial segregation, civil defense programs or nuclear tests.

The civil liberties organization added that the colleges and universities should go beyond the defense of the rights of college students to engage in public protests.

When students run into police difficulties off the campus, it said, the colleges and universities should see that they are assured of fair trial, defense by counsel and protection against police abuse. The colleges were even urged to seek or furnish bail for such students.

The A.C.L.U. also told educational administrators that "no disciplinary action should be taken by the college against a student for engaging in such off-campus activities as political campaigning, picketing or participating in public demonstrations, provided the student does not claim without authorization to speak or act in the name of the college or one of its student organizations."

Disciplinary action by the college for such action by students, even when the protests violate local laws or police regulations, "would violate the students' academic freedom," the statement said.

The sweeping policy pronouncement was included in a 16-page revised pamphlet on "Academic Freedom and Civil Liberties of Students in Colleges and Universities."

The institutions were also warned against denying admission to a student "who has been expelled from another college because of his arrest in connection with a conscience-motivated activity," including sit-ins, picketing, riding of freedom buses and other civic protests.

The most controversial aspects of the policy statement are likely to be found in a section on "Students as Private Citizens."

On the one hand, the statement demanded that "in their nonacademic life, private or public, students should be free from college control," unless they had harmed the institution's educational function or injured or endangered the welfare of others in the academic community.

But even though the civil liberties group denied the colleges' right to interfere with the students' private activities, it appeared to extend the colleges' responsibility beyond the educational boundaries by urging the institutions to protect students legally, if their private, off-campus actions got them into trouble.

"Unless college authorities act in behalf of students," the statement said, "there is the very real danger of alienation" and the possibility that students may turn to undesirable, self-serving outside agencies for aid. This was an apparent attempt to reconcile what might appear as something of a double standard, giving the student complete off-campus freedom while assigning to the college full responsibility for protecting the student.

Alan Reitman, associate director of the American Civil Liberties Union, said that the basis for the statement, prepared by the academic freedom committee, was "not necessarily a series of cases in which appeals were made to universities for students who had been arrested" but rather "the fact that the universities have an affirmative obligation to provide legal assistance to students who are arrested as a result of protests away from campus."

He pointed to a conflict involving Syracuse University last September, when 56 students and 13 faculty members were arrested during civil rights sit-in demonstrations protesting segregated housing. The university authorities at first instituted a policy of automatic probation against arrested students. It explained this action by holding that the academic freedom of students engaged in racial protests did not extend beyond the limits of the law.

However, the university rescinded the policy a month later and agreed to judge future cases on individual merit.

The A.C.L.U. statement said that American students, "like students in other countries, are participating increasingly in the political affairs of their society." It declared such participation essential to the attainment of maturity and warned college trustees that "the public interest is not served when the academic community is fearful of experimentation, controversy and dissent."

The following were listed among student freedoms that the committee was seeking to protect:

—Freedom to discuss and pass resolutions, distribute pamphlets and circulate petitions.

—Freedom to participate in student government and leadership, subject to reasonable standards of scholastic eligibility, set up by the administration for major student offices.

—Freedom to join clubs, invite speakers and publish newspapers and magazines.

Dr. Louis Hacker of Columbia University is chairman of the union's academic freedom committee.

The Council Holds A Bear By The Tail

The student judiciary of Student Government has faced many tough tests in its long history, but none come close to matching in magnitude and social significance the problem they face tonight: the first trial of a student charged with ungentlemanly conduct arising from the sit-in demonstrations.

The Honor Council realized that the cases arising from these demonstrations would be extremely controversial, and that any decision would likely please only a fraction of the all those people on campus and around the state who are watching the Council's action with keen interest. Nevertheless, they felt the Student Judicial system is strong enough to meet this unprecedented challenge, and strong enough to weather the fire that is sure to be aimed at it regardless of the decision they reach.

The Council could easily have said that these cases did not fall within its proper realm of jurisdiction, and avoided the issue. But it didn't, and the system can only become stronger in the long run because of the Council's willingness to face the stern test at hand.

There has been, and still is, much misunderstanding about what the Honor Council is actually attempting to ascertain in this first case (which by all indications will act as a precedent for all such cases). The student is being tried under the broad "Ungentlemanly conduct" clause of the Campus Code, and the legality of his actions, which will be interpreted by the civil courts, will have little bearing on the verdict which the council must render.

The Council will not decide whether or not the student sat-in; that has been admitted. What the Council must decide is the much larger moral issue of whether demonstrating in this manner constitutes ungentlemanly conduct in the current and changing context of today's society.

We would never venture to be so intemperate as to offer an easy verdict for the Council to render. But there have been one or two disquieting rumors about what considerations the council must take into account—considerations which patently shouldn't be taken into account.

The first of these bogus considerations is the fact that the Council apparently booted a case last week involving lab tests and it can't afford to find the sit-iners innocent of the ungentlemanly conduct charge since this might also be considered by some to be a bum verdict. Obviously, past decisions and criticisms must be left unconsidered if the sit-in verdict is to be just and well reasoned.

The second consideration that has no place in the final outcome is the public acceptance of the decision. A 'not guilty' verdict will cause much hell to break loose from certain segments of the state, and a guilty verdict will cause the same from other segments. It will be absolutely impossible for the Council to render any verdict that will not draw fire from at least one or two very vocal groups. It would be fruitless, as well as wholly unjustified, for the council to attempt to weigh which groups are bigger or more vocal, and we are certain the council members realize this fully.

The major point is that the Honor Council has decided, with foreknowledge of the traps and dangers, to accept these cases for trial. Having done this, we seriously doubt that they will be swayed by any issue except the moral one they must decide.

A Pat On The Back For A Job Well Done

The resolution on the local civil rights situation which came out of Tuesday evening's special session of Student Legislature gives at least two reasons for positive comment on that body's work.

In the first place, the resolution is proof that the SL leaders have been able to relegate partisan monkeyshines to second place behind a strong commitment to legislative ideals, at least temporarily. The technical tangles and parliamentary procedure wars have given way to positive action. Thus it appears that the legislators have answered quickly and positively our challenge of a few days ago, in which we questioned their ability to compromise effectively.

The second point, and by far the more important one, is that the resolution itself is a good one. It takes into account the several difficulties of the current situation, and acknowledges the fact that there would be no demonstrations without segregated establishments. At the same time, it expresses the hope that the demonstrations might be ended, a hope shared by students and townspeople alike.

Certainly the most important section of the resolution is that which urges all students to refrain from patronizing those businesses which continue to discriminate. In passing this vital clause, the legislators have performed their most important function—that of providing positive, forward-looking leadership for the student body.

This last section of the resolution should be taken to heart by all those who feel, as we do, that there is no moral justification for the refusal to serve any man on the basis of race, creed, religion or national origin.

The Golden Years

The Salisbury Post

In Chattanooga, Tenn., they have just retired a veteran employee of the county government because he is too old for the job. He is 9, going on 10.

It seems the law says the duty of drawing names of the Hamilton County grand jury must be performed by someone under 10.

So here we have a man washed up in his career while still practically in the prime of life.

Whatever his plans, we congratulate good old Chris Haley, the retiree, on a long and useful career of more than four years and wish him all the best in the golden years ahead.

Burning Legislation

Sex On The Campus

Most Colleges Opposed To Co-Ed Dormitory Partying

By TOM HENSHAW
Associated Press

SEX I—and probably II, III, and IV is still a popular subject on the college campus, even though it's not listed in the catalogue and students get no credits for passing the course. In fact, concerned parents will be happy to know, most colleges still devote considerable time and energy to erecting a fence of rules and regulations between their lusty males and nubile coeds.

The subject came up the other day at Harvard.

Fair Harvard, it seems, permits its students to entertain women in their dormitory rooms for a total of 35 hours a week. There are indications that some of the entertainment would startle the city censor in nearby Boston.

"Trouble has arisen," said Dean John U. Munro, "because what was once considered a pleasant privilege has come to be license to use the college rooms for wild parties and sexual intercourse."

Tighten Rules

At the same time, Helen E. Clark, dean of women at the University of Maryland, tightened up rules that let undergraduate women, with permission from their parents, spend nights off the campus.

"A number of instances of students partying in apartments, considerable imbibing of alcohol and lack of moral behavior have been drawn to our attention," Miss Clark said.

This fall, tiny Earlham College — 945 students — in Richmond, Ind., revoked Sunday visiting privileges for men and women students. Too many doors were being closed.

"We are on record as a place that opposes extramarital intercourse," said Dean Eric Curtis, "and we see no reason why we should provide students with a situation where this may be possible."

Few colleges are as liberal as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where women are allowed to visit men's dorm rooms 58 hours a week and the only rule is the Interfraternity Council suggestion that "promiscuous activity should not be permitted."

Strict Mars Hill

Few are as strict as little Mars Hill College in Mars Hill, N. C.—known to its student body, incidentally, as "the buckle on the Bible belt"—where women are not even permitted to enter men's dormitory buildings.

Representative of the great number of colleges that have found a middle ground between MIT and Mars Hill is Union College, near Albany, N. Y. Women are banned from dorm rooms but they are permitted in the social rooms from noon to 8 p.m., on Sunday and Friday and from noon to 1 a.m., on Saturday.

"An essential difference exists between what students think is fitting and proper and what their parents think is fitting and proper," says a Union College official. "We are trying to reach a median point but with emphasis on the wishes of the parents."

Mostly in Northeast

The colleges that take the most benign attitude toward boy-girl relationships are concentrated chiefly in the Northeast. Some have got their fingers burned.

Yale allows dorm room visits on weekend evenings. They were permitted during the week, too, until 1960 when 20 students were allowed to resign or were disciplined for importing a 14-year-old girl from a nearby town for nightly dorm visits.

Goddard College, often described as an experimental school in Plainfield, Vt., allows coeds and men students to mingle unchaperoned in dorm rooms up to 9 p.m. Girls are never required to check in and out of their own dorms.

"We have a few serious incidents, now and then, as every college does," says Provost John Hall, "but generally it works out well."

But not well enough, apparently, for Dean Forest K. Davis has asked the student body to think over the current visiting rules with an eye toward changing them at the end of the current semester.

Across the continent, at Harvey Mudd College in Claremont, Calif., coed visits to dorm rooms are permitted up to midnight on Friday and Saturday; 5 p.m. on Sunday. Most permissive colleges require that doors be left ajar during such visits. But not Harvey Mudd.

Closed in Winter

"All the doors open to the outside," says Dean Eugene Hotchkiss. "It would be pretty chilly in the winter."

Dean Warner A. Wick of the University of Chicago, where dorm visits are allowed on weekends, sums up the case for liberal visiting privileges when he says: "Fortunately, colleges are less often thought of as places where children can be sent to be safe and out of trouble and more as places where they will learn about the world and themselves.

"That means taking risks, not not with their thinking but with what they do."

Many colleges that prefer not to take the risks are located in the South and Midwest.

Attitude at UNC

"We may be old fashioned," said Catherine Carmichael, dean of women at the University of North Carolina, "but we take the view that one little girl ought not to be alone in one little boy's room."

The theory that there is chastity in numbers is widely held. Johns Hopkins University, an all-male school in Baltimore, permits weekend dorm room visits, specifying that if one couple is present the door must be open; if two couples are present it may be closed but not locked.

"Some of these girls are a thousand miles from their mother," says Col. Frank Hutchins of Tampa University. "We feel we have a certain moral responsibility to watch out for them."

Mingle Occasionally

Fraternizing between the sexes in dormitory rooms is forbidden at North Carolina and Tampa but boys and girls are permitted to mingle occasionally in the social rooms.

The college rules have drawn protests, support and non-committal shrugs from the students.

At Williams College in Williamstown, Mass., the school paper assailed Harvard's Munro as "absurdly righteous" and consigned him "to the Puritan Heaven where collected martyrs to their faith peep at each other through keyholes."

The University of Utah forbids women to visit men's dorms but there is little student protest. W. David Smith Jr., 21, editor of Utah's Daily Chronicle, thinks he has discovered the reason.

"Why should they worry?" he says. "There are plenty of places to go off campus if they want to."

It would seem that a good number want to.

Dr. Graham B. Blaine Jr., a psychiatrist for Harvard University health services, reported recently that sexual relations between college men and women are on the increase.

A 1938 survey, he said showed that 35 per cent of college women were not virgins; a 1953 survey placed the figures at 50 per cent; a current survey shows "they have climbed."

Over the years, college students have come up with a choice assortment of methods of circumventing the rules—and not all of them are as crude as sneaking away to an off-campus motel or lovers' lane.

Argument Starts

At the University of Rhode Island several years ago a girl infiltrated her boy friend's room by mixing in with visitors during a parents' day open house. What did they do? They got into a loud argument that brought half the house to their door.

And the story, possibly apocryphal, is told of the time Dartmouth permitted girls to visit boys' dormitory rooms, but only if a 100-watt bulb were kept burning all the while.

One enterprising student reportedly made a quick financial killing — selling 100-watt bulbs painted black.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

AN OPEN LETTER TO MICHAEL H. LAWLER, PRESIDENT OF THE STUDENT BODY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Dear Mr. Lawler,

In your message to the Student Legislature last Thursday, February 6, you made the following statement: "Some have questions about the legal issues surrounding a public accommodations law. Some have questions about the efficiency of the present forms of protest employed in Chapel Hill. However, I am certain WE believe with UNANIMITY that discrimination on the basis of race in public facilities is morally INDEFENSIBLE. THERE CAN BE NO QUESTION ON THAT POINT." (emphasis mine)

In issuing the above declaration, Mr. President, you yourself have assumed an "indefensible" position. The dogmatism of your position is surpassed only by the political irresponsibility and lack of good judgment with which you have asserted it.

To whom do you refer, Mr. President, in saying ". . . we believe with unahimity . . ."? It certainly appears that you are attempting to speak for the Student Body. If this is the case, you are guilty of misrepresenting the facts.

I find it hard to believe that you were unaware that many members of the Student Body disagree with your personal political views—views which you seem so determined to impose upon us. Certainly, Mr. President, you know the meaning of unanimity. When was the referendum held on this question? What strange telepathic powers suddenly enabled you to look into the minds of the 10,000 members of the University community? And how, Mr. President, were you able to muster the audacity to allow your statement to be released to United Press International, thereby creating false impressions not only for the citizens of this state, but also for the nation as well?

Subsection J, Section 2, Article III, of our Student Constitution says that one of the powers of your office is "to represent the student body of the University of North Carolina in dealings with students of other schools, in dealings with the faculty, and in dealings with the Board of Trustees." Surely, Mr. President, you have misused this power.

In your message you spoke of "inappropriate pressures" in regard to the trials of University student participants in unlawful demonstrations. Indeed, there has been pressure. Is it so difficult for you to understand why? Isn't it natural that there was some question, to say the least, as to the "gentlemanliness" and "lady-likeness" of "going limp" on the floor of some local business establishment? But Mr. President, how was this pressure "inappropriate?" Could it be that it forced you to take a stand which you otherwise might not have taken?

The second time that you addressed the Student Legislature last Thursday night you spoke with an air of righteous indignation. Ironically enough, you accused some parties of a lack of political integrity. You tried to give the impression that you had never even considered dismissing Student Attorney General Buzzy Stubbs. Is not the truth of the matter, Mr. President, that you decided not to fire Mr. Stubbs at the last minute? Did you not make this decision upon learning that the Student Legislature and the Student Body appreciated the fine job that Mr. Stubbs has been doing and that you would fall into disfavor with both if you dismissed him?

Perhaps, Mr. President, you have forgotten, (or do not care to remember) our conversation of Thursday night, Jan. 9, during which you told me that you "could buy and sell Attorney Generals" if you wanted to. You went on to state magnanimously that you would not, however, do it that way. You said that you, Phil Baddour, and one or two others would make the final decisions concerning whether, when, and in what form the cases arising out of University student arrests for demonstrating would be submitted to the Honor Councils.

I am writing you in full knowledge of the fact that at long last you have made your position clear. It seems to me, however, that the students for whom you profess to speak might be interested in a little background information.

Our Place?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

As a graduate student of history at the University, I found I needed more than a 48-hour day to complete my work. No amount of time seemed to be enough. Therefore, when the integration struggle began, I wondered if I had a right to participate in it. I wanted to be a teacher, a good one.

I decided I had not a right but an obligation. A teacher of history is a translator of the past to the students of today. Of what use could I be as a teacher and translator if my students questioned my sincerity or my integrity? Or if, out of touch with today's world and its problems, I could not communicate with them? I entered the struggle for integration.

This great university, I think, is faced with the same choice. Will it continue as a guide and mentor of future generations, or will it become a relict of past glories? Will it be a living institution—or a museum?

Slam!

Editors (?), The Tar Heel:

I used to enjoy reading the Tar Heel. It gave me something to do while I was eating breakfast. For the past two months or so all that your paper (?) has contained has been integration NAACP, and CORE. If is was possible I would like to cancel my subscription to the Tar Heel. If I want an intergration (sic) newspaper I am sure that the NAACP or CORE publishes a fine imitation of your paper. I suggest that any other students who feel as I do on this subject simply drop you a card telling you so.

Cage Tournaments Begin Monday

Intramural basketball league play comes to a frantic finish today and tomorrow, with several spots in the up-coming Murals Basketball Tournament still wide-open.

"The fraternity and graduate division wind up league action this afternoon and tonight," explained Walt Tuthill, who is directing the roundball program. "The dorms will finish play tomorrow."

The tournaments will begin Monday in each division and will require almost three weeks to complete. They will be single-elimination affairs with the division winner going to the All-Campus Tournament.

"Pairings for the division tournaments will be released this weekend," said Tuthill, who anticipates great interest in the play-offs this year, especially after the turn-out for league games this winter.

The handball tournaments are already well underway, with three important semi-finals tilts on tap for tonight.

Freshmen Meet Big Bad John

A few years back there was a popular song called "Big Bad John." It was about a king-sized coal miner who ended up quite dead.

Well sir, John Naponick is king-sized, he comes from the Pennsylvania coal country, and he is quite alive. North Carolina fans will get their first look at this particular "Big Bad John" when the Tar Babies meet the Virginia frosh tonight at eight o'clock in Woollen Gym.

Naponick stands 6-10, weighs Naponick — Danny Talbott met in the neighborhood of 290 pounds and is creating quite a stir on the UVA campus, where he stars in both football and basketball. At least two of the starting five Tar Babies are acquainted with him on the football field last fall and Tom Gauntlett played against him in high school basketball.

The Tar Babies will be trying for their 10th straight triumph tonight in the game which is open free to the public.

Out Of Gas? Us, Too!

DTH Staffers Find Troubles On The Road

By MICKEY BLACKWELL
And JOHN MONTAGUE

CABARRUS COUNTY—On a Sunday morning in the middle of nowhere there are 4 cows, 6 chickens, 1 dog which has seen better days and two gas stations —both closed. These are things you don't ordinarily notice—just when you're out of gas.

"Mornin'," says an overalled native of those parts as your 1953 Plymouth rolls silently into a patch of mud puddles in front of Jack Reid & Sons' General Store. "Looks like you're outa gas."

"It does look that way," you answer, suppressing a loud guffaw and a half-dozen curses at the same time. "Know where we can get some gas?"

"Well now, I'll tell ya, I got some pumps here . . . ."

(sigh of relief)

". . . but you know, I don't have a drop of gas in them."

(more oaths suppressed)

"Yep. I'm changing brands and right now those pumps are dry as a bone."

All of a sudden it begins to look like you are about to spend a quiet Sunday in Cabarrus County, watching whatever there is to watch, which isn't anything. However, your middle-aged friend, who has been staring at your car, comes up with a life-saving suggestion.

"Say . . . I'll tell ya what you fellas could do. There's a gas station down the road apiece, about a mile or so. If you get your car onto the road, you could probably coast down there. He's always open."

You look down the road and see it is partially uphill. You decide you'll have better luck walking—so off you go after first thanking your friend for his tip.

It is a nice day—the sun shining brightly overhead—and really a mile isn't too far to walk, even today. It's just that you feel so ridiculous strolling down the middle of Route 49, dressed in your best suit and wearing your best frown.

You feel even more ridiculous when you get to Earnhardt's Furniture Store Gas Station (or is it Earnhardt's Furniture Store?) and find it closed. Just plain closed — with a big "Open" sign out front. You cry a little—shout for help—a dog barks somewhere —and you start back.

An occasional car whizzes by. Most people wave or run off the other side of the road trying to avoid looking at you, but finally you manage to flag one down.

"Could you give us a lift to the next gas station?" you ask.

"Well, if there's one between here and New York, I think I can," a sun-glassed man replies.

You hop in the car, muttering thank you's—and thinking how far away New York seems from Jack Reid and Sons', the cows and chickens, and your empty gas tank.

After passing by three stations

Three From UNC Get Top Positions At UN Assembly

Dickson, Lawler, Davis In Spotlight

Three UNC students are holding administrative positions at the sixth Annual Middle South United Nations General Assembly being held through Saturday afternoon at Duke.

Jeff Davis, a sophomore from Charlotte, will be one of four main Committee chairmen at the meeting. He and Paul Dickson, sophomore from Raeford and president of Everett Hall, were appointed by Mike Lawler, UNC student body president and president of the General Assembly. Craige Worthington of Duke, Secretary-General of the Assembly, named the other two committee chairmen from Duke.

Carolina also will be represented by three student delegations to the Model Assembly. The delegations of undergraduate and graduate students will vie with some 70 other delegations from Southern schools for the Best Delegation Award announced at the closing business session on Saturday. There was no winner last spring when the Assembly was held at UNC.

Carolina delegations will represent Brazil, Yugoslavia and the UAR. Members of the Brazilian and UAR delegations belong to Di-Phi. The Yugoslavian delegation is composed of political science majors.

Representing Brazil will be Walter Gunster, Hubert Hawkins, Karen Kern, Chuck Neely and Don Wilson. Will Bullard, Abdo Bardawil, Bill Dowell, Danny Kern and Baxter Linney will speak for the UAR. For Yugoslavia will be David Abbott, Stu Eizenstat, Bill Lucas, Brick Oettinger, Karen Rawling and Phillip Shivley. In the last group only Eizenstat and Oettinger are undergraduates.

Tomorrow

The DTH sports staff is in Charlotte to cover the North-South basketball games. Ron Logan tells all about the Freshman Talent Show next Friday, and the DTH news staff will have full coverage of racial activity.

IRS INTERNS

The Internal Revenue Service is seeking students majoring in statistics, economics, law or accounting for summer intern program.

Students interested must have finished at least their junior year, have a B average and have an interest in a career with the Federal Government.

Interested students should contact the Placement Service for further information.

APPLICANTS CALLED FOR

A. C. Howell, adviser to foreign students, has called for applicants for the Teachers for East Africa project.

Howell said that the project offers an unrivaled opportunity to teach in secondary schools in Tanganyika, Uganda or Kenya. Instruction is in English.

College graduates with or without special work or experience in the field of education are eligible. Candidates with training in biology, chemistry, English, geography, history, mathematics and physics are especially in demand.

Interested and qualifed students can get further information from Howell's office in 202 Bynum Hall.

Passage Of Picket Law Seen Probable

By GARY BLANCHARD

The Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen probably will give their final approval to a controversial new picketing regulation when they meet again February 24 — despite claims that the regulation is unconstitutional—in an attempt to ensure the protection of picketers.

Furthermore, it is likely that the measure will be approved by a larger margin than it was initially passed last Monday night, as one of the aldermen who voted against it indicates he may now support it in the interest of picketer protection and police morale.

The prospect hinges on a ruling by the state Attorney General's office as to the constitutionality of the proposed new regulation, which would ban picketing except between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. The ruling has been requested by Town Attorney Jack LeGrand.

These developments were learned yesterday in an informal poll of the six Aldermen and the Mayor of Chapel Hill.

The proposed new regulation has complicated the already-complicated racial situation in Chapel Hill by introducing a new issue: The possible abridgement of the First Amendment guaranteeing freedom to peaceably assemble and petition for redress of grievances.

The new regulation was introduced by Town Manager Robert Peck and approved by a 4-3 vote of the Board of Aldermen last Monday. Peck and Police Chief William D. Blake spoke in favor of the action, saying that the efforts of the already-undermanned police force are being stretched too thin to provide positive protection for night-time picketing.

Mayor Sandy McClamroch cast the deciding vote when the Aldermen voted 3-3 on the issue. Police immediately began enforcing the new regulation.

But town officials have since ruled the regulation is not enforceable until it is passed again, because of a state law that no ordinance may be finally passed the day it is introduced unless two-thirds of the Aldermen present approve it.

Town Manager Robert Peck said yesterday the regulation will be on the Aldermen's agenda at its next meeting Feb. 24. He said he does not know if the measure is unconstitutional, but the town attorney has written the state Attorney General's office for a ruling.

Mayor Sandy McClamroch said, "I think it will be passed at our next meeting. And I think we'll have another vote to go along with it."

Explaining that night picketing ties up one police officer to ensure protection of the picketers, McClamroch said:

"Our concern is for the entire community, not just one element. We have to give police protection to all. And I think some limitations on the hours is the best way to do it. Violence is much more likely to occur after dark than it is in the daytime.

"In my opinion, the regulation is constitutional."

The three other Aldermen who voted for the regulation last Monday—Joe Page, Gene Strowd and Roland Giduz — indicated they share the Mayor's sentiments.

Page said "I'll certainly vote the same way I voted last time . . . I don't see how it could be unconstitutional."

Strowd declined to comment.

Giduz declined to say how he would vote, but said "I'll be glad to consider the chief's request if he brings it up again.

"The only good reason for having it is to protect picketers. I am very reluctant to pass such an amendment. I don't know if it's unconstitutional."

Chief Blake said he doesn't

Cleveland To Run

Gordon Cleveland, political science professor at the University and a member of the Orange County Board of Commissioners, has announced his candidacy for the State House of Representatives

He is the second in the race for the House nomination in the May Democratic Primary. Donald Stanford, dairy farmer and chairman of the Board of County Commissioners, announced his candidacy for the House last Sunday.

Two candidates also have announced for the Democratic nomination to Orange's seat in the State Senate. Don Matheson of Hillsboro, retired Orange County farm agent, and Robert Midgette, Chapel Hill attorney, both announced last Sunday.

In a statement announcing his candidacy, Cleveland said:

"In offering myself as a candidate for the House of Representatives of the State of North Carolina, I pledge to continue, at the grams I have supported as a member of the Orange County Board of Education and as an Orange County Commissioner.

"I will also do my utmost to further the outstanding programs to which John Umstead has contributed so much, especially North Carolina's programs for mental health and higher education. I will take full advantage of Umstead's extensive knowledge and experience and seek his counsel in these matters as in many others.

Cleveland, 47, was reared and attended public schools in Staunton, Va.

He received his undergraduate degree at Davidson; his Master's degree, in Southern History, from Auburn; and his doctorate from UNC.

He spent three and a half years in the Air Corps during World War II, serving as a heavy bomber pilot flying out of Italy.

He came to the Chapel Hill

Charlotte College May Be UNCC

A study to consider including Charlotte College in the Consolidated University is under way and may be ready by next fall, according to President William C. Friday.

Friday returned yesterday with his Advisory Council on Educational Policy after a visit to the College.

They met with College officials and a group of 150 local business, civic and educational officials.

The Advisory Council, a committee of faculty members from the three branches of the University, made the trip to see the College and set the stage for its investigation of the need for a University in Charlotte.

Friday cited three questions for the Council's investigation:

1) What type of University programs are needed that cannot be given by a four-year college?

2) What type of University service functions are needed?

3) How soon must these programs be established, if they are needed?

The Council will make a detailed study of the city and the College and present their report to University trustees.

"Our own experience over the years and the history of other universities make it clear that first-rate academic institutions cannot be brought into existence without the most patient, painstaking and careful planning and effort," Friday said.

"We enter upon this task fully appreciating the enormous and significant achievement that has taken place in bringing Charlotte College to its present state."

WESTMINSTER FELLOWSHIP

The Westminster Fellowship Council Tuesday night endorsed the proposed student boycott of Chapel Hill's segregated facilities.

A resolution supporting the proposed boycott was passed at the council's weekly meeting. The proposal reiterated the Council's stand last spring favoring a proposed boycott.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government has given up trying to figure out what the rock 'n' roll record "Louie Louie" is all about.

There were complaints that the platter, recorded on the Wane label by the Kingsmen, had off-color lyrics which could be detected when the 45 r.p.m. disc was played at 33-1/3.

The Federal Communications Commission, the Post Office Department and the Justice Department started an investigation, but finally gave up after listening at speads ranging from 16 r.p.m. to 78 r.p.m.

We found the record unintelligible at any speed we played it," an FCC spokseman said.

Edge's Trial Is Tonight

"There are details associated with this crime much too sordid for press release," said County Solicitor Joe Roberts yesterday in reference to the arrest of star quarterback Junior Edge on a charge of attempted rape.

Edge was apprehended by campus police late Wednesday night as he fled from the scene of the alleged crime.

He refused to comment in his defense.

The victim, Phyllis White of Greensboro has accused him of attacking her as she walked alone through the Coker Arboretum to Spencer Dormitory.

The attorney for the defense, Jay Jackson, has said that the Solicitor's accusations are unfounded. "No court of law will convict my client on the meager evidence Mr. Roberts has been able to secure," he said.

The jury will be selected today at 2:00 p.m. in the courtroom of the School of Law.

Judge Robert Gambill, Superior Court Judge for Wilkesboro County will preside over the trial tonight at 7:00 p.m.

'Beast' Is Shown Sunday In Durham

"Beast," a short play by Alan Goldsmith of the UNC Department of English, will be presented at 9:30 Sunday evening, February 16, at the Triangle Coffee House, 1205 Duke University Road in Durham.

"Beast" is a drama with its locale between two worlds where a group of varied people struggle emotionally and intellectually for superiority. Included in the cast are Laurel Dykstra, of the Carolina Playmakers; Charles Faust, of Chapel Hill; Dick King and Lise Knox, former Carolina Playmakers, and Goldsmith. Doc Field, of the RTVMP Department is directing.

This is the third in a series of new plays being presented at the Coffee House on Sunday, Wednesday, and the following Sunday evenings. "No Symbols," by Wilton Beauchamp of the UNC Department of Drama, follows this play on February 23, 26 and March 1. For the remainder of the spring term plays by UNC playwriting students will be performed at the Coffee House to give public hearing to their work as well as provide opportunity for actors, directors, and technicians to employ their talents on new, original plays.

Buck Roberts of the UNC Department of Drama serves as coordinator of the program.

Ministers Take Slap At Aldermen, Demonstrators

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Ministerial Association yesterday hit both the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee for their highway sit-downs, and the Board of Aldermen for their amended picketing ordinance.

In a resolution, the association called upon the demonstrators to "reconsider carefully their present forms of demonstration." At the same time, however, the association asked the Board of Aldermen to reconsider an ordinance limiting picketing to the hours from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., "which so severely restricts the right of protest."

Speaking of the highway sit-downs, the association said, "We especially deplore the violation of laws which involve no discrimination and are for the welfare of all people, for example blocking the public highway."

The association added, "We believe, however, that the community should try to understand that these demonstrations are directed not merely at segregated public facilities, but against the community itself which could change the situation if it were minded to do so."

Praising the Chapel Hill Police, the association expressed gratitude, "for the patient and able leadership of Chief of Police William Blake and sympathize with the extreme demands which have been made on the police force."

Appreciation Fund Begun For Police

The Chamber of Commerce has kicked off a dirve to raise money for a "merit appreciation fund" for the Chapel Hill Police Department.

Joe Augustine, executive director of the chamber, said Wednesday the group hopes to get about $25 to $50 per member business for the fund. The chamber has 175 members.

The chamber has pledged to contribute $2,000 to begin the fund drive.

In a statement this week the chamber's board of directors endorsed "the mayor's program of recognizing the police force for its service above and beyond the call of duty."

Augustine appealed to the "entire Chapel Hill-Carrboro community" to participate in the drive. Contributions can be sent to Chapel Hill town manager Robert Peck at the town hall.

"All citizens should be cognizant of the fine job the police department is doing in handling the racial demonstrations here," Augustine said.

The primary reason for the appreciation fund, according to Mayor Sandy McClamroch, was to repay police, in part, for their long hours of work in handling demonstrations.

SUMMER CAMP WORK

John H. Sutton, director of Methodist summer camps in North Carolina, will be at the Wesley House (Methodist Student Center) tonight at 6 for supper. Students interested in summer camp work will be interviewed. Call 942-2152 to make reservations for supper.

'The Busy Martyr' Opens

Comedy, Insight Feature Playmaker Show

By LARRY WALZ

The Carolina Playmakers present "The Busy Martyr" by George Hitchcock. Directed by Tommy Rezzuto. Settings by Harry R. Callahan. Costumes by Irene Smart Rains. Lighting by Jeannean B. Babcock. At the Playmaker' Theatre through February 16th.

It all begins when the wife of the Mayor of Sandaraque (a small town in southern France) makes up a story about a new gardener called Muscari. He is, of course, fictitious. In another part of the town, Poulette, the grocer of Sandaraque, finds that his daughter Mathilde is pregnant. Through a slight misunderstanding, he comes to suspect that the father is this same Muscari, who, Mathilde asserts, is huge and covered with tattoos. Soon the entire town is blaming every unfortunate occurrence on Muscari, and only Father Jarmian, the priest of Sandaraque, realizes that "Muscari" is nothing more than an imaginary scapegoat.

Then, in the midst of a chaotic scene in the Mayor's office, who should turn up with Pirendellian aplomb but Muscari himself, who promptly confesses to all the numerous crimes attributed to him, including arson, murder, rape, and chicken-strangling.

The rest of this fascinating comedy deals with Muscari, a poet and philosopher who wishes to die to make his views famous, and Father Jarmian, who hopes to save the innocent philosopher by finding a person who is honest enough to admit that he has committed one of "Muscari's" crimes. Human weaknesses are incisively, and occasionally almost violently, satirized. It may sound cryptic, but it is quite truthful, to say that the play's last word on human nature is given by the statue.

"The Busy Martyr" is a new play by George Hitchcock, who is a dramatist, poet, short story writer and an editor of the San Francisco Review. Hitchcock's comedy was chosen as the current play of the year by the Southeastern Theatre Conference. Despite several small lapses (as when one of the women who has been "violated" by Muscari attempts to kill him), "The Busy Martyr" maintains a high comic-satiric level.

The Playmakers' producton of "The Busy Martyr" is well-staged. Scrim has been hung in front of the curtain to make a more interesting background for some of the scenes and also to facilitate a number of set changes. Harry Callahan's sets are imaginative and add height and depth to the Playmakers' stage. Tommy Rezzuto's direction is fast and light; the crowd scenes play especially well. The play does not really come alive until the first scene at the Poulettes', but this may have been due to opening-night nervousness. Irene Rains' costumes are colorful and convincing. The program gives no credit for makeup, so one doesn't know who to blame for the fact that all the fathers in the play look fully as young as their sons.

The large cast of "The Busy Martyr" is uneven in quality, but several actors stand out. Arnold Wengrow has a flair for portraying pathetic heroes; he is excellent as the unassuming and insignificant Muscari. Larry Warner brings the right amount of moral seriousness to the comedy in the role of Father Jarmian. Most liked (deservedly) by the audience on opening night was Anne West, who as the unfortunate Mathilde turns a humorous part into a minor masterpiece of comedy. One might also cite the fine acting of Josephine Pettis, Tom Hull, Kit Ewing, Cathy Orne and Hyman Field.

"The Busy Martyr" affords an amusing — and insightful — evening. The promise that this would be one of the Playmakers' better years, which was made by the delightful production of "Little Mary Sunshine" and verified by the brilliant production of "Long Day's Journey into Night," is further upheld by "The Busy Martyr."

Reader Slashes Butler's Gag Law Speech

Butler

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In my opinion, the unsubstantiated tirade of Joe Butler in his address to the Dunn American Legion was a crass misinterpretation of facts designed to obscure actual issues. The account of Mr. Butler's speech — in Tuesday's Tar Heel—exhibited his lack of knowledge in the field of higher education, his obvious perversion of facts, his readiness to point the "red" finger (a' la Senator Joseph McCarthy), and his unfamiliarity with the world communist movement.

Butler's demand for Chancellor Aycock's head, and his call for the defeat of all North Carolina legislators who opposed the speaker ban law, demonstrate his willingness to sacrifice the democratic principle of popular representation to his bigoted drive to rid the world of communism. I suppose that if Butler's facts about the spread of communism are correct (". . . every hour, 7,000 more people are brought under communism. . .") we in North Carolina have about twenty-seven days of freedom left. Mr. Butler probably also neglects the fact that all people under communist rule are not communist. Russia, a country of 200 million people, is ruled by the communist party which numbers about eight million.

Mr. Butler also accuses the Chancellor of "running around the state criticizing the Legislature for its efforts to help fight communism." It is my opinion that the Chancellor is fighting for academic freedom and the First Amendment to the United States Constitution rather than trying to impede the Legislature's attempts to fight communism.

I will not lay myself open and say that there are absolutely no communists in an instiution as large as U.N.C., but are we infiltrated to an extent warranting an investigation by the H.U.A.C.?

Mr. Butler views Aycock's actions as "gross insubordination" since the the Chancellor is a state employee and is campaigning against a law passed by the duly elected representatives of North Carolina. In Mr. Butler's words, "He ought to be doing the work he's paid to do instead." Is it not the duty of the Chancellor of a University to strive for academic freedom, freedom of speech, and a free exchange of intellectual ideas?

L. J. Phipps, State American Legion Commander, did not recognize Butler or his speech, but tactfully withheld all comment.

Butler has certain financial connections to that University in Durham. Why doesn't he speak to Dook President Knight about an effort to stamp out communism at that learned institution?

Is Joe Butler an example of the type of person who supports Secretary Thad Eure's odious "speaker ban" bill? Is he representative of others in North Carolina who sponsor H.B. 1395?

Beatniks?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

As I live several miles out in the country, last Saturday (February 8) was the first time I have had the opportunity to witness one of the racial demonstrations in Chapel Hill. One of the things that impressed me about the event was that the bulk of the white demonstrators appeared to be the shaggyheaded, unkempt, "beatnik" type. Under any circumstances, these people have always been to me rather repulsive, but especially so when they attempt to channel their frustrations into the cause of "civil rights."

Being a member of the group who oppose the demonstrations as well as what they stand for, I felt a bit of comfort Saturday; for as long as the Negro members of CORE, SNCC, the NAACP and other related groups continue to recruit from among the whites such obvious dregs of society, their cause can only be retarded.

Dick Akers
Treasurer of the Student Body

For Lawler

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Mike Lawler, as President of the Student Body, represents all the students of the University, the great and small. When injustice is brought against any one of these students, he is obligated, whether he wants to or not, to come to the student's aid. As the elected leader of this Student Community, Mike feels more strongly what all of us should feel—indignation that one group of this Acadamic Community cannot go where others can because of the color of their skin.

Once a father took his family on a vacation to the mountains. One of his children was mentally and physically retarded. Upon approaching the desk with his family, the manager looked out and asked what was wrong with the child. When the father said that his son was retarded, the manager stated that the family was welcome, BUT the child could not enter the hotel, for it would give the hotel a bad name. The father took his family and said that if the hotel manager would not serve ALL of his family, he would not serve any.

We as members of the student body should be so horrified that certain members of the University of North Carolina student body are refused service—as the Toronto Exchange students found out—that we should refuse to go there ourselves. "Either you serve ALL of our family or NONE of them."

Only then can the University of North Carolina be called truly an Academic Community. Only then can we be proud of this family of students, faculty, and administration working together toward the common goals of understanding, wisdom, and learning.

President YMCA

Anti-Lawler

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I am a firm believer in the tradition of helping a man in need and feel that the Chapel Hill merchants deserve our support. These are the men who have dared to stand up for their personal property rights in the face of the civil disobedience and economic pressure exerted by a minority who would lead the public to believe that they are the majority. Is it fair (or legal) to take basic rights away from one group to award privileges to another group? Our student leaders seem to think so, as is evidenced by their plea to the student body to boycott all segregated businesses. This is an unwarranted attack on those businessmen who are entitled to protect their property rights. In view of this, instead of boycotting these businesses, we should make every effort to patronize them in their time of need.

Why Put A Stop To A Good Thing?

Once in a blue moon, and blue moons have already been notably rare this year, the University Administration and Student Government have been able to come to an exact agreement on some matter of policy. So far, much time has been spent in bickering over a few quite significant matters and many rather insignificant ones. This bickering has occasionally gotten bitter, and, as might be expected, has produced few if any notable results.

One of the shining exceptions to this dismal pattern of student government-administration cooperation has been the jointly-financed paid intramural program. With student Government and the administration footing the bill equally for the intramural managers salaries, intramural participation has reached an all time high. This program has been an important factor in the decided improvement of residence hall life.

Now, however, there seems to be a question whether South Building will continue its support next year. At the present time Tommy Johnson, director of the Intramural program, Gerry Good, President of the MRC and Bob Spearman, Vice President of the Student Body are attempting to work out an agreement with the Dean of Student Affairs Office (Dean Cathey) which will put the program on a permanent basis.

We strongly urge the administration to continue their financial support of this highly successful program. Such joint endeavours exemplify the cooperation which is sorely needed if the best interest of the student body and the University are to be advanced.

Notes On The International Conspiracy

"I utterly dislike the attitude that the man with the so-called better educated mind is the better man. Any time spent in university circles will show what dull, narrow-minded and, in fact, unnecessary people many faculty members can be. This has always appalled me wherever I have encountered it, both here and in Europe, for though there must presumably be a weak element in everything, it seems unbelieveable that so many people expert in their own fields can be so unimaginative about their own work and attitude to life, let alone their interest in the work and lives of others.

"The old cloistered attitude of the university type still exists in many subtle ways. As a type he is often regarded as suspect by many people in other walks of life because of a tendency to high-handedness with those who may not have had his educational advantages, but who are often more mature and interesting than he is. Lest I seem somewhat anti-university, let me say that we would surely like to take it for granted that in the university there would be a stimulating, alive and fresh attitude and a lively sense of inquiry passed on to the students; it is when we find these qualities lacking that we are apt to wonder why the apathy which so often replaces them arises."

Correction

CORRECTION: Yesterday's editorial concerning the Honor Council said that the Council had decided to accept jurisdiction of the cases arising from the sit-in demonstrations. The fact is that the Attorney General, the President of the Student Body, the chairman of the Honor Council and the chairman of the Judicial Committee made the joint decision.

Joe Butler is a Burlington engineer who apparently divides his time between architecturally representing Duke University and screaming about how great the Gag Law is and how bad everyone who opposes it is.

In a speech to an American Legion group in Dunn last weekend, Butler called for the immediate firing of Chancellor Aycock because he has criticized the law as being harmful generally and, in particular, destructive of the educational process.

But before we fire Aycock, perhaps we should ask who is this Butler fellow anyway? Why he's just an employee of Duke University, a private organization. What's he doing trying to tell a public official how to do his job?

Obviously Butler ought to be fired.

He knows that causing disagreement only weakens us, thereby aiding and abetting the great international Communist conspiracy which has every loyal American quaking in his boots and thinking of all kinds of ways in which we can pass laws and do other things to make it impossible for even just one of them dirty Reds to come over here and contaminate our children's minds, which aren't very strong anyway if they need such protection?

One thing was sure appropriate about that game with the NYU Violets—it was played in the Garden. It's just too bad the Violets didn't look more like pansies.

Valentines Have A Long History

By DIANE HILE

"I dreamed I was your Valentine in my Henry Thoreau Sweatheart", said the shiny-surfaced Valentine. I saved it from last year.

But I also remember the red and white pasty-smelling one that I received when I was in the third grade. It came from the red box on the teacher's desk and said, "Roses are red, Violets are blue, sugar is sweet—and guess who." The next year the last lines on a similar card read "monkeys like you belong in the zoo."

There were the boxes of Valentines—the fold-up kind that sold 25 for a dollar.

There were also the first box of candy and the Valentine dances with the red and white decorations.

And there was and always will be that little special something about Valentine's day.

St. Valentine

St. Valentine or Valentinus was supposed to have been a Christian martyr who was beheaded in Rome on February 14, 270 A.D. No one knows for sure why this saint became the connection with a day for lovers.

One tale says that the Emperor Claudius II banned marriages throughout the empire. Roman soldiers, who previously had been reluctant to leave their families for so many years, would then have no families to leave.

Valentinus, a Christian priest, continued to marry Roman couples secretly. However, he was caught, thrown into prison for a year and then beheaded on February 14. He then became the hero of all lovers in Rome.

Another tale says that Valentinus was thrown into prison for merely being a Christian priest. Because he spurned paganism before Claudius II, Valentinus was beaten with clubs, stoned and finally beheaded outside the Flaminian Gate in Rome. However, the legend goes, the priest, while waiting execution, formed a friendship with the blind daughter of his jailor. Through some miracle he was able to restore her sight.

One the eve of his death, saddened by his fate to die and leave the little girl, he sent her a note and signed it "From your Valentine." After he was beheaded a pink almond tree was said to have blossomed near his grave, a symbol of abiding love. Because his love of man was so great, the legend says that he became a hero, establishing the sending of Valentines to close friends.

The Pagan Version

Whatever the real Christian story is, Valentine would probably have been just another martyr if the transition from paganism to Christianity hadn't turned the history books upside down. Ancient Romans celebrated a February 14 festival in honor of their goddess Juno. At this celebration it was the practice for boys to draw by lot the names of girls who would be their partners for the rest of the day.

The dissatisfaction with the pagan rites performed on this festival day probably brought about the connection between St. Valentine and the lovers. (Christmas was also supposed to have undergone the same transition, being placed on the day of the pagan "Saturnalia" or day to give gifts.) The developing practice of drawing lots for girls finally spread to England. There the custom of Valentine's day persisted for centuries, finding a special place in the Anglo-Saxon heart.

Early English Customs

Superstitions abounded on February 14. An early superstition connected with Valentine's day was that the first man seen by a woman on that day was destined to be her future spouse.

One lady wrote on the Eve of St. Valentine's day: "I got five bay leaves and pinned four of them to the corners of my pillow and the fifth to the middle and then I dearmt of my sweetheart. Betty said we would be married before the year was out. But to make sure I boiled an egg hard and took out the yolk and refilled it with salt, when I went to bed ate it, shell and all, without speaking or drinking . . . . Would you think of it? Mr. Blossom is my man. I lay a-bed and shut my eyes all morning till he came out to the house for I would not have seen another man before him for all the world."

During Shakespeare's time the Valentine greeting was "Good morro, 'tis St. Valentine's day." The boy or girl who repeated this greeting first to the person of the opposite sex was supposed to receive a present. One of the early handwritten messages from about this time went thus:

Good morrow Valentine
God sent you ever
To Keep your promise and
Be constant ever.
Edward Sangon
Tower Hill London
1684

In Scotland, the first youth or girl one met by chance on Valentine's day would become their Valentine. However, there was no law against closing one's eyes and not opening them until the right one came along.

The Early Valentines

The first Valentines were merely paper with ink verses written on them. The first Valentine known was written by Charles, Duke of Orleans, in 1415 while he was imprisoned in the Tower of London.

The greatest advance of commercial Valentines came with the coming of engravings, woodcuts and lithographs in the 19th century. Elaborate Valentines came to their height during this time.

Cutout Valentines and Pennsylvania Dutch pinpricks were perhaps the first Valentines in the United States. Around 1840 the fad for giving Valentines began to take hold. Bold engravings and lithographs etched with cupids, birds, flowers and endearing verses sold well in most stationery stores.

Comic Valentines

One unique American tradition is the giving of comic Valentines. Recently the cry "What happened to the good old fashioned pink lace Valentines?" was voiced when the humorous contemporary Valentines came into fad.

Actually, comic Valentines have a long history in the United States. Sharp in their caricatures and pointed in their humor, the early Valentines were far from sentimental and expressed everything but love. Some of these early comic Valentines are downright cruel. A verse on one with a picture of an ugly old maid was made in 1849:

Miss gray hairs and wrinkles,
don't look so cold.
Don't let it surprise you to find yourself old.
The old family record, with truth on its page
Tells a horrible fact about your present age.
Your Pa or your Ma may have said you look'd young
Some twenty years since—but now you're among
The "old maids" of this world, without chance for a beau
For Cupid's grown gray since he cut you, you know.

Or there's this one "To a Soldier:"

You're a gallant soldier
With a splendid figure for parade;
The country is safe in your keeping,
So long as you fight in the shade.
I fancy myself your beloved!
Wouldn't you have a jolly good time?
I'd make you stand guard over a cradle
And do double duty to Valentine.

Here is another one to "Spooney," a rather flirtatious looking girl:

Sweet maiden, with the lovesick
eyes,
And face as pale as the moon,
The man who draws you for a prize,
Need ne'er buy a spoon.

One English gold digger in the 1850's sent this one:

You promised me on Monday last
A present you would bring
Or take me out a pleasant walk
To buy some pretty thing.
Tomorrow I shall be at home
Of love, a token bring;
And when you come with rat-
tat-tat,
Pray don't forget the ring.

The Victorian Valentines

But despite these cruel digs at various individuals, the lacy Victorian valentines held sway until the turn of the century. The satin and lace of the late 19th Century Valentines often lacked the verses of the earlier days. Some of the Valentines were sweet to the point where they were grossly overdone. There were also the lace envelopes containing the inevitable lock of hair. There was the one tied with a ribbon and containing a flowar that said, of course, "Good night dear and in your thoughts, forget me not."

There were also the Valentines with the cupids that carry the verse:

Can hearts in which true love is plighted,
By weal or woe be disunited?
No! they the storms of life defy
So let the hearts of U & I.

The Twentieth Century

And what kind of Valentines are they sending this year? Well, the frilly ones are coming back, but the cynical minds of the younger generation prefer:

—The witch who says: Be my Valentine or I'll turn you into a toad.

—The little man who says: I'd like to be your secret love—but you couldn't keep your big mouth shut!

Ain't love grand?

Alderman Paul Wager, who voted against the measure initially, said "I have an open mind on this situation. I think the idea is right . . . and I think it's quite legal."

The other two Aldermen who voted against the measure—Hubert Robinson and Mrs. Adelaide Walters—said the y think the regulation is unconstitutional and they probably will vote against it next time.

–Gas Up!–

which are closed, you come to another one which is also closed.

But there are signs of human life here — so you say good-by to your north-bound friend and stand once again on Cabarrus County soil.

"Say fellas, do you know what time this station opens?" you holler at two kids wheeling their bikes around the station.

"Yeah—one o'clock" answers one of the youths. "My daddy owns that station — he also owns that cafe beside the station."

"And my mother owns that towel shop over there," offers the other, not to be outdone. "My sister works in there, too. She's 16. Have you ever seen her?"

You have to admit you haven't had the pleasure—but there are so many pleasures you have done without in Cabarrus County—like gasoline, for instance.

"Say, son uh, you don't think you could get your daddy to, uh, well,maybe, uh, sell us two gallons of gas, do you? You see, our car's down the road about seven miles, and, uh, it's out of gas."

"Wait here, I'll go see," he answers peddling off.

Fifteen minutes later, feeling sure you've seen the last of that kid on the bike, you start trudging down the road. By this time you've forgotten which direction you were going, where your car is, and you feel — totally helpless.

But behold—a Volkswagen approaches and at the wheel is the kid on the bike (that is, the kid who was on the bike).

"Daddy said to make a deal with y'all. I'll take two gallons of gas down to your car if you'll promise to come back to the station and fill your tank up."

Circumstances as they are, you really aren't in too good a position to stand there and bargain with the fellow. You jump (into the Volkswagen) at his offer.

As you approach your car once again, you heap words of praise and thanks upon these two nice people in the middle of nowhere. Richard Little, 16, is a junior at Albemarle High School and it's his father, T. C. Little, who owns the gas station—which is the fountain of youth as far as your car is concerned. Richard's sidekick is Eddie Gallagher, 14, a student at Richfield Junior High, and it's his sister you promise to come back and see sometime.

You also promise to come back sometime and fill up your tank at T. C. Little's station. You make one other promise too: never to run out of gas again — especially in Cabarrus County.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: BURL RAINWATER

When Burl Rainwater (B.A., 1958) reported to Southern Bell in 1961, he coordinated the Bell System Census Project in Tennessee. Working out his own guidelines for collecting data, Burl analyzed his results to forecast household growth during the Sixties for each telephone exchange in Tennessee.

Success on this assignment earned him a new one where he also had to pioneer. When told to study the possible application of teaching machines to telephone training, he and another employee programmed an entire basic electricity course to show what the new devices could do. The textbook the two men developed for the machines was later copyrighted and published.

With such achievements behind him, Burl is now carrying out other interesting assignments in the Knoxville Commercial Office.

Burl Rainwater, like many young men, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

UNC-Clemson In Charlotte Opener

Bryan McSweeney

By JOHN MONTAGUE

CHARLOTTE — Now it's the Tar Heels' turn to be the "North," and Coach Dean Smith's boys are looking forward to it after a disappointing, yet not altogether bad trip to snowy New York City.

The annual North-South Doubleheader opens here tonight with UNC, now 10-6, engaging Clemson in the 7:30 opener. NC State and South Carolina battle in the night-cap and the whole thing is turned around tomorrow evening—State vs. Clemson at 7:30 and UNC vs. USC in the finale.

When Billy Cunningham fouled out midway in the second half of the NYU game it may have been a blessing in disguise. Though the Tar Heels sustained a heartbreaking 69-68 defeat, they proved to themselves that they can be a team, even without the fabulous Billy.

The last time UNC played those Clemson Tigers was December 3, down there in Tiger country. The game went down to the wire, the Tigers collapsed on Cunningham, and the end result was a 66-64 double overtime loss.

Now that Bryan McSweeney, Mike Cooke, Ray Hassell, Billy Galantai, Ray Respess and Charlie Shaffer know that they too can play basketball, ganging up on The Kid may prove disastrous for the Tigers. But this is not to say the Tar Heels have tonight's game won.

Clemson, which stands 9-8 on the season is not to be taken lightly. Led by their fine guard Jim Brennan (18.1) the Cats have beaten NC State and Furman, drubbed Wake Forest and came within six points of knocking off Duke.

Currently riding a two-game win streak, the most the Tigers have been able to win in a row all year, Clemson will start forwards Gene Burnisky (14.1) and Mike Bohonak (7.2), center Donnie Mahaffey (9.1) and guards Nick Milasnovich (6.1) and Brennan. The top reserve is forward Woody Morgan (5.4). The big men under the boards are 6-8 Mahaffey, 6-6 Burnisky and 6-7 Morgan.

Smith has been experimenting with his starting line-up recently, but will probably go with Cooke and Shaffer in the backcourt, Respess and McSweeney on the wings, and of course Cunningham. The Tigers' height, however, will probably necessitate heavy use of Gallantai and possibly Bob Bennett.

The North-South classic will go a long way in determining the bracketing for the ACC Tournament, now only three weeks away. UNC (5-3), South Carolina (4-4) and Clemson (4-4) all have a good shot at second place, while NC State (2-8) will be seeking to move out of the cellar.

Billy Gallantai

The Wolfpack and the Gamecocks go at it at 9:30 in the second game, and you know Everett Case will be doing his best to snap his boys out of the doldrums. The 'Pack has lost eight of its last ten, including a 51-44 "stall" affair to the same Gamecocks.

Merrill Breaks Own Record

By PERRY McCARTY

UNC's powerful Dolphins continued their winning ways by routing visiting NC State 59-36 Wednesday evening. The Heels collected eight of eleven first places on the way to the impressive victory.

With the meet just one event old, incomparable Harrison Merrill stormed through 200 yards freestyle in 1:48.1 to shave five-tenths of a second off his own previous UNC and ACC mark of 1:48.5. Merrill's customary brilliance sparked the entire squad to fine performances.

Chip Smith touched out State's McGinty in the 50 free; Davis Roberts duplicated the feat in the 100. John Sheldon won the longer 500 free in 5:28.4, and Rick Forum posted a fine 2:26.1 in the 200 breaststroke. Thompson Mann notched a commanding lead on the backstroke leg of the opening medley relay. Ernie Oare won the diving; Dave Moody placed third.

Dick Paoletti edged Joe Lea in the individual medley and Scot Smiley in the backstroke to contribute 10 points to the State cause. The other first place finish came on a superb showing by Pat Gavagan in the 200 butterfly. Gavagan posted a 2:01.3 to tie his own ACC record. UNC specialist Fred Lipp stayed with Gavagan virtually all the way and was a close second.

Next weekend Coach Pat Earey takes his swimmers north for a showdown with Maryland and a leisurely encounter with Virginia, February 21 and 22. The Dolphins are now 10-2 overall and 5-0 in the conference.

The State freshmen handed the Baby Dolphins their second setback 56-37 as the younger teams clashed prior to last night's varsity contest. The UNC team severely felt the absence of Jack Hayden who is currently recovering from a recent illness.

Pete Worthen won both 50 and 100 freestyle sprints. Ron Wirth of State set a NCAA freshman record with a 2:03.1 in the 200 backstroke. Jay Scattergood, Steve Hildenbrand, Bob Bottomly, Strud Norfleet, Jim Bernuth, Allen McDonald and Fred Tygart all swam well. State simply had more power where they needed it.

The freshmen travel to Raleigh Monday determined to reverse the outcome.

This Friday the freshmen go against Staunton Military and Westminster from Atlanta, Ga. Both teams will be here to compete in the Southeastern Interscholastic Invitationals, Saturday.

Spring Fever Hits Hickey, Rabb

Right now basketball, swimming, wrestling and indoor track are all pushing and shoving at each other, trying to get into the limelight. But wait until Monday—then it will be just plain confusion.

Jim Hickey and Walt Rabb have both set Monday as "D-Day" for an assault on the practice field. With the Gator Bowl still quite fresh in everyone's minds, UNC's football team once again goes to work—this time for "spring" practice though it's really mid-winter.

And speaking of winter, it may be 30 degrees outside, but that's not going to stop Rabb. He'll open up varsity baseball drills in Emerson Stadium Monday afternoon. The season starts March 23.

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Tinted or bleached hair has an attraction all its own, but it calls for special care and attention to avoid dryness and to properly protect its color.

If dry and brittle, hair of this type responds kindly to washing with a mild nonstripping shampoo or one of the shampoos specifically designed for specific hair coloring. Warm water should be used for tinted hair, somewhat cooler water for bleached or toned haid. Care should be taken not to turn a dryer up too high and towel-drying should be a gentle process.

Keep hair covered at the beach, make it a practice to wear a cap in swimming pools and keep tucked away in the far recesses of your mind that chlorine has been known to turn pale tinted hair green.

Also, keep it in mind that the finest attention your hair can enjoy awaits you at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. Whether it be a beautifully tasteful tint, a shampoo or an ercitingly attractive permanent, you can expect expert attention at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin Street—Phone 943-4335.

Big Bad Tigers Give Tar Heels 97-90 Clawing

The Kid Gets 33 In Double Overtime Loss

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

CHARLOTTE—Tiger, like Violets, just don't wilt that easily, North Carolina found out last night.

Down by eight in the second half, UNC caught a tall Clemson team and took it into two overtimes before falling here, 97-90, to its own mistakes and inability to spot its All-America.

Billy Cunningham got 33 points, a new North-South doubleheader record, but the ones he didn't get meant the most. Billy hit a corner jumper at 3:48 of the second extra period to tie it at 86, but here Clemson scored six straight points to ice its second double-overtime victory over the Tar Heels this year.

(The Tigers beat UNC 66-64 at Clemson in the second game of the year).

Jim Brennan's push shot at 3:25 gave Clemson an 88-86 lead, and Carolina immediately came down with Ray Respess missing from 20 feet.

Brennan scored on a jumper from the corner next (2:30 left) for 90-86, and, as 8,000 Memorial Coliseum fans cheered for Cunningham to get the ball, UNC again failed to work it. Bill Brown's corner shot missed by five feet, and the Tigers took over. Cunningham had not touched the ball in the last two series.

Clemson then just played out the clock, and Gary Burnisky hit two fouls at 1:49. Cunningham, finally, got the ball and countered with a basket 10 seconds later, but Burnisky scored two more free throws for 94-88, and when Billy left on personals with 1:05 to go, it was all over.

UNC, after trailing 42-39 at half, had rallied in regulation time on Mike Cooke's long-range bombs, hustling baskets by Bryan McSweeney, and drives by Cunningham.

A score by Respess and a one-hander by Charlie Shaffer tied it at 78 with 1:21 to go in the game.

But Clemson's Donnie Mahaffey threw the ball away at 27 seconds, and McSweeney missed a shot at the buzzer that would have meant victory.

UNC also had a chance to win it in the first overtime. Cunningham's underhand drive gave the Tar Heels an 84-81 lead with 1:58 left. But Mahaffey scored on a foul and Mike Bohonak, who beat UNC earlier this year, jumped for 84-all at 31 seconds. Carolina called time, but Cooke's shot at the eight second mark bounced high off the rim, and the teams went into the deciding period.

Billy was 12 for 18 from the field (9 of 11 from the line) and had 18 rebounds. Cooke got 21 points in a fine outside performance, and McSweeney and Shaffer had 13 each.

Frosh Hold Talent Show In Memorial Hall Friday

By RON LOGAN

"You ain't seen nuth'n yet, fella, til you see the All-Campus Talent Show."

Where else could you see Kitty Carmichael act, Chancellor House play his famous harmonica, basketballer Bob Bennett dance, footballer Charlie Davis sing, candidate for governor Ray Stansbury campaign and world famous "Fuzzy Wuzzy" McInnis play the piano?

If that's not enough to whet your entertainment appetite, there are twelve other big acts to be presented at Memorial Hall next Friday including vocal solos, folk singing groups and a combo.

Highlighting the program will be a faculty skit called "Blackboard Bungle" with a cast of eight professors and one lowly student. Joe Slate is temporarily elevated to a professorship while the faculty members play the part of students.

The "students," Dean Carmichael, Dr. Charles Henderson, Dr. Bernard Boyd, Mr. Walter Fallaw, Mr. Andrew Scott, Dr. George Daniels, Dr. Willam Koch and Miss Sue Ross, will enact a typical Carolina classroom scene.

Roy Armstrong, master of ceremonies, will present the finest group of talent the university can supply. Talent scouts searched from the backwoods of Craige (where they inticed McInnis out of a tree) to the town of Hillsboro (Candidate Stansbury's refuge) to find acts for the UNC version of the Ed Sullivan Show.

All of this entertainment has a purpose: to put money in the coffers of the Freshman Class to help finance a big weekend in the spring. Jim Brame, class president, says that the "Freshman Weekend" will be the first of its kind, and the talent show wil l raise the funds for it.

Tickets are on sale today at Graham Memorial and Y-Court. Members of the Freshman Class will sell them there for $.75 stag and $1 a couple, and the remainder will go on sale at the door.

Teddy O'Toole, chairman of the talent show, announced that auditions are closed and the program of 19 acts will go on stage next Friday with few if any changes.

35 Won't Stand Trial

Men's Council Acquits Student Demonstrator

Sit-In Cases Are Dropped

Some 35 sit-in cases under investigation by the Attorney General's Staff were dropped yesterday after Thursday night's Honor Council decision.

The verdict of not guilty in the case of a Negro student who sat-in at a series of private business establishments and went limp when arrested has set a precedent for all similar cases.

The student was charged with trespassing and resisting arrest by civil authorities. His civil court case is pending.

However, he was found innocent of an ungentlemanly act under the Campus Code. This decision did not consider the legality of his action, according to the Council.

This precedent does not cover demonstrations of other types of civil disobedience said Attorney General Whitney Durand.

A case involving sitting in the streets and obstructing traffic will also be considered spearately, Durand said.

No cases of this type are currently being investigated.

ENTER NOW

The deadline for submission of oils, sculptures and graphics to the second annual art exhibit at UNC's School of Public Health has been extended until Feb. 21.

Sponsors of the exhibit announced that James Tucker, curator of the Weatherspoon Art Gallery, will be a one-man jury for the exhibit. He will select pieces to be displayed at the School of Public Health and will name the purchase prize.

Judging has been set for Feb. 22.

Jason's Statement

Some statement on the decision of the Men's Council in the case of a student charged with trespassing and resisting arrest is necessary. The student was charged with a Campus Code violation based on his participation in restaurant sit-ins and his "going limp" when asked to leave by police officers. First it must be stated that under our student constitution the Men's Council has definite jurisdiction over student conduct outside the University itself.

The accused's defense was based on the principle that any action must be judged in light of the time, place and motivation behind it.The Council agreed with the principle, but added another consideration—the extent or degree of the action. If a student is justly motivated to act in a certain way and the extent of his action is not beyond reason, he cannot be said to be acting ungentlemanly.

At this point a distinction must be made between our student judiciary and a court of law. It is an established precedent that a student may violate a state or federal law and not necessarily violate the Honor or Campus Codes. The most common example of this is the student who drives his car in excess of a speed limit. Neither is it a violation of our Campus Code to protest against a law that one honestly feels is morally unjust.

We must consider the element of timing, or the succession of events leading to the sit-in demonstrations. Had this nonviolent civil disobedience been the first step in the attempts to achieve desegregation, the situation would be different. However, only after countless futile attempts at negotaiting and picketing were made did the sit-ins begin.

Under these circumstances, the actions of the defendant were held to be well within the bounds of gentlemanly conduct.

Peter Jason
Chairman-Men's Honor Council

Straley, Hill Pollitt Speak

The Men's Honor Council has found a Negro freshman not guilty of violating the Campus Code on charges arising from sit-in protests.

Thomas Bynum, 19, Chapel Hill, was found not guilty by the eight-man council after 20 minutes of deliberations and a three-hour trial.

Student Attorneys for Bynum, Jim McCorkle and Kellis Jarker asked the council not to consider the legal question of sit-in, but to decide the ethical question.

"It is not breaking the law that is at issue," Dr. Robert Sitton, of the Philosophy Dept. testified, but which law did you break and why did you break it . . ."

Attorney General Whitney Durand said he doubted if it was ungentlemanly "to walk into a restaurant and sit down and refuse to leave" when asked by the owner.

He said the actions of Bynum, which led to civil charges of resisting arrest could better be termed "passive submission."

"He didn't actively resist, nor does he actively help police in making the arrest," Durand said.

Bynum is charged in the civil courts with trespassing and resisting arrest in five sit-ins in four local restaurents in Dec. and January. He was in the group that was doused with clorox and ammonia in Carlton's Rock Pile.

All cases are still pending in Orange County Superior Court.

Campus Security Chief Arthur G. Beaumont testified that if "a student deliberately violates the law, he is, in my opinion, ungentlemanly," but added that this was not true in all cases.

Also testifying on behalf of Bynum, were:

Dr. Daniel H. Pollit, Law School, who spoke on the position of the American Assoc. of University Professors, (AAUP) on student participation in civil rights protests.

Dr. Pollitt is on the national governing board of the AAUP.

—Dr. Joseph Straley, Physics Dept., who spoke on behalf of the Chapel Hill Freedom Comm. and other local integration groups.

—Dr. Sam Hill, Religion Dept., who spoke on the meaning of the term "gentleman."

Dr. Pollit said the AAUP felt that all legal convictions of students in civil rights protests did not necessarily warrant University action.

Dr. Sitton said Bynum's actions were praiseworthy and commendable." He said civil disobedience was the only way to accomplish integration in Chapel Hill.

Bynum's civil disobedience was not ungentlemanly, Dr. Hill said, but was the sign of a true gentleman. "Gentlemanly conduct is not the absence of disturbance, he said.

Bynum told council members he decision and this is Chapel Hill."

7 On Council Disqualified By Defense

Seven members of the Honor Council were disqualified by the defense at Thursday night's trial of a Negro student involved in sit-in demonstrations.

Only eight members of the Council heard the cas .

This practice is common in in Council proceedings, according to Attorney General Whitney Durand. The defense counsel has a right to request that any members of the Council be disqualified providing there are at least seven members left to try the case.

In the past, as many as three have been disqualified from a case leaving the minimum seven members.

The attorney general accepts almost any reason for disqualification of a member, Durand said. The Council may overrule his decision at any time, however.

In giving his reasons for disqualifying the seven Council members, Defense Counsel Kellis Parker said he felt that this case was unique and more challenging than any other that the Council has heard.

"I wanted to make sure that the student who sat on the case would be experienced not only with the Council, but with Chapel Hill and the spirit of the University.

"I felt some members might have difficulty understanding the existential nature of the involvement of the Negro student.

"I also felt I had the right to request this, according to the Student Constitution.

"Normally in judicial procedures, one does not question why one exercises his Constitutional right."

UP Walks Out

SP Bulls Through New Election Date

By JOHN GREENBACKER

University Party legislators walked out of Thursday's meeting of Student Legislature in an attempt to halt action on a motion to change the spring election date from Mar. 24 to April 21.

The motion, by Student Party Floor Leader Phil Baddour, received quick support from SP legislators, who held an easy majority in the body.

Motions for limiting debate on the subject halted plans for a possible UP filibuster.

UP Floor Leader Don Carson spoke against rescinding the date, condemning the SP's "inexcusable parlimentary manuvers."

Citing the fact that within the past 10 years no election has been held later than April 7, Carson charged, "This is the greatest plot to keep a political party in power since the days of Thaddeus Stephens."

When it became evident that the motion would pass, UP legislators gathered their belongings and walked out of the chamber. SP officials then hurried to assist the sergeant-at-arms in locking the chamber, amid the cries of UP coed legislators being hurried through the doors.

The remaining legislators and visitors had to wait for nearly 45 minutes as SP officials went to find one of their absent members in order to meet a quorum.

When the quorum was achieved, the remaining UP legislators in the building returned to the chamber and Baddour's original motion was at last carried by the body, 23-13.

On another issue Carson expressed "deep concern at the stunning loss of Attorney General Buzzy Stubbs."

In a statement of the views of many in his party, Carson said, "It is with a great deal of apprehension and grave reservation that we capitulate to this change in the Student Judiciary."

Carson also called for the speaker of Student Legislature to write a letter of commendation to Stubbs citing "his long and unselfish devotion to the broadest interest of students and justice."

Carson's motion passed unanimously.

Campus Chest Announces Schedule For $$$ Drive

Co-chairmen of the Campus Chest, Betty Ward and Richard Barrett, have announced the schedule for its annual drive. The drive this year will run from March 2 through March 6 and from March 17 through March 21.

The campaign will consist of three major phases. First an auction will be held on March 17 in Gerrard Hall. Co-chairmen Louise Menefee and Mike Doctor have announced that Kemp Battle Nye and possibly Andy Griffith, star of stage and screen, will be the auctioneers Vickie Smith, Patsy Leffler, Archie Davis and Gerry Good are in charge of the second phase. They hope to improve the response of the Carolina students to solicitations.

The third phase is the Campus Chest Carnival which will be held on the intramural field March 20 and 21. Co-chairmen Nannie Hussey and Jim Light said they are counting on the wholehearted support of the IFC (during their Greek Week program), the MRC and all other campus organizations to make the carnival enjoyable for all.

Such charities as the American Friends Service Committee, the World Clothing Fund, the Murdoch School at Butner and the O'Berry Center in Goldsboro will benefit from this year's Campus Chest.

The Campus Chest is the only charity drive permitted on the campus. The chairmen said they wished to stress that college should make the student realize that he will be approached in his community by health drives, Community Chest and his respective church organization for help.

Faculty, Aldermen To Get Boycott Bill

Student body president Mike Lawler announced yesterday that a copy of the Student Legislature's resolution suggesting boycott of segregated establishments will be sent to each discriminatory business in Chapel Hill, as well as to the Board of Aldermen and prominent citizens and faculty members.

The resolution submits that the present forms of civil rights demonstrations are not rational or successful in obtaining equal rights for all citizens of this university.

The resolution further urges the entire student body to refrain from patronizing the following establishments which continue to refuse equal service because of race:

Allen's Amoco Service Station and Grill, Brady's Restaurant, Carolina Barber Shop, Carolina Beauty Shop, Carolina Grill, Chapel Hill Barber Shop, Clarence's Bar and Grill, Colonial Drug Store, Frozen Custard, Leo's Restaurant, Merritt's Esso Service Station, North Carolina Memorial Hospital, Patio Dine and Dance, Pines Restaurant, The Rock Pile, The Shack, The Sport Center, Tar Heel Barber Shop, Tar Heel Motel, Tar Heel Sandwich Shop, University Barber Shop, University Motel, Watt's Restaurant, Professional Barber Shop, and Glen Lennox Barber Shop.

YDC Meets Next Weekend In Raleigh's Sir Walter

Featured speakers will include National Young Democratic President Al House of Roanoke Rapids, the first North Carolinian ever to head the national organization, and assistant Postmaster General Richard Murphy, a graduate of UNC and a former president of the National Student Association.

A special feature of the program includes the appearance of Tar Heel gubernatorial candidates Beverly Lake, Dan K. Moore and Richardson Preyer on Saturday morning. Each will address the gathering and answer questions.

Also to be considered at the rally are several resolutions pertaining to the Civil Rights bill now before the Congress and a plan to realign voting within the structure of the Federation.

Registration fee for the rally is $3.00 which will end at noon Saturday. It will begin at 7:30 p.m. Friday with registration opening at 5:00 p.m.

A Dispassionate View Of Our Leaders

Well, what little uncertainty there was has finally been cleared up. A majority of the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen is just plain stupid.

This is significant information if only because it shows that reason will not reach them, and therefore any further efforts in the direction of reason are fruitless.

How do we know a majority of the Aldermen are stupid? Because they not only passed a new picketing regulation whose constitutionality is dubious at best, they didn't even consider whether it might be unconstitutional.

Not until after the regulation was passed and applied in one instance was it found that it hadn't officially been passed, so it was unenforceable. And not until then did a town official decide that it might, after all, be a good idea to at least check with the state Attorney General's office as to the possible unconstitutionality of the thing.

And now—or, at least, as of Thursday—an even larger majority of the Aldermen indicate they are prepared to repass the regulation.

To be sure, this majority is acting on good motives.

We are not accusing them of deviousness—or assuming they have the presence of mind, foresight and basic intelligence which deviousness requires.

Motives are not at issue. Plain horsesense is. For you do not run a government, or solve a racial crisis, because your motives are good. You do these things because you are able to see further than the end of your nose and think rationally—which a majority of the Aldermen seem unable to do.

By the same token you do not take away a man's constitutional right to picket because your police force is overworked and underpaid—which is not so new for Chapel Hill anyway—or because you fear some hoodlum may attack a picketer.

Instead you protect both the picketer and his right to picket.

Limiting picketing to 7 a.m.-7 p.m., or 7 a.m.-9 p.m., or any other times, is not "just another restriction on picketing" as a majority of our Aldermen think. It is an abridgement of a constitutional right. The Aldermen, however, are unaware of the subtle difference between these two things, just as they are unaware of so much else.

If the police force is being stretched too thin, then something must be done to help the situation, for violence cannot be tolerated. But the answer is not to curtail a constitutional right. That simply is not one of the Aldermen's alternatives. We trust our esteemed state Attorney General's office will point this out to the Aldermen, although we have some doubts on that score too.

Many people are hoping that a majority of the Aldermen do pass the picketing regulation again when they next meet. They need a monument to their stupidity and short-sightedness.

Perhaps such a monument would bring enough shame and disgrace to Chapel Hill to make a majority of its elected leaders do what only two of them have done so far: Lead.

The US Senate And Student Legislature

We noticed that the U.S. Senate held a 2½ second session the other day with only two members present. The session was only ½ second shy of the record set last Dec. 27.

The Senate is taking a short breather to allow all the Republicans to make Lincoln Day speeches across the country, but under the Constitution it must meet every three days in at least a token session. Senator Lee Metcalf, (D-Mont.) presided and Sen. Frank Carlson, (R-Kan.) was present.

Obviously they didn't accomplish too much, but it does make one wonder why our own student legislature takes 2½ hours to accomplish the same amount.

Yes, Mr. Editor, It Would Be Indeed

John Kennedy has been dead now less than three months. And in that so-short period, the John Birch Society has come up with what the Birch founder has described as "superb commentary" on Kennedy's presidency.

What did the Birchers come up with in that "superb commentary?" According to the Associated Press, some of the findings were:

That as long as there are Americans, President Kennedy's "memory will be cherished with distaste."

That President Kennedy "procured his election by peddling boob-bait to the suckers."

That Kennedy supported the Central Intelligence Agency in a "fake invasion of Cuba designed to strengthen our moral enemies there."

That Kennedy collaborated with Soviet Premier Khrushchev in a "phony embargo" to provide a cover for transfer of Soviet troops and weapons to Cuba to use against the United States.

That Kennedy arranged to subvert and sabotage this nation's defenses.

That Kennedy did much for the "Communist conspiracy," but was falling behind a scheduled date for the "effective capture of the United States" in 1963 and was "rapidly becoming a political liability."

The article also had this to say:

"And if the international vermin succeed in completing their occupation of our country, Americans will remember Kennedy while they live, and will curse him as they face the fire squads or toil in a brutish degradation that leaves no hope for anything but a speedy death."

It is fine to have this slander from the Birch Society. For, this should once again put the Society in the light in which it must be viewed by any citizen with any common-sense, with any sort of perspective. It should be remembered that some other Birch propaganda has labelled former President Eisenhower as being connected with the Communist underground.

There are some John Birchers in North Carolina. It would be interesting to know what they think of this "superb commentary" on President Kennedy. In fact, it would be interesting to know what they think of the prior labeling of former President Eisenhower.

In fact, it would be interesting to know if they think.

Letters To The Editors

The Mailman Cometh

Mistake!

Editors, the Tar Heel:

In the months that you gentlemen have been co-editors the DTH has made many mistakes but most of these are excusable because of an overwoked and undermanned staff.

But now you have made such a grevious mistake that it can hardly be overlooked. I refer to your editorial of February 13, "The Council Holds a Bear by the Tail."

In that editorial you heap praise upon the Men's Honor Council accepting the sit-in cases for trial.

By this time, you should, but apparently don't, know that the Honor Council had absolutely nothing to do with the decision to try these students. Ideally, the Council should not know what cases are to be brought before them until the cases are introduced into their chamber.

The decision to try any case rests upon the Attorney-General. It is he, and only he, who decides what shall be presented to the Council.

In this case, the decision was made by Buzzy Stubbs, just as he made all decisions in the past. But because of the importance of the case our beloved president, Henry Lawler, decided to ursurp Mr. Stubb's power and make the decision himself.

In the past, the judicial and executive branches had been separate, but Lawler's desire for organization led him to believe that the two could function better if he controlled the Attorney-General.

Stubbs, however, refused to be a puppet and resisted Lawler's efforts. He felt that he could do a better job if he worked independently as he had done in the past. After all, he has held the position of Attorney-General for two years, and Lawler has only been President one.

Stubbs then is responsible for the decision which will bring the sit-in cases before the Council.

Furthermore, the plan of action which Stubbs originally adopted for the disposal of the case was disregarded by Lawler who decided that the matter should be settled by a series of discussions between himself; his number one puppet, Phil Baddour; Bob Spearman; the assistant Attorney-General, Tim Oliver; and Stubbs. After two days of discussions, Lawler proposed the SAME PLAN OF ACTION WHICH STUBBS HAD ORIGINALLY MAPPED OUT.

Thus, gentlemen, it is Stubbs who deserves your praise, for despite the efforts of President Lawler, it is he, and not the Council, who made the momentous decision to charge the demonstrators with violations of the Campus Code.

Sincerely,
Laszlo Berinyi, Jr.

'Libertas'

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Your President of the Student Body has demonstrated that the University speaks all too seldom with one voice on matters which vitally concern it. "Lux et Libertas" means very little unless it means that those who teach and those who learn will be led to implement in the life of any community of which they find themselves a part the values shaped and shared here, the insights gained. Faculty no less than students are a part of the community we call Chapel Hill. All of us accordingly are, or should be, concerned that denial of service to our members by those pursuing a public calling shall not be to any extent based upon race, color or creed.

Discrimination on the basis of race exists now with respect to students. It cannot be too far in the future when we shall have Negro faculty members. Faculty concern may then have more urgency about it but no greater jutification. Ours is already a common cause. Hopefully other voices will soon be heard perhaps from the faculty as a whole or parts of it as to what responsibility we would take for seeing that this ideal becomes a reality here. Until that time comes, however, I am pleased to take my stand with the responsible student leadership which has provided a reasonable alternative to other more active forms of protest.

Error

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I wish to call attention to an error in your article of the eleventh of February on the resolution of the Newman Club concerning civil rights. Although it was I who proposed the resolution, Alain de Fountenay is the head of the committee.

Gas!

Editors, the Tar Heel:

Concerning Mr. Lawler's statement of Friday, February 7, I would like to say that I agree wholeheartedly with his program of discrimination against "white only" discriminating businesses. I would like to further my agreement with the "discrimination against discrimination" resolution suggested by Mr. Lawler and passed by our student legislature by saying that "two wrongs will come out right" I think.

And furthermore, at the risk of starting a gas war in Chapel Hill, I would like to suggest that Mike Lawler, the Student Legislature, and Rev. Cox all meet in Y-court on Easter Day and burn each other to ashes if the Town of Chapel Hill doesn't immediately act on this resolution.

Whereas . . .

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Whereas, We believe that the teaching of our Lord is that all men are brothers: a teaching which permits no discrimination because of race, color, or national origin; and

Whereas, The discrimination against a person solely upon the basis of his race is both unfair and unchristian; and

Whereas, This belief is incorporated in the body of The Discipline of the Methodist Church (Paragraph 2026); therefore,

RESOLVED, That we are in complete agreement with the boycott of those business establishments in Chapel Hill, North Carolina practicing discrimination in any form on the basis of race, color, or national origin and we pledge our regular and continuing support to any establishments that will open its doors to all customers.

RESOLVED, That both as an organization and as individuals, we will cease all association with those business establishments and we urge all students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and all residents of the City of Chapel Hill to cease association with those establishments in the sincere hope that such action shall lend itself to the speedy elimination of the deplorable state of human relations in this community and that we in Chapel Hill may in some way contribute to the eventual establishment of the reign of Justice in the world.

Petition

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The anti-boycott petition seems to be well-intended, and most of its signers are probably conscientious in their objection to Student Body President Lawler's proposal. However, the petition contains a potentially misleading sentence which needs clarification. The owners of the local segregated businesses do (at least at present) have the legal right to serve whomever they choose; although my own mind is not made up on this question, I tend to favor this right. But those who choose to boycott—again including myself — are simply exercising their equally legal right to do business with whomever they choose; this violates none of the legal rights of the owners of the businesses involved and is not "unfair punishment" of anybody. I'd personally like to see the remaining "holdouts," although still possessing the legal right to segregate, choose not to do so— if not because of pressure from their own consciences, then because they find too many townspeople and students prefer not to do business with them on such terms.

Let those who do prefer to do business with them on such terms sign the petition. Let them not sign merely out of spite for the Legislature or for Lawler, nor out of any mistaken ideas of violated legal rights. The issue then will be clear enough, and the amount of support gained by the petition will serve as an indication of whether Lawler's views on the boycott are actually those of a majority of Carolina students.

Legislators?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The other night I had the dubious distinction of attending that great august body, the student legislature of the University of North Carolina. Never, but never, in my brief career as a student here have I been so enlightened. Allow me to elucidate.

Borden Parker read to the legislature a petition consisting of some 1,500 signatures, which had been collected in only two days. This petition demonstrated that a sizable number of students (probably the vast majority had there been more time to gather signatures) had no intention of supporting any boycott and that these students considered Mike Lawler's opinions quite contrary to their own. Yet those attending this session were informed by several learned legislators that the views of their constituents were secondary to those of the legislators. Only two legislators, Messrs. Parker and Cramner, had bothered to consult the students, in their respective legislative districts, concerning their opinions on the resolution to be considered Furthermore, several legislators stated that they supported the bill—pardon me, "resolution," except for the third article, in which it is urged that the students boycott segregated businesses; however, their statements did little to amend their total disregard for their constituents.

If their intention was to do anything to solve the unrest, created by irresponsible demonstrators in Chapel Hill, and to encourage the desegregation of those few-still-segregated businesses, why could not the legislators not have passed a bill or a resolution or something that had at least a prayer of being effective.

'Quick, Henry, The SWAT...'

It's beginning to look as though our future history books will have to include three dates for British invasions of the U. S. —1775, 1812, and 1964.

They may also record the fact that we managed to beat back the Redcoats the first couple of times, but I'm beginning to wonder about the current war. It may well be that four Beatles will manage to defeat an entire nation of 180 million souls.

It's not just that they have managed to establish an effective beachhead in our larger cities—they're everywhere! Around the clock and from every direction they bombard our civilization with a sound similar to that of a truck load of hogs colliding with about 3,000 empty beer cans.

To hear them, just flip on your radio and wait five minutes. (Though you don't actually hear them, you sort of endure them.) And if, Heaven forbid, you want to see them, pick up any national magazine or good-sized newspaper. Either of these without a picture of the four mop-heads simply hasn't been watching its wirephoto machine.

They are also getting plenty of exposure from dozens of columnists who have nothing better to do than sit around and write about these cats.

They've been here only a few days, but from the moment of their arrival everything else has taken a back seat. ("I saw them land at the airport," Bob Hope cracked. "They were 40 pounds overweight, and that was just the hair.")

They have given ulcers to New York policemen, who had to delay their train from Washington for 15 minutes the other day because they were afraid the kids would be crushed in the stampede. The fuzz finally got them safely out of the station by using the same secret method usually reserved for Presidents. That's moving pretty fast, folks —one week and already getting top treatment. Maybe it's a good thing all those teenagers can't vote.

They packed Carnegie Hall Wednesday night to the point that squealing youngsters were sitting on the stage. They're setting new styles in haircuts (or rather, a lack of same), dress (no lapels and excrutiatingly tight trousers) and music (marked by the constant beat-beat-beat from which they get their name). Nobody ever had a record to reach the number one spot faster, or an album sell so fast. In short, they are taking over the country by storm—especially everyone under the age of 16.

There doesn't seem to be any middle ground on these guys—you love 'em or you can't stand them. On campus, the sentiment seems to be well divided, even though the vast majority of Carolina gentlemen and ladies were camped in front of the tube Sunday night with the rest of the nation. Undoubtedly, some tuned in just to see if the Beatles were really as bad as they suspected. Their suspicions, it appeared, were confirmed.

There is strong evidence to show that there are more than a few Americans who aren't going to buy an "I'm a Beatle Booster" button. In New York, the group was picked by members of a student organization called SWAT — Students' War Against Trash.

The SWAT members called the Beatles a "musical disgrace," and said "they have a deleterious effect on young minds." I hardly feel qualified to say much on that point, but I dare say they must have a deleterious effect on something.

Perhaps the local chapter of SWAT will soon take its place along-side our other local initial organizations. It might be welcomed.

At any rate, Ed Sullivan has promised us that those Dustmops are not going to be with us too much longer—soon they will be going back to England. Don't think for a minute, though, that the invasion is over. They're simply going to work on a few more weapons, or rather, records for a return battle. Reliable sources have it that their next visit will even bring them to this area for a riot, or concert, or whatever they call their performances.

Perhaps this short retreat will enable the American public to regroup its forces, and we will eventually survive this foreign menace. England, however, having to live with the Beatles permanently, may not be so fortunate. Again, I am reminded of one of Hope's quips:

"Until I heard them I really believed there would always be an England. Now I'll give you odds."

Prayer Day Is Sunday

At the service a special offering will be taken for the WSCF, which has been a leader in the ecumenical student movement.

Rev. McCloud is pastor of the Davie Street United Presbyterian Church in Raleigh.

Also participating in the service will be the Gleemen, a chorus of male students under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter.

Stage Half-day Walkout

75 Leave Lincoln High

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Some 75 Negro students staged a mid-day walk out yesterday at Lincoln High School here. They marched through the downtown area, singing and clapping, and did not return to classes.

A spokseman for the students listed several grievances as reasons behind the walkout. Among them were charges against Chapel Hill School Superintendent Howard Thompson that Thompson —had threatened Lincoln High students with direct expulsion if they held freedom rallies during lunch time or at sports events;

—charges that Chapel Hill and Lincoln High Schools had not consolidated.

—charges that the school system was co-operating with a town that was permitting racial segregation.

Thompson answered each of the charges individually. He said he would not permit so-called freedom rallies during school-sponsored activities.

"I told them a basketball game was no place to hold a rally. I said if they did, that I would cut out the games entirely.

"We are set up for educational purposes, and not for promotion of outside agencies." Thompson said.

Answering the second charge, Thompson said consolidation can't be accomplished "just like that."

"Before CORE even appeared on the sciene, I advocated one consolidated comprehensive high school. This was to take place if the old building were sold at an auction Feb. 18, and if we could move into a new building constructed for such a comprehensive program. It's absolutely absurd to say you could consolidate within the next three months. Where would you put the students?" Thompson asked.

Chapel Hill is the only town which allows students to attend any local high school they wish. Although several Negroes attend Chapel Hill High School, no whites attend Lincoln High.

Thompson also said the local School System is operated by the County Board of Commissioners and not the Board of Aldermen, "who have nothing to do with us.

"The Chapel Hill school district does not have the same limits as the town. A good many of our students come from outside corporate limits, but are still within the limits of the Chapel Hill School district."

The 75 students (Lincoln High has an enrollment of 331) who were to attend classes today to make up for lost time said they wouldn't return. Instead they plan to study civics and Negro history at the local CORE headquarters.

A spokseman, James Brittian, a senior at Lincoln High, said the 75 probably wouldn't return to school Monday. Brittian said he expected other students to either walk-out of classes today or not attend at all.

The students left the school Friday during their lunch break. Five integration leaders, including two whites, went to the school "in an advisory capacity."

One of these, Pat Cusick, a member of the local CORE chapter, was confronted at the school by Superintendent Thompson who told him to leave.

"Mr. Cusick asked what would happen if he didn't leave," Thomp- said. "At the time, I didn't know, and told him I didn't."

Since then, Thompson has talked by phone with State Attorney General Ralph Moody. Moody indicated that Cusick had broken a law by "wilfully interrupting or disturbing a public or private school . . ."

Thompson said he had not decided whether to swear out a warrant against Cusick.

Thompson further indicated that students would be expelled if they continued walking away from the school grounds.

"I don't feel it's my job to punish the youngsters," Thompson said. "My business is educating them to take their place in life. But, if it comes down to saving those who want to be educated, then due process will eliminate those who have no concern in education."

One Lincoln High student, Henry Sanford, a senior was expelled by Thompson yesterday. Sanford didn't attend classes yesterday morning, but showed up at the noon gathering at the school, Thompson said.

ner Hall for announcements of these interviews.

Favorite summer jobs among students are positions as camp counselors and staff members at summer resorts. Leads are available for these types of work and in the next few months several camp directors will visit the campus for personal interviews.

Other opportunities are in the sciences, mathematics, business administration, and social work. Several government agencies are also looking for summer employees.

The benefits of summer employment are threefold. While the opportunity to earn money for college expenses is probably the main reason most students want to work, previous work experience is advantageous when applying for permanent jobs after graduation.

The chance to try out different types of work through summer jobs also enables the individual to choose more realistically the career he wants to follow.

6th District GOP In Power Struggle

Opposing Guilford Republican Party factions took another step in their struggle to win support in the sixth district last night.

Before a Chapel Hill meeting of Orange County delegates, each vied for support that could enable them to gain control of Republican politics in Guilford.

Last January, a dispute over precinct elections and a further disagreement over a state arbitration board ruling split the party.

Each faction held its own county convention and electde its leaders.

Not being able to decide which group had the legal right to control, both agreed to let other six the district members to choose between them at the district convention.

The convention will be held today in Greensboro and delegates from Orange, Alamance and Durham counties will choose Guilford's Republican leaders.

At the Orange County meeting it was evident that the party dispute was not over precinct elections, but was "a pure and simple power struggle."

With the exception of opposing views on where precinct meetings should be held, there didn't seem to be any clear cut issues.

Neither side wished to be branded as either liberal or conservative and each promised to support whoever the convention chose.

Both factions agreed that this "struggle" was good for the party. They felt it would help get Guilford's 10,000 registered Republicans interested.

The body was also read a letter from Student Body President Mike Lawler which announced the appointment of Whitney Durand as attorney general. Lawler also announced the appointment of himself to the Chapel Hill racial mediation committee.

The Gleemen Need Basses

Carolina's newest singing group, the Gleemen, is seeking more singers, especially basses.

According to Jim Fletcher, club president, tryouts are now being held, with a membership goal of 50 or more. The basses are needed to achieve a satisfactory balance of parts.

The club, now numbering about 40, will make its first appearance of the spring term at the Interdenominational Student day of Prayer services Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Presbyterian Church. They will sing "Hallelujah, Amen" by Handel.

On February 25 the Gleemen will join the Varsity Glee Club in a performance of "The Testament of Freedom" in Hill Music Hall. Their plans for the spring include a part in an Intercollegiate Music Festival in Greensboro and a proposed joint concert on the campus of the Woman's College in Greensboro.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

CHARLOTTE—You took one look at Ray Bennett, a 6-8 NYU center, in Madison Square Garden Wednesday night, and you almost had a heart attack. I mean a little makeup the guy could play stunt man for Frankenstein.

He didn't look like he wanted to shoot the ball. He wanted to eat it. If I was up against him, I'd forget about passing—anywhere but out. He came loping out to lead the team's layup drill, and I thought they'd brought in the Cro-Magnons to play the visitors. Man, it looked like The Flintstones. Or Wolfman Meets the Ghouls.

I just didn't want to play that guy. He looked like he just got out on parole. Or escaped from the electric chair—AFTER they turned it on. I was so scared I fell down twice trying to run out of the place after I saw him.

Bela Lugosi would have been proud of this guy. He outscowled the hungriest of man-eating lions the first time he missed a free throw. And Sonny Liston hasn't seen anything as ugly since he looked in a mirror.

Even the balls were frightened. I think they deliberately stayed out of the net on his foul shots, terrified he might pick one of them back up. If I was the basketball, I'd deflate myself and go hide under a bench before I'd let him touch me.

He jumped up one time in the pre-game warmups, and Lou Rossini had to call him to come down for the start of play. He doesn't shoot up at the basket, he shoots down to it. I've seen bowlers get more loft on the ball. I think crowds come to NYU games not so much to see basketball as to see if the other guys will show up. If I'd known what NYU looked like, I wouldn't have.

I was ure they'd get Frank Buck to ref. Or Clyde Beatty. Next time I go to New York, I'm taking in a Werewolf movie. This Bennett is too much. The shock will prepare me.

But this is not a story of the big, mean Violets. Nor of the game. *It is about the dogs—who preceded the basketball players into Madison Square Garden (on Tuesday night) and also into the midtown Manhattan Hotel.

They were there courtesy of, and yipping and yapping at, the Westminster Kennel Club which staged its finals at the Garden. Best in Show went to Ch. Courtenay Fleetfoot of Pennyworth, a fawn and white whippet, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Newcombe of Newington, N. H.

The dog was called "Rickey-Tickey-Tat" (Ricky, for short) and beat out the favorite—a boxer who had won last year. My vote went to Bennett.

It seemed most of the dogs were staying at the Manhattan. But maybe the barking was coming from tipless bellhops. One wealthy matron was dragged through the lobby by three giant red setters. Art Katz accidentally brushed one of them Wednesday morning. The dog didn't mind, but I thought the owner was going to belt Katz.

Chicks In Violet Got The Raves

*It is about two Western New York ball clubs, Niagara and Canisius, which, despite it being Ash Wedneday, managed to lose. Canisius dressed in a downtown hotel and walked to St. John's Alumni Gym in its warmup uniforms. The Griffins stayed cold, too. They lost by three to the Redmen, who are now without ex-UNC Billy Lawrence for the second semester.

Niagara played the first half of the Garden doubleheader and also met an ex-Carolina boy. Marty Conlon scored 15 as Iona won, 81-64.

*It is about Bill Aycock who went to take the game movies for Mike Ronman, only to have the film or projector mechanism break down three minutes into the first half. If you don't think that was disappointing, you should have seen the stairs we had to climb to get to where he was going to shoot.

Ronman should have sent a mountain goat. I think the guy was five miles up. He dropped a cup before the first game and it hit the floor at the end of the national anthem. I don't really know if it was that high, but they kept taking Aycock oxygen every ten minutes. And when he came down at the end he looked like he had taken a moonshot. Or was on Heroin.

*It is about the chicks in the clinging violet corduroy who came running into the arena with saddle shoes and "NYU" drilled across their top decks. Six other cheerleaders ran out with Beatle wigs, but the four guys who jammed out of the balcony weren't looking at anybody but those babes in purple. They put up a good front.

*It is about the fantastic response of the 11,138 crowd whose cheers for the home club turned into genuine boos when Billy Cunningham started to go to work and then fouled out with over 11 minutes to go.

There were numerous UNC alumni and friends there, Frank McGuire, Jim Donahue and York Larese to name a few, and they contributed to the applause. But it was more enhanced by the large student sections of Niagara and Iona who started sending up cheers of "Go, Go, N. C.," etc. to combat the NYU yells.

*It is about this brunette dish with the endowments not very well concealed in tight, tight green who walked in front of the Iona section between games and got the biggest roar of the night. She deserved it, too. If she wasn't poured into that thing, she was born in it.

The Papers And Billy The Kid

*And it is about Billy Cunningham. The amazing Billy Cunningham, an All-America who had to go home to prove it. Four guys were put on The Kid to try and stop him. They didn't, he did. Billy's driving tactics necessitate the excessive contact underneath, and they will always bring fouls—both offensive and defensive.

His elimination on charges was as legitimate as his All-America candidacy. He scissored into the key once and went up with three guys all over him—6-8 Clem Galliard, 6-7 Happy Hairston and 6-4 Barry Kramer. The ball went in, and Billy went to the line. Hairston just shook his head in disbelief. He also ran over to shake Billy's hand when Cunningham fouled out—Happy kept smiling.

So did the New York sportswriters. They were impressed, a little bit before the game, much more after it.

The Post's pre-game story headlined "Will 3-Of-A-Kind Top Tar Heel Ace?" and Gene Roswell said "Cunningham . . . has thrown NYU's defensive planners into such a tizzy . . . he may wind up with three men guarding him."

The World Telegram and Sun ran a picture of him and said "NYU May Need A Posse To Stop Billy The Kid" with Phil Pete writing "Billy The Kid invades town . . . riding shotgun and reputation as the fastest gun in the South." And Dave Eisenberg of the Journal American headlined "All-America Cagers On Garden Card."

Afterwards, it was even better. Sam Goldaper in the Herald Tribune: "The signal for North Carolina's comeback was when its exciting mainstay Billy Cunningham, former Erasmus Hall All-Scholastic, fouled out.

Roswell in the Post: "Barry and Billy form a neat Mutual Admiration Society. Kramer thinks Cunningham is the best he's faced all year, better even than Michigan's Cazzie Russell. If anything, Cunningham was the more spectacular. He leaps well over the rim, is aggressive, knowledgeable, tricky and can shoot. He did a fine job on Hairston underneath. Rossini said, 'He's got Barry's moves. But he's a leaner and he does make contact on the shot.'"

Eisenberg in the Journal American, under "N. Carolina's Cunningham Gets Pros' OK": "This is the time to talk about a loser, Billy Cunningham, specifically. Rossini said, 'This is the best basketball player we've faced this season.' Eddie Donovan, Knicks coach, flew in from St. Louis to watch Kramer—as did Earl Lloyd, the Detroit scout. Both stayed to rave about Cunningham. Clair Bee, former LIU coach, said, 'Cunningham would be my number one pick for the pros right now.'"

Pepe in the Telegram and Sun: ". . . but they were joined by others in disappointment and sympathy for Billy Cunningham, the Carolina star.

"Still, they'll be talking about this one for a long time and wondering if NYU would have won against 40 minutes of Cunningham, clearly the dominant factor in the game. He was the heart of the team and its soul, too. He scored more points (23) in 28 minutes than anyone else scored in 40, and he grabbed one rebound less than Hairston (12-11), who didn't miss a minute."

Clearly, the hometown boy impressed the hometown.

Lewis Show Tops Ratings By 109-67

The Bobby Lewis show, now in its tenth week of a successful Woollen Gym stand got rave notices again Thursday night from "Big Bad John" Naponick and his Virginia freshman basketball teammates.

Lewis, UNC's outstanding yearling who is averaging 38 points a game, scored 27 and grabbed 15 rebounds in his team's 109-67 victory over Virginia. It was the Tar Babies' 11th win in 13 games.

Naponick, the Baby Cavs' heralded giant (6-10, 290) got 16 points and 19 rebounds, but he and the visiting club were a large disappointment to those who anticipated a struggle.

Ian Morrison, the fine outside shooter from St. Petersburg, Fla., hit his season high of 26 Thursday while Donnie Moe and Tom Gauntlett had 13 apiece. The Tar Babies shot 57.6 from the floor for the game and 62.5 during the first half.

Virginia got a second 16-point performance from Gene Meek and Steve Wafle had 10 rebounds for the visitors.

UNC's next frosh game will be next Saturday night against the N. C. State Wolflets in Raleigh's Reynolds Coliseum. It will be the preliminary to the varsity clash and the rubber match between the two rivals.

Grapplers Battle Blue Devils In Woollen Tonight

The traditional victory bell won't be present tonight, but if UNC's wrestlers can defeat Duke, there will still be sounds of great joy in Woollen Gym. Sam Barnes' grapplers are expected to make a valiant attempt to knock off the heavily favored Blue Devils and thereby salvage the remnants of what has been a mediocre season so far.

The featured bout of the night will be between undefeated (though thrice drawn) Jerry Cabe and Luke Sharp (6-7, 255 pounds), who has never been beaten in high school or at Duke.

"When Jerry gets on the other side of that," Barnes said, "you won't be able to see him." Cabe will stand in at 5-10, 195 pounds.

Carolina's other unbeaten star, at the other end of the size chart, is Paul Wellstone (123).

Barnes is also expecting top performances from such men as Dick Blackmon (157), Elliot Dworing (167), and footballer Steve Lister (177).

The Freshman match will start at 7 and the varsity will begin immediately after it.

'Big Five' Runners Collide Here Today

By BILL LEE

Carolina's indoor trackmen play host at 1:30 today to the fifth annual "Big Five" Indoor Championship. The tin can will be the scene for both freshmen and varsity.

The Tar Heels are the defending champions of the meet, but are faced with a stiff challenge from Duke, Davidson, Wake Forest, and N. C. State.

Coach Joe Hilton expresses little optimism on the chances for his team's defense of the title.

"We're in pretty sorry shape. Folk's leg is in bad shape, Jackson's sore, and Maillett's knee is sore." All three were first place winners in last week's meet against State.

Sam Cromartie, half-miler who nearly pulled a leg muscle two weeks ago, is still out of action. However, taking up the slack will be the usual Tar Heel stalwarts, Dale White, Milt Baugess, Al Dobritch, Bob Bennett, and David Peltz, in the running events.

Leading the field events are Bill Graham in the shot-put, Bill Busby in the pole-vault, Harvey Whitley in the broad jump, and Tommy Clark in the high jump.

Duke will probably present the stiffest competition for the title. Leading the Blue Devils are Bob Kennon and Bob Fogle as sprint and hurdle men. Rod Stuart and Earl Yates are shot-putters, and Steve Barnes is in the high-jump.

Nick Grey is their half-miler, while Waite and Weisiger run the mile ,and Randy Respass competes in the two-mile.

Wake Forest brings over Art Taylor in the sprints, Bud Turner in the mile, Jack Rainwater in the pole-vault and high jump, and Ray Neary in the hurdles.

N. C. State, who received a sound 88-16 whipping by Carolina a week ago, boast Mel Woodcock in the mile and Hugh Cox in the pole-vault. Nothing is known about the Davidson team.

The freshmen carry a 2-0 record into the meet, with victories so far coming over conference foes Wake Forest and State.

The frosh will be led by Johnny Johnson and Bob McLean who accounted for 3 firsts, 3 seconds, and a third against State.

Other first place winners over the Pack were Bob Ancarrow, broad jump; Bo Wood, shot-put; John Levin, 60-yard dash; Trip McPherson, mile; Bill Gernon, 440; Eddie Daw, 880,

Ian Morrison . . . Hits Season High

Top End Signs

UNC has signed one of Virginia's top high school ends to a grant in aid.

The player, Charles Carr of Princess Anne in Virginia Beach, has been an all-state end for three seasons. Tar Heel Coach Jim Hickey went to Virginia Beach to sign the boy.

"Charlie is the top lineman on our recruiting list," said Hickey.

The 6-4, 195-pound Carr caught 31 touchdown passes and kicked 66 extra points in three seasons at Princess Anne.

WF Tries To Sign Top Negro Players

Wake Forest is actively recruiting two Negro football players, the Greensboro Daily News reported Friday. They are the first North Carolina Negro schoolboys to be offered a full athletic grant at a Big Four institution.

Last year, Wake Forest sought Benny Blocker from South Carolina, but Blocker went to Ohio State.

The two players, from Greensboro's Dudley High School, are star end Charles Sanders and star quarterback Kenneth Henry. Coach Bill Furcron of Dudley said that both have been offered full four-year scholarships but "have not yet made any decision on whether they will accept" the grants-in-aid.

It is not known whether any of the other Big Four schools will follow Wake's lead. UNC Director of Athletics Chuck Erickson was out of town and unavailable for comment.

The one difficulty, as far as Wake is concerned, is that the University of Minnesota, which recruited Dudley basketball star Louis Hudson two years ago, is also seeking Sanders. He is scheduled to visit the Minnesota campus later this month. The Gophers are also said to be interested in Henry.

New Wake Head Coach Bill Tate, according to Furcron, personally offered the scholarships this week after speaking with the athletes and their parents. Both are said to be good students.

Sanders, a 6-4, 195 pound pass-receiving star, is considered one of the best football players ever to come out of Dudley. Henry, 6-2 and 185 pounds, is also considered an all-time school great. Both start for an outstanding Panther basketball team, but there has been no mention of this sport in connection with Wake.

Six-Day Moratorium

Integration Heads Call Civil Disobedience Halt

By JEFFREY DICK

Local integration leaders yesterday called a six-day moratorium on their civil disobedience tactics, but said "visitations" to segregated businesses would continue.

The announcement came at the end of a two week period of stepped up racial demonstrations which resulted in a massive number of arrests and the focusing of national attention on Chapel Hill.

Spokesmen said the action was being taken so that "immediate action might be initiated by the town administration to eliminate the problem of racial discrimination in Chapel Hill."

John Dunne, charman of the Chapel Hll Freedom Committee, declined to specifiy what action the town should take.

"It is the responsibility of the town to initiate actions leading to concrete steps toward a solution, and we don't intend to give the town a blueprint on how to do it.

Speaking at a press conference at the Committee office in Chapel Hill, Dunne said that all demonstrations where arrests were anticipated would be halted until at least next Friday.

In a short statement, Dunne said: "In January, the Chapel Hill Freedom Committe announced it would consider the cessation of all civil disobedience pending evidence of good faith on the part of the town of Chapel Hill. Since that time, we have seen no evidence of good faith in the part of the city."

"However," he added, "we are willing to take one further step hoping this will encourage the city to act."

It was at this point that Dunne said the Freedom Committee would end all demonstrations

Edge Found Not Guilty In Law's Mock Trial

By KERRY SIPE

Star quarterback Junior Edge was found not guilty Friday night of the attempted rape of a Carolina Co-ed in the annual Pi Alpha Delta law fraternity's Mock Trial.

Phyllis White, 20, of Greensboro, had identified Edge as the man who assaulted her on a path of the Coker Arboretum last Wednesday, tearing her coat and blouse and throwing her to the ground.

A jury of four women and eight men returned the verdict after an hour's deliberation. Presiding Judge Robert Gambill of Wilkes County declared the football player entirely acquitted of the charge against him.

A highlight of the three hour trial was the emotional testimony of Miss White. She testified that she had dated Edge several times in 1962 while she was a student at Woman's College in Greensboro and that she had terminated the relationship after Edge had made a "passionate attack" upon her in the front seat of his parked car.

Edge had called her home three times since she had come to Chapel Hill and insisted on seeing her even though she told him that she was engaged to another man.

She broke into tears as she pointed her finger at Edge, identifying him as the man who attacked her. "That's him. That's the man who tried to rape me."

Judge Gambill was forced to call a five minute recess to allow the witness to regain her composure.

Miss White further testified that although she did not see the face of her assailant, she recognized the light coat and receding hairline of the defendent. "It couldn't have been anybody else; it had to be him," she insisted.

Edge, testifying in his own behalf, said that his relationship with Miss White had never been anything but a casual one. He denied ever having made an advance on her, and insisted that at the time of her attack he was walking more than 40 feet behind her.

A light moment in the tense testimony came when Edge was asked by County Attorney Joe Roberts if he were in "top physical condition." The six-foot, 205 pound football whiz replied "No, Sir. I should be, I guess."

If convicted Edge could have been sentenced to from one to fifteen years in the State prison.

Committee For Code Changes Is Organized

Honor And Campus Codes Investigated

Attorney General Whitney Durand announced yesterday that Student Body President Mike Lawler has commissioned him to head a special committee to investigate possible changes in the Honor and Campus Codes and their enforcement.

"This broad role will be defined by the committee in its first sessions," Durand said. "It is expected to cover such matters as the limits of the Campus Code and alterations in the penalty structure," he said.

Members of the committee are Durand, Bev Haynes, Pete Wales, Brian Simpson, Tim Oliver, Phil Baddour and Cissy Trott.

"This is the first such committee in several years, but this subject has been a concern of student government in years past," Durand said.

The committee, an outgrowth of the discussion groups which the Men's and Women's Councils held this fall, will hold open meetings and will allow interested students to submit reports and statements. Students may also be called upon to appear before the body.

Durand expressed hope that the student body would show an interest in the committee.

Fire! Fire! Fire!

Three fire engines raced to Old West Hall at 12:45 p.m. yesterday to investigate a reported fire in the building.

The alarm, turned in at 12:40 by an unidentified student, proved to be false after fire department officials and Campus Police made a thorough search of the structure.

"The only thing I smelled was something like burning sulphur—like someone had just burned a book of matches," Campus Police Chief Beaumont told a crowd of students.

Goldilocks' Called Lewd

Orchestra Flats, Mon. (UDT)—A 7-member publications and library board declared the children's classic "Goldilocks" "unfit for child reading and lewdly obscene in its sordid insinuations."

The board, composed of elderly ladies, passed down the verdict after extensive study and 7 months of psychological testing.

Miss Rebecca Sturmundrang, the head of the committee by seniority, said that the book offered "unsuitable reading to children of all ages. Not only does it offer lewd suggestion to the young mind of today by implication and suggestion, but it is blatantly sensual by the suggestion that a small white girl would sleep in the same bed as a brown bear."

Up-To-Date Physics Will Be Taught

By MAT FRIEDMAN

"We don't feel a book about gadgets is physics. We think people ought to understand the logic in physics."

Dr. Joseph W. Straley of the UNC Department of Physics feels this way about his subject—and he has set out to do something about it. He will direct a program at Chapel Hill this summer aimed at helping to bring high school physics teachers up to date in their conception of the field and presenting its basic concepts to them.

Under a grant from the National Science Foundation about 35 teachers from North Carolina and other areas of the country will spend the first summer session here getting instruction on the most modern concepts of physics.

"Physics has changed an awful lot in the last ten years," says Dr. Straley. It has changed more than most people realize and I feel that this program, prepared by people concerned with physics, is something current high school teachers deserve to have."

The program will attempt to present physics as it "appears to the contemporary physicist, as a unified but unfinished story and as an activity carried on by human beings as part of the general intellectual history of mankind.

"Physics is a means of learning about nature," according to Straley. "We don't feel a book about gadgets is physics. We want these teachers to understand the logic of their subject. One equation is a consequence of another. Merely having people memorize them is like taking them on a tour and showing them individual scenes without giving them an overall view."

Although the department has been holding summer programs since 1956, this will be only the third summer under the new curriculum, one which is being used by only two other schools.

"There are many similar programs being held all over the country," says Dr. Straley. "We feel it is just part of university work."

Swimmers Win

UNC's freshmen swimmers rolled over Westminster of Atlanta, Ga., 70-25 and Staunton Military 75-20 Friday and now stand 10-2 for the season. Sprinter Pete Worthen tied the existing NCAA freshman freestyle mark with a splendid 21.6. Worthen is unbeaten in in the 50 and 100 freestyle sprints to date.

Jack Hayden won both backstroke and individual medley events. Jim Bermuth and Allen McDonald finished one-two in the 200 free; while Butch Aydellette won the diving. Strud Norfleet posted a fine 22.5 in the 50 free, finishing second to Worthen. In addition, UNC took both relay events to completely overwhelm the high school opposition.

To Be Reintroduced Next Year

Tax Credit For Students Is Not A Dead Issue Yet

By RITA DERSHOWITZ
Collegiate Press Service

WASHINGTON — The controversial tax credit proposal for college students, sponsored by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D(Conn.) was defeated in the Senate February 4, but the issue is far from dead.

The Ribicoff amendment, which would have allowed a tax credit of up to $750 a year for payment of tuition, other fees, books and supplies, was defeated by a vote of 48-45. A second amendment, sponsored by Sen. Winston Prouty (R-Vt.) would have allowed a comparable tax credit to working students. It was defeated by a 47-47 vote.

In addition to Sen. Ribbicoff's pledge to bring the same bill up again next year, a similar tax allowence will be included in the amendment to extend the National Defense Education Act (NDEA) during the current session of the House.

According to Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) chairman of the House Subcommittee on Education and sponsor of the NDEA extension, her new proposal would allow a deduction from the total income on which tax is based, thus lowering the income tax bracket of the individual. The Ribicoff amendment would have subtracted a deduction from the amount of the tax to be paid.

Mrs. Green conceded that her proposal has little chance of passage in the House, where it will come up for debate following the current committee hearings on the entire NDEA amendment.

A tax credit for college students and their families has arounsed outspoken opposition from leading education figures.

The primary objection to the Ribicoff amendment stemmed from the nature of the proposal itself, as a tax relief for middle-income families. Mrs. Green, calling it a "middle-class scholarship bill," charged that it does nothing to help those students who most need help. "Low income families do not pay enough taxes o benefit from this type of credit."

Francis Keppel, U. S. Commissioner of Education, declared that the question was one of priority and the "first priority is to even out the chances for education." The most pressing need in the area of federal aid to education, "the opportunity for low-income families to send their children to college," is ignored by the original proposed tax credit.

Mr. Keppel also pointed out that a tax credit might have the reverse effect of raising tuition, thus "making higher education even more unreachable for low-income families."

Sen. Ribicoff retorted that the bill was not designed as a substitute for any other form of aid to higher education, but was directed toward the "underprivileged middle class." According to Ribbicoff, middle class students are not eligible for scholarship aid to the same extent that low-income students are, and yet they bear a financial burden in paying for higher education.

Opponents of the measure feel that direct aid through scholarships, loans and work-study programs were fairer ways of meeting the spiraling tuition costs of higher education.

Petition For Boycott Is Circulated

A petition supporting Student Legislature's call for a boycott of segregated business establishments in Chapel Hill is being circulated in campus living units.

The petition, according to its sponsor, Harry Muir of Graham Hall, currently has 180 signatures on it.

"We intend to at least do our own small part by boycotting those businesses which refuse to admit that all men are equal, regardless of race, creed or national origin," it reads in part.

"I just got pretty damn mad when I read Crampton's letter," Muir said when asked why he circulated the petition. Muir referred to a letter in the DTH written by Clark Crampton, co-sponsor of a petition condemning the boycott.

Muir said that those who have not seen a copy of the petition and wish to sign it will find one on the bulletin board of Graham Memorial.

The petition and signatures are being sent to the Daily Tar Heel.

Panama Situation Is Subject Of 1st Old East Lecture

A discussion by two University experts on the Panama situation will open the Old East Hall Lecture Series Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall.

Dr. Harold A. Bierck of the History Department and Dr. John D. Martz of the Institute of Latin American Studies will be the speakers.

Dr. Bierck will give the social and economic background of the situation. Dr. Martz will speak on the political aspects.

The two men will speak for 20 minutes each. A question and answer period will follow.

The lectures, if this one is successful, will continue through the spring, according to Old East President Daily Derr.

The purpose of the series is to establish a forum for thought on current issues.

"This is the first attempt that I know of by a residence hall to start a series of this type," Derr said.

"Paul Seaton, the chairman of the series, has done an excellent job of organizing this thing, and we expect it to be very successful."

Students, faculty and Chapel Hill residents are invited. There is no charge.

Election Date Causes UP Uproar

By PETE WALES

Candidates running in the spring elections, and particularly those of the University Party, are screaming about the latest election date of April 21 set by Student Legislature Thursday.

The April date, these people feel, is in conflict with other activities at that time and is too close to exams.

The University Party feels that this is a "power grab" by the Student Party who wish to keep their administration and their majority in Legislature as long as possible.

Arthur Hayes, chairman of the Elections Board and SP legislator, originally requested April 14 as the election date.

Student bylaws require that the election date be between March 17 and April 21.

Legislature, led by UP members rejected April 14 because of the Symposium (April 5 to 9) and the lack of time for campaigning following spring vacation (March 26 to April 1.)

Legislature set the date for March 24 in their meeting Feb. 6.

On Feb. 11, a motion by the SP to reconsider the election date ended in a tie and was defeated by the vote of the speaker, Bob Spearman (UP). The vote fell along party lines.

Thursday, the SP had a majority and introduced a motion to rescind the March 24 date and set the election for April 21.

News Analysis

UP legislators tried to leave the room to prevent a quorum, but the SP locked the doors. The motion passed 23-13.

Hayes and members of the Elections Board had presented a statement to the speaker objecting to the March 24 date because:

1) The Board needs more time to set up the election.

2) The Board is understaffed and needs time to get more members.

3) There is not enough time to count votes before spring vacation (March 26).

4) Mid-term quizzes will be going on.

5) Hayes is also chairman of the Finance Committee and plans to draw up next year's budget in March. He says he will not have enough time to handle the elections also.

UP leaders feel that this is a brazen attempt to keep the Lawler Administration in power while the SP tries to get a candidate for next year.

"This is the greatest plot to keep a political party in power since the days of Thaddeus Stevens," Don Carson, UP floorleader, said Thursday.

The UP leaders pointed out five objections to the April date:

1) This is the first time in 10 years that the election date has been later than April 7.

2) There will be no time for the new administration and DTH staff to get organized. The inauguration comes within 12 days of the election and exams start May 20.

Farris Backs Up Lawler's Boycott Request

Our Decision

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The President of the Student Body's statement regarding the role of students in the racial problems of Chapel Hill expresses responsible leadership. His statement appeals to all students for consideration of the moral issue of discrimination in this community. The President of the Student Body further asks that students act upon this consideration.

I believe that many students think discrimination is unjust; yet these students encourage it by patronizing establishments which do discriminate. This "none of my business" attitude is the crux of the problem. There need be no ultimatum from CORE, or any other groups, no mounting threat of violence, no need of governmental actions, and, moreover, no prolongation of discrimination in Chapel Hill. This change of conditions is contingent upon the students expressing their convictions by leaving these places alone.

I would like to add that the petition in opposition to Mr. Lawler's statement is ill-founded, for the legal rights of the merchants still remain. They are free to run their businesses as they please. The only difference is that now the opportunity for positive action will be taken by the patrons. For they, in choosing integrated establishments, express directly their attitudes. Thus, the merchants will know that integrated establishments will be supported economically in Chapel Hill.

This issue presents a confrontation of two attitudes, the merits of which should be decided by all students. Little, if any, justification remains for disinterest or indecision.

Open Eyes

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I was invited recently to hear a speech by Quentin Baker, leader of the "Student Non-Violent" group of demonstrators, and not having had the opportunity before, I attended. He spoke with feeling, reserve, conviction—yet I left with such a personal sense of depression and frustration as I have never known before, a feeling of profound pity for this personable young man and those with whom he works, and a dismayed admiration of those for whom he works. These young people have been so pathetically brainwashed that they cannot, or will not, exercise their own right to constructive leadership. He spoke of 275 of his college class of 300 going into teaching as if it were a disgrace! To me, only the calling to serve God as His Minister ranks higher than the vocation to teach His children. This is a parent's first God-given duty, and a teacher assumes this responsibility willingly! How can one be blinded to the crying needs in crowded classrooms, or to the challenge of retarded, brilliant, or physically handicapped children? Thank goodness for the vision of the 275.

He need not weep to me about the inadequacies of Negro high schools because he had to study an extra year to close the gap between that and college. Both my white brothers did, too—and because we lived on a small farm, they stayed with relatives in Washington, and worked during the day to pay for their evening "prep school" education. They set their goals and worked, with neither self-pity for the good times they missed nor resentment toward standards they were made to meet. They make comfortable low-middle incomes now, are not college professors, either, and have happy, growing families.

Why does he cry only for Negro children going to sleep cold? We did too, and awoke cold to jump into our clothes, and hold our hands and turn our backs to our pot-bellied stove! And now my children do the same, only it's to the oven in our kitchen. Of course we gripe—human nature—but we eat our grits and eggs and get to work, for exercise soon compensates — children learn this early and hold no grudge themselves.

He spoke of the beauties and wonders of this country that a Negro child could not hope to see—and yet I have been with multitudes of Negro school children at the Washington Monument, National Zoological Park, Lincoln Memorial, Smithsonian Institute, when I was a child. I'm sure they and the white children still go there, and to many other places. I never saw any Negro children or adults, however, in the Mormon Temple—my family was not allowed in there. But the most sublime and spectacular sights on this continent are waiting for everyone to come and enjoy them, many absolutely free, none costing more than $3.00 for as long as one likes. These are our National forests, parks, and monuments scattered around the U.S., paid for and maintained by our taxes. All anyone needs is a car and gasoline, bedrolls of blankets, a supply of groceries, and a willingness to sacrifice convenience for beauty. And Negro children are there.

His speech was filled with half truths, insinuations, and downright fallacies which he believed or wanted to believe. However, in absolute truthfulness he stated that aside from the accident of birth we are all alike in that we are "made in the image of God"—then let him, and the others that will, use that understanding and free will of their immortal souls to see and choose the way of the Commandments of God. Is disobedience to lawful authority abiding by the 4th Commandment? Is throwing one's body in front of automobiles, inciting others to anger, setting bad example abiding by the 5th Commandment? Is stimulating mistrust, even hatred, among neighbors abiding by the 8th Commandment? Quentin Baker spoke as a religious man, and so I write thusly—though tactics and statements show plainly that there are some using this movement to whom God means nothing, much less love of neighbor.

I implore him and his fellow workers, if they are sincere, to open their eyes.

Sincerely,

What?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Apologies for Grammar.

I do not wish to offend nor gain the approval of any particular segment of the student body—I merely wish to present the obvious facts of a disgraceful situation in Chapel Hill—that is—the flagrant violation of the law by demonstrators in general and students in particular.

The students as well as others who participate are breaking one of the oldest laws of mankind—trespass—another violation commonly committed in resisting arrest and this too has a historical basis—further infractions involve obstructing sidewalks and more importantly traffic—

The question here no longer lies in the moral issue of integration for it would be difficult to disagree with this moral aspect of the situation—but the question lies in an attempt at change through what could not at all be termed the democratic process. Although the democratic process may involve more time this in no way justifies breaking laws which do have merit and are not used merely to hinder a "cause." The answer is the familiar adage that two wrongs don't make a right.

A moral issue of perhaps greater significance enters into such violations it seems that these demonstrators should take into consideration the possibility of a life or lives being lost while obstructing traffic in the case of some calamity where the loss of a few seconds can mean disaster. This type of action does not seem to be that of responsible students; yet some of our campus leaders to use the term loosely condone such behavior and wish to do away with any consideration of these acts as an offense punishable by the campus code—there is something of a paradox here when a student is tried for being drunk or creating a disturbance off campus while even more irresponsible acts would be allowed to go unrestrained.

I do not feel that one or two individuals can voice opinions as if backed by the majority—which are contrary to our entire system of government. I cannot help but feel that the majority of the tsudents at U.N.C. do not wish to be a part of law breaking demonstrations such as these nor do they wish to have it appear that they support these actions and that certain supposedly responsible individuals speak for them.

Few instances of breaking the law have been rewarded and these stands taken by our "leaders" can only result in antagonizing the not so liberal element around Chapel Hill thus creating greater violence as well as drawing more frowns from the populus of North Carolina toward our institution.

Most students at U.N.C. have some sense of responsibility therefore I cannot feel that a few so-called student leaders are taking a responsible attitude or voicing a majority opinion as it appears to outsiders when they condone and wish to further such flagrant violation of law and order—and in general encouraging what may result in or is commonly known as mob rule.

Lawler: Yea!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I wonder sometimes just what kind of world Armisted Maupin and Clark Crampton are living in. Their undoubted idols, Jesse Helms and William Buckley, speak quite a bit on the subject of mush-headed liberals, but I have seen few things less well-founded in reality than the outcry these two have raised against Mike Lawler's boycott statement. Mr. Maupin apparently has no conception either of what Mr. Lawler said or why he said it. To perhaps enlighten our esteemed author of "View from the Hill" and others, Mr. Lawler has "urged that this Student Body withdraw its support from those establishments which do not and will not serve us (the student body, including both black and white members) all." Now Mr. Lawler is not saying (and he should not say) that Mr. Crampton or Mr. Maupin or any other student cannot go to Clarence's for a beer or Watts Motel Restaurant for a bite to eat. Nor is he attempting to speak for all students.

What Mr. Lawler is doing is LEADING, which, as elected president of the student body, he is duty-bound to do. Now some of us may not, for any number of reasons, agree with Mr. Lawler's statement, just as some of us, for example, may not agree with any given statement by President Johnson. But, in both cases, our total agreement with either man is beside the point. We elected Mike Lawler president, and by doing this we placed him in a position of leadership and expected his leadership. Now, after five months of careful consideration, Mr. Lawler has taken a position of leadership on a problem which actually affects us all, both as students and as Americans. In Chapel Hill today, I cannot go to a number of business establishments and be served if my friend and fellow student, Kellis Parker, is with me. Much worse, Kellis cannot go at all. This is a situation which cannot be tolerated by the student body of the University of North Carolina. As the leader of this student body, Mike Lawler has acted wisely and in the best interests of us all, both in the role of students and in the role of Americans.

How Maupin and Co. can fail to see this exceedingly simple point is beyond me. Perhaps they cannot see because they are attempting to use Lawler's statement (now supported by the Student Legislature) as a political football in the Buzy Stubbs issue. Perhaps they are unable to comprehend anything larger than a Roy Cole definition of law and justice. Perhaps they have never seen the look on a man's face when he is told to go around to the side door, or move to the rear.

I have seen that look, and I am grateful for Mr. Lawler's leadership. He perhaps has seen it too, which is reason enough to state as he did that "discrimination on the basis of race in public facilities is morally indefensible."

Mr. Crampton, there really can be no question on that point.

A Lull, Chapel Hill, Not A Lullaby

The Chapel Hill Freedom Committee appears to have acted wisely in calling a six-day moratorium on civil disobedience tactics. Both the town and the committee need to stand back and take a fresh look at the situation.

There is, of course, a nagging doubt that white Chapel Hill will take advantage of this period of relative calm, but it must be given the opportunity.

As for the demonstration leaders, they need to give fresh thought to the effectiveness of their protests, if only because of the ever-present danger of such protests becoming an end in themselves. This is a danger the demonstration leaders are well aware of, but some fresh thinking won't hurt a bit.

We particularly urge the committee leaders to re-study the effectiveness of highway sit-downs and school walkouts or boycotts. We are not among those who automatically cluck at these forms of protest, but we are concerned over their potential for great harm.

By and large, however, the committee has acted well to date. It has achieved its first objective of awakening that reluctant giant called "the white moderate," in whose hands the solution to our situation rests.

The continuation of visitations to discriminatory businesses would seem to assure that the giant does not go back to sleep; it will also assure that the operators of discriminatory businesses have the pressure kept on them.

We hope that a majority of the Board of Aldermen and the town comes to its sense somehow and begins talking in relevancies. Should they do so during this temporary lull in militancy, it will be a major victory for the entire town.

Gentlemen: There Is A Difference

The verdict of the Honor Council in the sit-in case Thursday night needs little or no explanation. But it does seem necessary to place the verdict in its proper perspective, for it is evident that the Council has taken a significant and historical step in freeing us from an outdated definition of gentlemanly conduct.

In deciding that Thomas Bynum was not guilty of any ungentlemanly action because he chose to take a stand and follow his conscience, the Council has chosen a more sophisticated definition of what determines a gentleman. They have rejected the simplified definition of the cavalier gentleman, well-mannered and socially adept. To this they have added the far more stringent requirements of morality and social conscience.

A gentleman must now be a social creature with a deep concern for the welfare of his fellow man. And more than that, he must make the sacrifices necessary to take a stand against what he feels to be unjust or immoral, regardless of the majority opinion.

Dr. Robert Sitton, in his testimony, made reference to Robert E. Lee as a true gentleman. Lee took a minority stand and an illegal one, but he took the stand his strong moral conscience dictated. It is this greater definition of a gentleman that the Council has now laid down as a standard.

It is also significant that at least two of the Council members who voted for the 'not guilty' verdict disagreed with the use of civil disobedience as a method for attaining integration. Yet they felt it was most gentlemanly.

It is also significant that at least two of the Council members who voted for the 'not guilty' verdict disagreed with the use of civil disobedience as a method for attaining integration. Yet they felt it was most gentlemanly.

We feel the decision was not only just, but courageous. There seems little doubt that much invective will be hurled at the Council members for having reached their decision. It is unprecedented in any university in the South, and this is particularly fitting since Carolina has been a leader in the past and should return to that position.

The Honor Council has helped us reach for that leadership.

Hold On A Minute, Willya?

Few things are more certain in this nuclear age than that most of us have come under the heel of technology as much as we have been freed by it. The automobile, for example, allows us great mobility, and yet often impairs our health by getting us out of the habit of walking. Television has extended our range of knowledge and experience, and yet, rather than stimulating us, seems to have lulled us into apathy and vidiocy.

But what has us especially irked is the telephone. Sometimes we are almost moved to the point of cussing the memory of Watson for letting old Alex Bell know that his new invention actually worked.

The telephone is there at hand for any need. And yet it is there too, ringing insistently, when the need is for uninterruption. The best example of this slave-master nature of the telephone, and our technological miracles in general, is the way most of us promptly interrupt someone we're talking with to answer the telephone, and give our full attention to the intruder on the line.

This is an unconscious act for most of us, but that does not justify the rude results.

Why does a telephone caller get priority over a real live fellow human being who has come to see us?

Why don't we just pick up the phone and hold it for a minute, until our current conversation can be courteously interrupted, rather than reacting like one of Pavlov's dogs getting a knee-shock?

"Don't Worry . . . Some Of Us Are Still With You Folks."

Book Review

Will Looks Good

By JOHN GOINS

"William Shakespeare: a Biography," by A. L. Rowse. Harper and Row, 1963. $6.95. 484 pages.

"It is usual to preface a book on Shakespeare with an apology for adding to the number, and I had every intention of adhering to the custom. My hope was, as an historian, to be able to illuminate at least the history plays, the inspiration and treatment of England's past, by the most historically minded of dramatists."

Thus A. L. Rowse begins his preface to the latest of the thousands of volumes written on Shakespeare, the greatest of the English writers. And though Rowse only started out to use his knowledge of the Elizabethan period to shed new light on Shakespeare's history plays, what he has accomplished is a major contribution to the understanding of all of Shakespeare's works.

Rowse is considered by many to be the leading historian of the Elizabethan Age. He has written such books as "The England of Elizabeth," "The Expansion of Elizabethan England," and "The Elizabethans and America," as well as biographies of some of the other leading Elizabethans: Sir Richard Grenville, Tudor Cornwall, and Sir Walter Raleigh.

The greatest achievement Rowse claims for his book is his solution of the problems surrounding Shakespeare's sonnets: to whom were they written, what was the relationship between Shakespeare and that person, the identity of the rival poet, and the dating of the sonnets.

By following a strict historical method and establishing a firm dating and chronolgy, Rowse claims to have discovered: the sonnets were written in the years 1592-95; they all belong together, in the rational order that we have received them; they were written to the Earl of Southampton, Shakespeare's patron; and Marlowe is the rival poet often mentioned in the sonnets.

Rowse claims to have established for the first time the date and occasion of "A Midsummer Night's Dream": 1594, upon the marriage of the Countess of Southampton to Sir Thomas Heneage.

The validity of Rowse's claims will undoubtedly be discussed, argued, and fought over by Shakespearean scholars for years to come; it is enough for a journalism critic to say that he has made the claims.

Rowse's book is not meant for beginning students of Shakespeare, for some knowledge of the plays and sonnets is necessary to follow the sometimes highly-technical explanations of difficult passages. But the book can be read and enjoyed by students who wish to have a richer and fuller understanding of what they have already read of Shakespeare.

Rowse follows the life of Shakespeare from the moment of his baptism, through his marriage, his arrival in London, and his steady climb to the top of the literary ladder.

Though he nowhere openly acknowledges the doubt that Shakespeare's works might have been written by someone better educated, Rowse piles up loads of evidence in his book to squash this popular belief.

The book points out that Shakespeare was an avid, fast reader, and that he was able to retain what he read and pull it out years afterward, whenever he needed it. Shakespeare made the little education that he had go a long way.

Prof's Speech Before Men's Council

Sitton: A Definition Of 'Gentlemanly Conduct'

The following is the statement of Dr. Robert Sitton of the Philosophy Department to the Men's Council in defense of the demonstrator who was tried for ungentlemanly conduct and found innocent.

I sincerely appreciate the opportunity to be with you tonight and to discuss this issue with you. The issue before us, to my mind, is so important that one would wish to heaven it were clearer. We are called upon to offer opinions as to wether or not the action taken by one of our students in the present civil rights struggle was "gentlemanly." It is clear that to act "gentlemanly" is to act like a "gentleman," and "gentleman" is one of the most confusing and variously applied words in our language. One glance at the treatment given it by the recent unabridged issue of Webster's Dictionary suffices to show that "gentleman" indeed has a confusing and often contradictory logic. It is used not only to refer to "a man of noble or gentle birth," but also to "a man of lower, uneducated, or indeterminate social class or condition." The term may apply to rich or poor, educated or uneducated, master or slave, and there is even a special case in which it is used to mean "an amateur cricketer." The point is that considered as a descripiive term, "gentleman" has such widespread application that it is foolish to debate the question of this student being or not being a "gentleman." Of course he is a "gentleman." So are we all, for that matter. But that's really not what we are interested in. We are not interested in whether the word "gentleman" applies to this student in its descriptive sense; rather, we are interested in whether or not he is a "gentleman" in the evaluative sense of the term.

We are interested in the word as it appears in expressions such as "he's a real gentleman," rather than when we would say, for example, "Gentlemen, may I have your attention?" Basically at issue, then, is whether or not we find the action of this individual to be commendable and in the best tradition of praiseworthy, masculine conduct.

I believe that the behavior of this student is so clearly commendable and praiseworthy that I find it remarkable that a question to the contrary has arisen. For to question whether or not something is the case is to imply that, in fact, it may not be the case. To ask whether or not the action of this student was "gentlemanly" implies that the inquirer is not aware that the action clearly was such and it is this lack of awareness that I find dismaying. I regret that the behavior of this student must be justified before the leaders of his student government. It is indeed unfortunate that a person with the courage of his convictions, who stands up for what he believes to be right, is brought to trial for not being a "gentleman."

For what, after all, is a "gentleman" if not a person who with a sense of honor and responsibility who treats all men with respect, and willfully and courageously acts to rectify injustices suffered by his fellow man? Is a "gentleman" a person who reacts to social crisis with apathy and indifference, who merely sits hypnotized before a television set or wanders downtown to gawk at and berate demonstrators? Who are the "gentlemen" in this situation? It is my earnest conviction that this student does not belong here on trial. If anyone should be tried for "ungentlemanly conduct" it is the large group of students who lack the moral fortitude to take a stand in this issue. Indifference, I contend, is the path of the truly "ungentlemanly" person. Whether you are for or against an issue does not show your character as much as the fact that you have taken a stand. Robert E. Lee was a gentleman. The fact that he fought for the Southern forces makes absolutely no difference in that respect. The important thing was that he took a stand and that he did what he honestly thought to be right. He may doubt the worthiness of their cause, but I cannot believe that Lee himself, were he standing here tonight, would deny that the person on trial here is in every sense of the word, a "gentleman."

Why, then, would some of us want to deny that this is true? Let me mention a few ideas that are currently receiving some acceptance. First, there is the notion that this student has broken the law and, as such, has acted in a socially unacceptable manner. Yet lawbreaking in itself is not a sign of "ungentlemanly conduct." Such great gentlemen as Socrates, Jesus Christ, Martin Luther, Mahatma Ghandi, George Washington and Robert E. Lee have broken the law in their lifetimes. Millions of our awn parents willfully broke the law during Prohibition. It is not the breaking of a law per se that matters; it is which law you break and why you broke it. The civil rights demonstrators knowingly broke what they believe to be an unconstitutional application of the North Carolina State trespass law. They have nothing against the law itself. They consider it basically a good law, allowing a man the assistance of local police in protecting himself from persons who threaten his welfare or property. What is contested is the use of this law to enforce racial discrimination in places of public accommodation.

This, they claim, is unconstitutional and they seek a ruling to that effect by the Supreme Court. I understand the court is fully expected to rule in their favor. At that point the issue of breaking the law will be no longer viable and we will have lost our "lawbreakers" to charge with ungentlemanly conduct. I suggest that before we try any student for being ungentlemanly in breaking the law, we make quite sure that that is, in fact, what has been done.

What then about resisting arrest, "going limp," as they say? Isn't that an unaesthetic and graceless thing to do? Surely a "gentleman" doesn't go flopping around in a police car like a rag doll. Here, I grant, you have a point. It looks pretty silly. Everybody knows that, particularly the demonstrators. Yet it seems to me that a "gentleman" is the kind of person who is man enough to look silly when there is good reason to do so. If looking silly will help bring respect, liberty and fair play into the lives of colored citizens, then I say there is good reason for looking silly. It has been shown in the past, unfortunately, that techniques of this sort are absolutely the only way to get the white man moving on civil rights. It is indeed a sad comment upon the intelligence of white people that they get around to helping the Negroes only when enough people act like Raggedy Anns in police cars. Surely you must see that in the eyes of the world it is not those who "go limp" that look foolish; it is the people who are so stubborn as to force the Negro to perform such awkward gymnastics before giving him his rights. If "going limp" were not effective, you may be sure that no one would be doing it. But sadly enough this is the only language the white man understands. It looks silly, yes, but to my mind it is a truly dignified gentleman who will forsake his outward appearance to gain the dignity of others. The Negro does not want to demonstrate, nor does he find it fun or kicks. It is his last resort. We white people in callously refusing his rights have left him no recourse. The fault for demonstrations is ours, not his. We are on trial, not he. We look silly, not he.

Well, what about the legal aspects of this action? Isn't resisting arrest a flagrant infraction of the law and, as such, aren't those who do so worthy of rebuke? stances they believe to be unconstitutional. They are Dr. Pollitt is more eminently qualified to speak on this point than I, and I will leave it to him to do so. I will only say that it is my understanding that cases of this sort have yet to reach an appellate court, so we don't know yet about their legitimacy. Nonetheless, I cannot honestly believe that such convictions would be upheld. Instead of forcibly resisting arrest by struggling with the officers, the demonstrators are merely showing in the most dramatic way possible that they will not willingly contribute to their own arrest under circumnot preventing their arrest, they are simply not contributing to it. This, to my mind, is fair and understandable. But really, the whole issue seems rather picky and academic, once you think about it. What if these people are resisting arrest, isn't there good reason to? To get hauled away for asking for a hotdog because your skin is black is so utterly illogical to my mind that I find it difficult to believe we are doing such things in 1964. Surely the gods are amused at such comic and trivial actions on the part of our local government.

Perhaps the main point is that the white man fails to realize that not only is the Negro justified in taking to the streets, he even more so has just cause for declaring open rebellion against segregationists. The United States of America, in the past, has actually gone to war for less reason than the Negro has right now for simply sitting in at lunch counters or, when necessary, lying in the street. The blood of Americans, both black and white, has been shed for the sake of preserving the rights of Poles and Czechs, and yet we fail to see the immoral and illegitimate enslavement of a substantial portion of our own people within the borders of our own country. I ask you, was there more reason for our taking the lives of a substantial portion of the German populus during the Second World War than the Negro has right now for open revolt against the white man? Was there better reason for our killing Germans for persecuting the Jews than the Negro has for striking violently out at the white man for degrading and persecuting him? To my mind there is not. In fact, in that the Negro is fighting for the actualization of the promises given him as a citizen of the United States and as such is basically seeking to realize the ideals of this country, there is every reason for saying, that should he resort to force he would be fighting for and not against this country. But the Negro does not fight; that is the important thing. He does not openly retaliate when subjected to some of the gravest injustices and most sickening cruelties inflicted on a people since the Nazi reign of terror. In this I say he is not only gentlemanly, he is superhuman. And this student on trial here tonight, for acting in the same manner, is equally due our respect, for how many of us would have the courage to act likewise? How many of us would not strike back when flagrantly attacked and beaten as we have seen demonstrators attacked and beaten in recent days in Chapel Hill? How many of us would contain our hatred upon being suffocated and burned with ammonia by a man not worthy of the property sold him by the state? How many of us would not have struck viciously back at the unspeakable action of a woman so despicable as to relieve her very body over another human being? Or who would not have exploded with rage at the 12 men who beat, kicked, and tore the clothes off demonstrators on the Pittsboro Road this past Saturday? I say to you in all honesty that a person who can undergo these horrors and emerge saying, as I heard one demonstrator say recently, "I love them and I forgive them for their ignorance" is truly a gentleman. He is a gentleman is precisely the same sense that Jesus Christ was a gentleman.

Yet there are those who say the action of these students is unwarranted, coercive or asking too much, too soon. Is this true? Is it asking too much to demand the same things in the most enlightened community in the South that the United States Congress is right now considering for the whole country? It is too "soon" to ask for it here, when the same thing is being asked for by a large number of the highest elected officials of the land just 200 miles away in our nation's capital? Are we that far behind the rest of the country? It seems to me that we should have the perception to realize that if we do not invoke a public accommodations ordinance and provide for fair employment practices and equitable housing, the federal government is going to have to do it for us. Chapel Hill has been given the chance to save face and do this on its own. It has failed shamefully, and in so doing it has shown the rest of the nation that there is essentially no difference in practical attitude toward Negro rights between Chapel Hill, N. C. and Birmingham, Ala. And with the threatened unconstitutional revocation of picketing rights we have clearly aligned ourselves with such bastions of segregation as Albany, Ga., and Danville, Va. We thus join these cities in having to be led by the nose out of the wilderness by the federal government. And you may be sure that the federal government will do so. For the majority of American citizens realize that the Negro problem is a national problem, that until the Negro is free, none of us is free, that until we solve this problem at home, we shall remain the laughing stock of the world, the supreme hypocritical colossus proclaiming "liberty and justice for all" in one breath, and "nigger," don't let the sun set on you in this town" in the next. No, it is not too soon to ask for these things in Chapel Hill, N. C.; it is, to reemphasize the cliché, 100 years too late.

Finally, I want to say this: I want you to think for a moment about our place in the history of our country. I want you to look upon the decision you are about to make from the perspective of ten years hence. Ten years from now, should Providence permit that we are still alive, when the Negro has either won his freedom or we have proven Premier Khrushchev mistaken by not having him bury us, but rather by burying ourselves, what will you say when you are asked where you were in 1964 and what you were doing in this struggle? What will you say when you remember this night and the action you are about to take? Will you say that you found your fellow student guilty of "ungentlemanly conduct" because he subjected himself to brutality and embarrassment for taking part in what some people are already calling the American Revolution of 1963? Or will you say that you stood firm against the tide of opinion that would cast doubt upon the character and good name of this young man? For I am convinced—and I think history will prove me right—that the individuals who stand symbolically before us tonight for their actions in this struggle will be counted as national heroes in only 10 short years from now.

I want to ask you, then, in all earnestness to uphold the worthy reputation of the student body of UNC by repelling any attempt to bring question upon the character of these individuals. For I am certain that a conviction in this issue will have such undesirable consequences on other campuses throughout this country, that the harm already inflicted upon us by the lamentable Speaker Ban law will be compounded to the point of thoroughly disgracing this institution in the eyes of the nation. If UNC wants to regain the respect of enlightened people everywhere, it must take a firm hold upon this current racial crisis and lead the town of Chapel Hill out of the shameful state its dilatory leaders have gotten it into. I ask you to let the first step in that direction be to release this courageous young man from the charges that have been so unfairly brought against him. For if he is not a gentleman in every sense of the term, then I cannot but conclude that in our time the word has truly lost its meaning.

Corps Tests Are This Week

UNC Graduates In The Peace Corps

An attractive blond Peace Corps volunteer had just turned to her class of enraptured Peruvian students to begin the day's English lesson when one little dark boy raised his hand.

"Senorita," he mumbled," Te quiero muchisimo!"

"In English, Carlos," she smiled, not quite understanding his words.

"I love you very, very much senorita," blushed the 8-year-old, "and since I know you love me, too, will you marry me?"

This is a sample of the types of experiences which 30 former UNC students, now serving as Peace Corps volunteers, have encountered.

To see the Peace Corps volunteers in action, students are urged to see the film which will be shown Tuesday at 6:15 and at 7 p.m. in Murphey Hall, and at 7 p.m. Wednesday in Carroll Hall.

The Peace Corps Placement Test will be given three times daily to interested students Monday through Friday at 1 p.m., 3:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. in 106 Hanes Hall. Students are asked to bring their completed questionnaires to the placement test. These forms may be picked up at Graham Memorial, "Y" Court and Lenoir Hall.

UNC volunteers are now serving in Peru, Nigeria, the Philippines, Thailand, Chile and other countries.

These volunteers are working at the request of the host country as teachers, agriculturists, doctors, nurses, engineers, social workers, and construction workers among others. They live on the same level as their host-country counterparts and receive a similar salary.

Clyde Ingle, who received both his Bachelor's and Master's degrees in Political Science and Economics at UNC, teaches social studies at Zamboanga Normal College, Zamboanga City, the Philippines.

Ingle says of his assignment: "A high spot on my experience here so far is the response and interest of the students to my efforts in the classroom. They are very eager to learn and thus make every class an exciting experience."

His wife, Eva, teaches mathematics at Zamboanga City High School, where the students correspond in age to those in an Ameican junior high school.

Another former UNC student, Robert J. Morris, 24, received his A.B. in Spanish. He is now teaching English in a university in Peru.

Rosalyn Post studied for her Master's Degree in City Planning at the University. She is now an architect in a Peace Corps project in Tunisia. While a student at UNC she was a research assistant on methods of predicting land development for the Urban Studies Program.

Robert B. Bell, who received his degree at UNC in Business Administration, was Charlotte's first Peace Corps Volunteer. He joined the second Peace Corps project in Colombia, a Community Development program.

As a community development worker, he helps the citizens of a community discover their own problems and work together toward solutions.

These are only a few of the 30 UNC students who, together with many other North Carolinians, are contributing to the Peace Corps mission in developing nations.

The Peace Corps has projects in 46 countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America. Any American citizen over the age of 18 may apply. Married couples are eligible if they have no dependents under 18 and both husband and wife serve in the same country.

which would "actively flaunt arrests. "We have had no demonstrations since January 11 which have ended in civil disobedience. We will continue to have no civil disobedience until Friday, Feb. 21."

In response to questions, Dunne said the demonstrations would continue, but that they would be demonstrations which "could not be interpreted as unlawful." He hastened to add that such actions as "visitations" to segregated restaurants would continue. "When we are asked to leave by police, we will do so. If we are arrested beforehand, such action will be unlawful, and not our fault."

When asked what specific action he expected the Board of Aldermen and the mayor to take, Dunne responded that action in the areas of equal employment and public accommodations were the major issues which were in need of being resolved.

Dunne was asked if the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee would initiate efforts to secure prompt action on the problems he had listed. He replied: "It is the responsibility of the city to initiate concrete steps leading to solution of the problem and we are not going to give the city a blueprint on how to do it."

After the conference, the freedom committee announced demonstrations of a non-disobedience nature would take place in the afternoon.

Ken Hubbs Killed In Plane Mishap

PROVO, Utah (UPI) — Slender Ken Hubbs, who burst into baseball stardom two seasons ago as a rookie with the Chicago Cubs, was found dead Saturday along with a companion in the wreckage of a light plane in nearby Utah Lake.

Sandy-haired Hubbs, a tall, quiet fellow with big, sure hands that gave him prowess on the playing field, and Dennis E. Doyle were killed instantly in the crash two days ago, according searchers who found the bodies. They were on a return flight from Provo Airport to Murrow Field near their hometown of Colton, Calif.

Seconds after takeoff Thursday morning from the field five miles from the lake, Hubbs' new red-and-white, single-engine Cessna 172 apparently nosedived into the water. The plane smashed into an ice-covered section of the lake 200 yards south of desolate Bird Island.

A helicopter was the first to reach the crash site. A jeep posse was dispatched but it was more than two hours later before it arrived to begin the task of recovering the bodies.

One body was found in the cabin, and the other was ejected and mutilated.

The ice was two feet thick on the lake.

The motor and fuselage plunged to the bottom of the lake and the remainder of the craft was scattered over the ice. The water was an estimated 10 to 20 feet deep.

Weather Bad

Hubbs and Doyle, both 22, had taken off as a snowstorm spread over the area. Utah Aeronautics Director Marlon Bement described the weather as "very unfavorable for flying."

They were not reported missing until late Friday when Doyle failed to show up for work as scheduled. A widespread search over parts of Utah, Nevada and California was organized and an armada of light planes took off at dawn.

Myron Jense, Provo Airport manager, and Bement spotted the wreckage near the island at midmorning. Jense said there was "no chance they could have survived" because the water froze into the wreckage and then was covered by a new snowfall.

Hubbs, National League rookie-of the year in 1962, attended Brigham Young University at Provo briefly before signing a bonus contract with the Cubs. Previously, he was all-state and all-conference prep star and student body president at Colton High School.

fruitless negotiating sessions with city offcials over a new lease for Municipal Stadium.

"He was dead serious about it," said Barket, a personal friend of Findley's. "He even offered to take a note for as much as $3 million of the sale price, with 2 per cent interest.

"And I know that if I wrote him a check for the amount today, he would take it without hesitation."

Barket, chairman of the board of the Civic Plaza National Bank and president of a construction company, expressed interest in purchasing the American League club last January. But he said he would not consider buying at the price Finley asked.

"I would have to do a lot of liquidating to raise $7 million," he said. "And besides, the Athletics aren't worth over $3.5 million, or $4 million at the most.

"I would buy in a hurry if I could get the club for $3.5 million."

Finley paid approximately $3.5 million for the Athletics when he purchased the franchise three years ago from the estate of the late Arnold Johnson.

JUMP WITH JOY!

HAPPINESS IS A CONTEMPORARY CARD

Ledbetter Pickard

On Campus with Max Shulman

(Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and "Barefoot Boy With Cheek".)

ARF!

Benjamin Franklin (or The Louisville Slugger, as he is better known as) said, "A penny saved is a penny earned," and we, the college population of America, have taken to heart this sage advice. We spend prudently; we budget diligently. Yet, despite our wise precautions, we are always running short. Why? Because there is one item of expense that we consistently underestimate—the cost of travelling home for weekends.

Let us take the typical case of Basil Metabolism, a sophomore at UCLA majoring in avocados. Basil, a resident of Bangor, Maine, loved to go home each weekend to play with his faithful dog, Spot. What joy, what wreathed smiles, when Basil and Spot were re-united! Basil would leap into his dogcart, and Spot, a genuine Alaskan husky, would pull Basil all over Bangor, Maine—Basil calling cheery halloos to the townfolk, Spot wagging his curly tail.

The results were not all Basil had hoped

But the cost, alas, of travelling from UCLA to Bangor, Maine, ran to $400 a week, and Basil's father, alas, earned only a meagre salary as a meter-reader for the Bangor water department. So, alas, after six months Basil's father told Basil he could raise no more money; he had already sold everything he owned, including the flashlight he used to read meters.

Basil returned to California to ponder his dilemma. One solution occurred to him—to ship Spot to UCLA and keep him in his room—but Basil had to abandon the notion because of his roommate, G. Fred Sigafoos, who was, alas, allergic to dog hair.

Then another idea came to Basil—a stroke of genius, you might call it. He would buy a Mexican hairless chihuahua! Thus he would have a dog to pull him around, and G. Fred's allergy would be undisturbed.

The results, alas, were not all Basil had hoped. The chihuahua, alas, was unable to pull Basil in the dogcart, no matter how energetically he beat the animal.

Defeated again, Basil sat down with G. Fred, his roommate, to smoke a Marlboro Cigarette and seek a new answer to the problem. Together they smoked and thought and—Eureka!—an answer quickly appeared. (I do not suggest, mark you, that Marlboro Cigarettes are an aid to cerebration. All I say about Marlboros is that they taste good and are made of fine tobaccos and pure white filters and come in soft pack or Flip Top box.)

Well, sir, Basil and G. Fred got a great idea. Actually, the idea was G. Fred's, who happened to be majoring in genetics. Why not, said G. Fred, cross-breed the chihuahua with a Great Dane and thus produce an animal sturdy enough to pull a dogcart?

It was, alas, another plan doomed to failure. The cross-breeding was done, but the result (this is very difficult to explain) was a raccoon.

But there is, I am pleased to report, a happy ending to this heart-rending tale. It seems that Basil's mother (this is also very difficult to explain) is a glamorous blond aged 19 years. One day she was spotted by a talent scout in Bangor, Maine, and was signed to a fabulous movie contract, and the entire family moved to California and bought Bel Air, and today one of the most endearing sights to be seen on the entire Pacific Coast is Spot pulling Basil down Sunset Boulevard—Basil cheering and Spot wagging. Basil's mother is also happy, making glamorous movies all day long, and Basil's father is likewise content, sitting at home and reading the water meter. © 1964 Max Shulman

Cyprus Turmoil Still Bubbling

POLIS, Cyprus (UPI)—Heavily armed Greek Cypriots surrounded 700 Turkish Cypriots—including weeping women and children—during the night and there were fears Monday for their safety unless help arrived.

There was no report on casualties in the night-long fighting.

"We want soldiers—British soldiers—to help us," a Turkish Cypriot woman with tears streaming down her cheeks said at the troubled spot in Northwestern Cyprus about 60 miles from the capital of Nicosia.

She was one of the Turkish Cypriots who fled into their tiny hillside quarter less than half a mile away from the main area of the town where Greek Cypriots displayed a new armored bulldozer, rifles, Stenguns and shotguns in an indication of possible attack.

British officials announced they were sending 100 paratroopers here but none had arrived by early afternoon and the situation was tense.

U. S. May Boycott Some British Firms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk has repeated recent high-level hints of a possible American consumer boycott of British firms trading with Cuba. He stressed, however, that the U. S. government would have no hand in any such development.

Rusk spoke out during a government - sponsored, Voice of American interview recorded Friday for broadcast overseas. His remarks were released Saturday, two days after the end of President Johnson's talks with British Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home.

The secretary of state acknowledged Anglo - American differences over Western trade with Communist nations, including Cuba, a touchy issue upon which Johnson and Sir Alec failed to agree.

But Rusk noted Saturday that British trade with Cuba is "very small" and that even if it increases, "it will not be large."

"I think we should just wait to see what the practical effects of this trade may be," he said.

Student Convicted Of Manhandling Guard

LUBLIN, Poland (UPI) — A three-judge court Saturday convicted an American student of manhandling a Polish border guard during a passport argument but gave him a suspended jail sentence and fined him $10.40 in court costs.

The student, Andrew Field, 26, of Cambridge, Mass., could have been sent to prison for as long as seven years. He is a graduate student at Harvard University.

The provincial court acquitted Field on charges of cursing the border official. It suspended an eight-month jail term, but said Field would not be free to leave Poland until a week from Saturday when the sentence goes into effect.

The delay is mandatory under Polish law to permit time for appeals by either the state or the defendant. Both sides indicated they would let the ruling stand.

Field and his wife, Andrey, 24, left Lublin immediately after the trial for Warsaw. He will have to return here when the sentence becomes effective.

"It's a terrible thing to have to stay another seven days," Field said. "I didn't know I would have to stay another week."

The verdict climaxed a nine-hour trial.

George Wallace Wows Chicago

CHICAGO (UPI) — Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace Saturday continued a round of midwest business talks and told northerners they should solve their own racial problems before pointing a finger at the South.

Wallace arrived in Chicago Friday on his midwest tour to attract industry to his state.

After a press conference Friday, a Negro who identified himself as "Prophet Louis" grabbed the governor's hand and shook it vigorously.

While newsmen, security officers and Wallace's bodyguards watched, the Negro told the governor, "I just want to say that you are doing a great thing in keeping the races apart." The man refused to give his home address but said he was born 16 miles north of Montgomery, Ala.

Britisher Only Kept 3 Women

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — A heart researcher said Saturday it may be better for the heart in some cases to have smoked and stopped than never to have smoked at all.

He said people who give up cigarette smoking apparently have less heart trouble than those who never have smoked.

Dr. Henry I. Russek, president of the Russek Foundation, Staten Island, N.Y., announced results of a survey of professional men at the annual meeting of the American College of Cardiology.

Russek said a survey of 14,000 professional men showed that more than seven per cent of the nonsmokers had some kind of coronary trouble. Eleven per cent of the light smokers and 14 per cent of the heavy smokers had coronary disease. But less than three per cent of those who had quit reported any heart trouble.

Court Wants House Based On Population

Could Invalidate 398 Of 435 Seats

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court ruled Monday in a far-reaching decision that the Constitution requires that states to draw up their U. S. congressional districts on an equal population basis. The vote was six to three.

In a sharp dissent, Justice John M. Harlan asserted that the ruling in a Georgia case could "put in serious jeopardy if not invalidate" 398 of the present 435 seats in the House.

Harlan commented: "I had not expected to witness the day when the Supreme Court of the United States would render a decision which casts grave doubt on the constitutionality of the composition of the House of Representatives."

Justice Hugo L. Black, speaking for the majority, indicated doubt that the impact of the ruling would be as drastic as Harlan claimed.

Black said it might not be possible to set up congressional districts with "mathematical precision" as to population.

But he held "that is no excuse for ignoring our constitution's plain objective of making equal representation for equal numbers of people the fundamental goal for the House of Representatives."

In overturning a lower court ruling which held that the issue was for Congress rather than the judiciary to settle, Black said the Georgia apportionment "grossly discriminates."

Georgia's congressional districting under a 1962 law had been challenged by two Atlantans, James P. Westberry Jr., and Candler Crim Jr., who claimed it discriminated unfairly against city voters.

They stressed that the Fifth Congressional District in which they lived contained more than 20 per cent of the state's population.

YWCA After New Officers

The YWCA is holding interviews next week for girls interested in executive positions for next year. The positions are chosen in campus-wide elections.

Interviews for the position of president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, membership chairman and freshman coordinator will be held in Y-Court next Monday-Wednesday from 3 - 5 p.m. They will be held in Ann Queen's office, and a list for appointments will be posted on her door Wednesday.

Ballots will be announced February 29 and women's dorms will vote March 5. Results will be announced March 7.

Further information is available from Lucy Kennerly, YWCA president (968-9005) or Sally Rawlings, membership chairman (968-9023).

Methodists Picket ChiO's At Pines

UNC students picketed other UNC students Sunday night.

Eleven male students, mostly members of the Wesley Foundation, Methodist student group, picketed the segregated Pines Restaurant while Chi Omega sorority held an initiation banquet inside.

The picketers carried signs saying "Chi Omega supports segregation in Chapel Hill," and "Some UNC students can't eat here."

They marched, four at a time, along Highway 54 at the side of the restaurant, located just inside the town limits beyond Glen Lennox.

Jeff Byrum of Raleigh, 21-year-old UNC senior and spokesman for the picketers, said none of the group are connected with the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee which has led most anti-segregation demonstrations in town since the middle of December.

Byrum said the picketing was not an official function of the Wesley Foundation, but that most of the students who picketed were members of the Methodist student group.

Bev Hanes, president of the 60-girl sorority, had "no comment" on the matter.

'Beast' Held Over At Coffee House

"Beast," a short play by Alan Goldsmith of UNC's Department of English, has been held over at the Triangle Coffee House in Durham

The final performance will be tomorrow night at 9:30 at the Duke Road cafe.

"Beast" is a drama with its locale between two worlds where a group of varied people struggle emotionally and intellectually for superiority. Included in the cast are Laurel Dykstra, of the Carolina Playmakers; Charles Faust, of Chapel Hill; Dick King and Lise Knox, former Carolina Playmakers; and Goldsmith. Doc Field of the RTVMP Department is directing.

This is the third in a series of new plays being presented at the Coffee House.

"No Symbols," by Wilton Beauchamp of the UNC Department of Drama, follows on February 23, 26 and March 1. For the remainder of the spring term, plays by UNC playwriting students will be performed at the Coffee House to give public hearing to their work as well as provide opportunity for actors, directors, and technicians to employ their talents on new, original plays.

Buck Roberts of the UNC Department of Drama serves as coordinator of the program.

Panama Lecture

Long-Range Plan Offered To Erase Discrimination

UNC Philosophy Professor E. Maynard Adams Thursday night proposed a long-range plan for the elimination of racial discrimination in Chapel Hill.

Dr. Adams' plan would involve the establishment of a permanent full-time local agency responsible for dealing with a wide variety of racial problems, and for making a wide variety of efforts to improve the situation of the Negro in Chapel Hill.

The proposal was made at a special meeting of the Human Relations Committee with members of the Chapel Hill School Board, the Mayor's Mediation Committee, the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen, the Orange County Board of Commissioners, and the Inter-Church Council.

The 18 people at the meeting agreed unanimously that a committee from the group present should draw up a finished proposal, investigate the mechanics of putting the proposal into effect, and present the proposal and the means for implementing it to the Board of Aldermen for approval.

"The Human Relations Committee has the feeling," said Committee chairman Mrs. George Taylor, "that Chapel Hill can be the kind of town that continues to make progress (in racial matters) despite the present turmoil."

Dr. Adams introduced his plan by pointing out that although people saw segregation as either wrong or right, "no significent education system could have been built in the South in the latter part of the 19th century except on a segregated basis."

Furthermore, Dr. Adams said, segregation has helped the Negro in many other ways. "But it has buit-in defects." It has also held back Negroes in many ways—the very success of segregation is in some ways itself a hindrance to progress.

"We are faced today with the dissolution of segregation as a social institution. We should not lament this. We should rejoice and be proud of this." Chapel Hill has not gone "all the way," nor will it easily, he said, but if racial discrimination is to be eliminated in Chapel Hill at all, "we can either be pushed every step of the way . . . or we can plan intelligently and work for it . . . We the people of Chapel Hill have the privilege of being at the right place at the right time to make a major breakthrough in the field of race relations."

Dr. Adams' proposal is that the Town of Chapel Hill "take the initiative in trying to solve

Peace Corps Tests Now Being Given

Representatives Here Until Friday

By PETE WALES

Juniors who wish to join the Peace Corps after graduation should apply now on the Senoir Year Program.

Peace Corps representatives are on the campus this week giving the Peace Corps test for students who wish to join this year and in 1965.

Juniors who are accepted on the Senior Year Program will go through the first part of their training this summer.

The six to eight week basic training program involves language and area studies in four areas:

1) English teaching in English speaking countries

2) English teaching in Latin America (Spanish)

3) English teaching in French speaking countries

4) Community development in Latin America.

Because of the limited number of applicants for this Senior Year Program, only these four areas will be open for summer trainees.

The community development instruction is offered to unskilled college students for Latin America only.

The Latin American countries have the skilled labor for community projects but need the organization of the volunteers. In most African countries, there is a need for skilled technicians and engineers to lead specific projects.

When this year's juniors graduate, they will go through a final four to six weeks specific training for the country to which they are assigned.

During both training periods, they may receive their $75 a month readjustment allowance if it is to be used for an educational debt. If it is for another purpose, all pay is withheld until the end of the two years of service when it is paid in a lump sum.

A movie of the volunteers in action will be shown today at 6:15 and 7 p.m. in Murphy Hall and tomorrow at 7 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

The Peace Corps Placement Test will be given today through Friday at 1, 3:30 and 7 p.m. in 106 Hanes Hall.

Students are asked to bring their completed questionnaires to the test. These may be picked up in Y-Court, Graham Memorial, Lenior Hall and the Library.

There are 600 openings for the Senior Year Program, and they are not yet filled, according to Swag Grimsley, one of the recruiters visiting the campus this

By NEIL SMITH and FRED SEELIY

A brand-new program designed to interest more UNC students in public service has been organized through joint efforts of Student Government and the Institute of Government.

The program, called "Careers for Carolina," will be held March 6 and will attract prominent speakers from a three-state area. Among the participants will be Chancellor William B. Aycock.

In announcing the conference, Mike Lawler, president of the student body, said that it will be open to the first 100 applicants, 25 juniors and freshmen and 50 sophomores. John Sanders, director of the Institute of Government, is working with Lawler on the seminar.

"I have appointed Lanny Shuff, a Student Party legislator, as student coordinator of the event. Lanny had experience of this type when he directed the SG side of the High School Debating Union weekend.

"I am certain that this program will be of significant value to the students, and I urge the members of the first three classes to consider attending," he added.

Shuff told the DTH yesterday that final plans had not yet ben compiled and he would announce later the location for applications.

Sessions will be held at Knapp Hall (Institute of Government building) from 9 a.m.-5:30 p.m. A luncheon is scheduled for the Carolina Inn at noon, and there will be a slight charge for this. All travel expenses for speakers will be paid by the Institute of Government and Student Government.

Among the faculty members participating in the seminar are Dorothy J. Kiester, social work consultant at the Institute of Government, who will speak on "Public Welfare;" V. L. Bounds, the Institute's director of the Training Center on Delinquency and Youth Crime, on "The Correction System;" Robert L. Stipe, assistant director of the Institute, on "City and County Planning;" and Chancellor Aycock on "Higher Education."

Guest speakers include George H. Esser, executive director of the North Carolina Fund; John A. McMahon, general counsel for the NC Association of County Commissioners; William J. Veeder, Charlotte's city manager; Carol Johnson, Guilford county manager; James Cook, Winston-Salem county manager; Claude Caldwell, supervisor of the NC Merit System; Jacob Koomen, assistant state health officer; and I. E. Ready, director of the Department of Community Colleges.

Also participating in the program will be John Ehle, special assistant to Governer Terry Sanford; and Joel Fleishman, Sanford's legal advisor.

Political Union May Reorganize

The Carolina Political Union may be on the rise again.

The organization, established in 1936 but discontinued in 1954, is credited with being the most stimulating and active group ever to appear on the Carolina campus.

The CPU began with ideas formulated by a group of friends in a political science class. After studying political unions at Oxford, Cambridge and Harvard, the group drafted a constitution providing for a limited membership with the purpose of discussing political questions and bringing to the campus outstanding representatives of varying political and social viewpoints.

It brought speakers to Carolina ranging from Franklin D. Roosevlt and Earl Browder to a Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan.

It is also credited with the founding of the YDC and the YRC on campus.

The group was discontinued in 1954 due to a difficulty in securing speakers.

A renewed interest in the union has been shown and an attempt will be made to revitalize it as an open forum for all viewpoints.

The first meeting in an effort to restore the group will be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Grail Room.

Lowenstein To Speak At Di-Phi

Noted civil rights leader Al Lowenstein is scheduled to deliver a speech to the Di-Phi Senate entitled "Report on Mississippi" Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Phi Hall.

Lowenstein, a graduate of the class of 1949, is assistant professor of social studies at NC State and author of the book, "Brutal Mandate," which concerns the apathy of the passage of the South African Mandate.

He has spoken before the United Nations on the South African situation.

Lowenstein recently took a leave of absence from his teaching duties to go to Mississippi and organize a civil rights movement for NAACP and CORE, which included running a Negro for governor of the state.

The talk is being sponsored by the Di-Phi Senate.

STATE TICKETS

The UNC ticket office announced yesterday that "a few" tickets remain for this Saturday's contest with NC State, to be played in Raleigh. These can be purchased at Woollen Gym for $1.50 and $2.50, but the office stressed the fact that the supply was limited.

Tickets for the game will also be available Saturday at Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh.

Dix Hill Volunteers Are Needed

Want to do something worthwhile this spring?

Volunteers and interested students will meet today at 3 p.m. in Graham Memorial to work out the spring schedule for the YMCA Dix Hill Volunteers.

The program involves one to two hour visits to the Dix Hill mental hospital every other week.

Volunteers talk to the patients and play games with them. In the spring there are outdoor activities as well.

"The patients are so shut up all the time, they're delighted to see people, particularly young people, from the outside," one volunteer said.

"It's very rewarding when you can communicate with one of these people," said another. "You learn something about life."

There were about 25 volunteers during the fall, according to Committee Chairman Joe Burns. More are expected this spring.

...Down She Comes

Mr. Aker's Note Brings Acres Of Rebuttals

Thanks!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Mr. Dick Akers, to his great satisfaction, finds himself relieved of the responsibility of considering the problem of discrimination, by the fact that many white demonstrators are "shaggyheaded, unkempt, 'beatnik'" types. He should perhaps propose this convenient solution of problems to the United Nations or other such groups which are having difficulties.

These young people of shaggy and unkempt appearance are expressing their dissatisfaction with and refusal to accept the superficial values of a large part of our society, which concentrates on appearances and frantically ignores serious moral issues, to which it prefers a smug moralism. The form of their potest may be questioned or considered immature, but it is preferable to the servile conformity that is so widespread, especially on this campus.

Furthermore, if Mr. Akers considers these people maladjusted, he might consider the fact that his position is more fundamentally out of harmony with the spirit of the times. His clutching at privileges based upon his color is doomed to fail eventually, and he will have to find some other way to "channel his frustrations."

It is a very sad situation if people such as Mr. Akers have never considered the shameful way in which (black) human beings are treated in this country, which professes ideals of human dignity, freedom, and equal opportunity for all citizens; it is, however, inexcusable and a clear case of evasion of responsibility if he uses the appearance of some people in the demonstrations to justify his attitude.

'But It Would Have Been Inconvenient'

Every now and then something comes along which not only shocks and angers us, but saddens us at the same time. Such was the case when we first heard that the Chi Omega's had held their initiation banquet at The Pines Restaurant Sunday night.

The Pines is one of the local establishments which remains segregated in spite of the pleadings of the Mayor's various committees, local citizens, and the picketing and demonstrations of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee.

Mike Lawler, President of the Student Body, and the Student Legislature have both urged students to boycott these remaining segregated establishments which will not serve a portion of our student body. Response to this boycott request has been good, and it seemed to have at least a slim chance of changing the form of demonstrations against racial discrimination in Chapel Hill.

But the Chi Omega's held their banquet at The Pines, and limply explained that they had made their reservations long before the student leaders had called for the boycott. This explanation has absolutely no validity. The Pines has been on the list of segregated businesses since the early part of last summer, and we don't believe that anyone who lives in Chapel Hill could possibly be ignorant of the fact that it has been the scene of several demonstrations in recent months.

If Chi Omega had not wished to support a segregated restaurant, it wouldn't have taken a request from Lawler or the legislature. They wouldn't have thought of going there in the first place. Secondly, if it did take a request from these sources, they had ample time to cancel their reservations and reschedule the banquet. Granted, this would cause some inconvenience to the sorority, but we would like them to compare their inconvenience with that of those people who can't eat there because they are black.

As we said, all of this saddens us a little, but what we find most disheartening is that Bev Hanes, the Chi O President, and many other members have long been against the injustices of racial discrimination. We find it almost impossible to comprehend that not one out of the 60 women in the house raised a voice in dissent, or finding her dissent ignored, refused to participate in the banquet.

In patronizing The Pines the Chi O's have reinforced the stand of the segregationists, done a disservice to their student government, and further harmed the image of the Greek system which is currently under so much fire nationally on this same issue.

Should You Or Shouldn't You?

The Charlotte Observer

Should you offer a cigar to the lady?

There's evidence that it may save the cigar smoker a great deal of trouble.

Take a fellow named Jay Silberman of New York. The other day he got on a jet plane to San Francisco and took a seat beside singing comedienne Kay Stevens.

Talk about smoking more and enjoying it less! Mr. Silberman was puffing away when Miss Stevens reached over to his coat pocket and crushed his remaining cigars.

Mr. Silberman went looking for a policeman when the plane landed. The confirmed cigar smoker will not be surprised that he wanted to prefer assault and battery charges against the singer.

Deputy Sheriff Frank Bastastini turned conciliator when Miss Stevens complained that Mr. Silberman "was blowing that vile smoke in my face." After all, he too had read the smoking-and-health report from the federal government.

"Would it be all right," asked Bastastini, "if Miss Stevens bought you some new cigars?"

"I don't want any cigars from HER!" retorted the complainant. He stormed out of the terminal cigarless.

Surely a lady, a comedienne at that, wouldn't have had the heart to put the crush on Mr. Silberman's cigars if he had taken a seat, given her a sidelong glance and graciously offered her what up until now has been considered a man's smoke.

There's a lot we can learn about life just by paying attention to the commercials.

Keep 'Em Coming

It was heartening indeed to see Ray Farris' name on that letter Sunday, supporting the call from President Mike Lawler and Student Legislature for a boycott of establishments which practice racial discrimination.

It was equally heartening to see the letter from UNC Law Professor Kenneth L. Penegar the day before; and the individual and group letters from students to the same effect.

This is strong evidence that the people who count are the ones who are willing to stand up and be counted on the side of social justice.

Take Farris, who's now a UNC graduate student, for example. President of the Senior Class in his undergraduate years here not long ago; starting quarterback on UNC's football team; a member of the Order of the Golden Fleece; and, most recently, Coordinator of the State Intern Program.

Saying all this will probably embarrass Ray, as he's an exceedingly modest guy. But, significantly, he is not modest about declaring where he stands on the moral question of racial discrimination which faces all of us as students and citizens.

We are confident that our fellow students and faculty members will continue the flow of declarations against discrimination.

'The Shake'

From The Nashville Tennessean

Presumably having exhausted themselves with the twist, the British younger set has turned to a new dance craze called "the shake."

An approximation of what it is like could be gained by nailing a dancer's shoes to the floor and dumping a bottle of black ants down his back. "The shake" also has variations, one of which is called the Zizzle. This could be simulated by exchanging big red ants for little black ones.

All this will probably appall an older generation — provided nobody reminds it of the shimmy, which could only be approximated by both little black ants and big red ones.

Sad Situation

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I would like to compliment Dick Akers, the treasurer of the student body, on his observations concerning the character of the white "dregs of society" who have participated in the demonstrations that have become familiar to the people of Chapel Hill and students at the University.

With horror I realized that I was one of those "shaggy-headed, unkempt beatnik types" whom Mr. Akers describes. I remembered how clean cut and well kempt the students, who stood around the sidewalks cracking funny jokes and making witty comments about the demonstrators, were. I remembered how repulsive we were compared to them.

Immediately after reading Mr. Akers's letter, I went down to the barber shop to get my shaggy head cut and combed. From there I went to the shoe store to buy a pair of pebble-grained weejuns.

Now I am very secure and am no longer bothered by frustrations.

Thank you, Dick Akers, treasurer of the student body.

Sick And Sorry

Editors, The Tar Heel:

As I live several miles to the north, this year has been the first time I have had the opportunity to witness the southern reaction to racial demonstrations in Chapel Hill. One of the things that impressed me about the southern reaction was that the bulk of the southerners protesting the demonstrations appeared to be empty-headed, self-righteous, "bigot" type. Under any circumstances, these people have always been to me rather pathetic, but especially so when they channel their frustrations into a protest against civil rights.

Being a member of the group which supports the demonstrations as well as what they stand for, I felt very sick and sorry Friday morning when I read Dick Akers letter in the Tar Heel; for as long as white people like him walk the face of the Earth, the cause of the black man can only be retarded.

Dismissals

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The decison of Attorney General Whitney Durand to dismiss thirty-five cases involving sit-in demonstrations exhibits weak, if not simply circular, reasoning on his part.

In the test case tried last week, the defense attorneys based their arguments on the "ethical question" of sit-ins, dependent upon particular circumstances involved in the case; to wit, "the time, place, and motivation behind it." The Men's Honor Council reiterated this view and added that the judgment must also consider "extent or degree of action."

Thus Mr. Bynum's actions were deemed in accordance with the Campus Code—in light, it was emphasized, of the particular attendant circumstances.

The grave inconsistency arises in the decision to drop all thirty-five sit-in cases on the assumption that any verdict reached would be similar to that of the precedent case. Now it was made quite clear by the chairman of the Men's Honor Council that acquital of the Negro student was totally dependent on the circumstances involved in his particular case. It is inconsistent to dispose of all the other sit-in cases when we realize that the time, place, extent, etc., would be completely different in each of them.

It is an established procedure to dismiss cases when it is deemed that their trials would be a mere recital of the precedent. However, if we must consider the time-place-extent factor involved in the sit-in demonstrations, the picture changes: each case is entirely independent of the "precedent" tried last week.

A Minority

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I do not believe that Mike Lawler represents "all the students of the University", as Bruce Cooper has stated. I do not believe that the Student Legislature voices the opinions of the students by supporting him. There is, in public politics, a check on an office holder's actions. If the majority does not agree with him and what he does, they simply will replace him on the next election day. This is not true with the President of the Student Body. He can do as he pleases, without worrying about whether or not he will be re-elected—he will have graduated anyway. Therefore, he is at liberty to express the views of any group he wishes, even though that group is in the minority. I am certain that he has done this by urging that students boycott those establishments that are not completely integrated. I believe that these businessmen should be free to run their businesses as they see fit. This, I am sure, is what the framers of the Constitution had in mind when they included individual property rights in the Constitution.

Mike Lawler surely must realize that his views represent a minority rather than the majority who elected him. But, he will not have to suffer the consequences that the public politicians suffer when they make such a mistake in judgment. I wonder how many votes he would get if he were to run for President of the Student Body again.

Buy And Sell

AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. MICHAEL H. LAWLER, PRESIDENT, THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA STUDENT BODY.

Dear Mr. Lawler,

I was ecstatic to learn of your amazing ability to "buy and sell Attorney Generals," for as you no doubt know, sir, dealers in this particular commodity are few and far between. Well, sir, to get to the point of this letter, I have looked high and I have looked low. I have looked up and I have looked down, but to this date, sir, I have been unable to find a genuine "Johnny-on-the-Spot" minion, I mean Attorney General. And you see, sir, being that you are in the business that you are in and all, I was thinking that you might be able to dig me one up—CHEAP. I am pretty sure that he would be. Actually, sir, I cannot understand for the life of me why you have not already sent me one, being that with all your extrasensory perception, you have known that I have wanted one all along. Oh, in case you cannot make any intelligent recommendation to me at this time, the United Press International has a marvelous service through which you might advertise for what you want, then in turn try to sell it to me. Everything will be just rosey, and maybe everybody else will get interested and you can expand your little business. Well, I have got to run-toot-ta-loo, sir.

Thanks for everylittlething,

15 Per Cent

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The Student Legislature does not find significant a petition signed by over 15 per cent of the student body. In a single day, 1500 people were sought out, approached, and convinced, in those few cases where any convincing was necessary. Not one student outside of that group of Olympians on Mount Graham Memorial, went on record as supporting the petition opposing this proposal.

Last year the petition urging the sending of the hurry-up-and-integrate telegram to Ole Miss received far less support, but the telegram was sent. This year the Legislature seems to have lost its interest in campus opinion.

The Student Government constitution only requires petition by 10 per cent to institute referendum. True, our petition did not request referendum but when we circulated it Tuesday night's infamy had not yet occurred and we still had hopes that those people who claim to be our representatives might try to act as such.

It's a shame we were so naive. No one could deny the significance of a referendum petition. The constitution sees to that.

Last spring, after weeks of campaigning, Mike Lawler could persuade only about 30 per cent of the student body to support his election by secret ballot. This winter things are different. Fifteen per cent of the student body after only one day's canvassing were willing to oppose Mr. Lawlers' boycott with their names exposed to public view on the most-signed petition in recent campus history. The opinion of this 15 per cent was not significant.

Impeachment?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Some of the student legislators remembered last Tuesday night that they were representing the student body. We owe a vote of confidence to those eleven legislators who voted against the Lawler-inspired, Jackson-Murphey resolution. We owe nothing, except maybe impeachment, to the twenty-two other legislators who rooked us by running for election as representatives last spring, and satisfied their own political whims Tuesday night by passing a resolution which is contrary to the public opinion on this campus.

Representative Murphey stated that, "Many may be alienated by this bill, but it is our job at times to lead our constituents." Well, thanks, but no thanks! The student government was elected not to do our thinking for us, but to reflect our thoughts. Furthermore, I know of no candidate who stated before election that he would at times lead us, even though we might be alienated by such leadership. The legislators were elected representatives of the student body; twenty-two of them are representing a minority movement on this campus.

Each member of this community has the right of individual boycott of any business, and he may exercise this right for any purpose he pleases, but for a legislative body to call for a mass boycott of a private business is a leftist action which would be more at home in the Kremlin. Preach to us of discrimination, inconsistent liberals! Tell us to end one boycott by inacting another! Win freedom of opportunity and destroy it with one stroke!

I am confident that the majority of students at Carolina can see the inconsistency of obtaining equal opportunity for one group by taking it from another. I am confident that most students here want equal opportunity for all Americans, regardless of race or religion. I am also confident that a majority of the students realize that moral problems cannot be solved by irresponsible legislation. I am confident that if merchants are not pushed in violation of their rights, they will realize their moral obligation, maybe not by tomorrow or by Easter Sunday, but as it becomes morally and economically expedient to them.

Our student government does not reflect such a philosophy. They have disregarded a petition containing 1500 signatures urging them to take a position which reflects student opinion. They said that 1500 signatures out of 10,000 students is insignificant. Doubtless they realized that less than 60% of the students vote in most campus elections, and also that almost every person approached signed the petition.

We must write off Lawler and his cabinet as a bad political investment, unless someone wants to start impeachment proceedings, but we must remember the political opportunists who passed the resolution of Feb. 12 when election time rolls around. We must show a continued support of the legislators who represented the majority opinion of this campus by voting against the bill.

If President Lawler honestly thinks he is right, why doesn't he put the public accommodations question on 10,000 ballots and clear his doubts?

week.

Grimsley and five other Peace Corps officials will be speaking to 57 classes during the week.

"Some of the talks have been only five or ten minutes, and others have gone on for an hour," Grimsley said.

The other recruiters are: Joan Lund, program officer for Iran; Shannon Harper, administrative assistant; Marcia Stein, assessment officer in the selection division; Dr. Charles Neff, associate representative for Colombia; and Ed Fisher.

racial problems, and keep it until the problems are solved." Specifically, he proposed:

—That a clear declaration be made of the Town's firm intentions "to lick the race problem in Chapel Hill."

—That a clear statement of what has happened, what is happening, and what is planned in racial matters be published.

—That a professional agency with a board of citizens be established to work full time to solve the race problem.

Dr. Adams said he did not know whether this agency would be officially a part of the Town's government, or unofficial "with official blessings." It would, however, hear grievances, plan projects, and seek funds. It would "try to compensate in various ways for the inequality school," and would also try to improve the Negro situation with a day care center, work with the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, adult education, a job placement service, and coordination with the Chapel Hill Housing Authority, among other means.

Mrs. Taylor, who had been informed of Dr. Adams' proposal before the meeting, said the Human Relations Committee hoped to get financial help "from the major foundations" to finance a professional staff for the agency for 10-12 years.

Those at the meeting reacted favorably. Alderman Hubert Robinson said work should begin on the proposal immediately. County Commissioner Gordon Cleveland said the day care center recently proposed by Orange County for financial assistance from the North Carolina Fund would work well with such an agency's intentions. School Board member Mrs. Ross Scroggs said people perturbed about the present racial situation in Chapel Hill might find the proposal a means of taking hold of the total problem locally. Alderman Mrs. Harold Walters said she thought the proposal, if put into effect, might well improve the morale of the community a great deal.

D. S. Coltrane, chairman of the Governor's Good Neighbor Council, said he thought it possible that Federal funds could be gotten to help finance the project.

Mrs. Taylor said she thought it possible that the agency's administrative expenses could be financed with foundation funds, its projects financed with Federal funds.

A public accommodations law will probably not be part of the proposal put before the Board of Aldermen. Mayor Sandy McClamroch said Dr. Adams had spoken to him about the idea first, and that he had thought it a very good one. "But as you get a committee you get a ed with many committees during the past few months, and let's call a spade a spade, every time you get a committe you get a block in front of it. The block right now is a public accommodations law. I think this (proposal) can work, but I don't think it can work if a public accommodations law is part of it. A public accommodations law might come about from this, and that would be fine, but if it's part of it right at the beginning I don't think it will work."

Mrs. Taylor said after the meeting that the committee charged with drawing up the proposal and investigating its governmental mechanics would include a member of the School Board, a member of the County Commissioners, someone with knowledge of sources of financing, someone with knowledge of how best to interest industry in locating in the Chapel Hill area, and someone with a knowledge of governmental structure.

Earthquake? Here? There Sure Are!

By MAT FRIEDMAN

To most people, an earthquake is something you read about in the papers but never experience. So it may come as a surprise to find out that earthquakes are a pretty common occurrence in North Carolina.

According to Dr. Gerald MacCarthy of the Department of Geology, they have even occurred here in Chapel Hill. He points out, however, that most occur in the mountains or on the coast, chiefly near Wilmington.

"Most of the earthquakes here are very small," he says. The last one to occur in this area took place near Galax, Va., in October, but it was felt in about four North Carolina counties."

Dr. MacCarthy, who has been studying the tremors for 10 years, explains that he is trying to correlate their occurrence with the geology of the areas in which they occur. "We like to know where they occur," he says, "how strong they are, how deep underground they take place, and when possible, what causes them.

"Those in the mountains are a result of the constant mountain building activity that is always taking place. Although this building is too small to be detected by the human eye, it does cause small quakes. We don't know what causes the earthquakes near the coast."

The actual work of detecting disturbances is done by the department's seismograph. Earthquakes which occur as much as thousands of miles away, says Dr. MacCarthy, cause some movement of the ground in Chapel Hill. The seismograph magnifies this movement 25,000 times and records it on film. It is so sensitive, in fact, that even the vibration caused by the movement of Chapel Hill traffic is recorded.

"We pick up earthquakes from Asia and South America every month," he says. "We even picked up the largest of the Russian nuclear explosions in 1961." At the moment, Dr. MacCarthy is busy adjusting a new seismograph which will make earthquake detecting easier.

"Actually," says Dr. MacCarthy, "North Carolina is a very average state as far as the number of earthquakes is concerned. Virginia has a few more than we do. The biggest earthquake state is California.

"Big earthquakes in this area are very rare. The last one occurred in South Carolina in 1886 but it was a honey. It caused millions of dollars in damage and many deaths, and was felt as far north as New York City. Total damage from all the North Carolina earthquakes has been almost negligible."

What happens when these tremors occur? Do people become frightened?

"They usually react in one of two ways," says Dr. MacCarthy. "Some say it feels like an autotruck hitting their house. Others report it sounds like a jet plane flying overhead. Some people just sleep through it."

Alone In Second Place, Will UNC Stay There At Maryland Tonight?

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Three overtime games and a three-point decision ago (before the Charlotte weekend) four teams flitted around the ACC's second place. Now there is one.

Despite its second double-overtime defeat of the year to Clemson Friday, North Carolina takes the floor against Maryland tonight alone in the league's runnerup spot.

Clemson's 45-43 overtime loss to N. C. State Saturday coupled with the UNC 84-81 decision over South Carolina left the Tar Heels at 6-4 and the two South Carolina clubs at 5-5. Wake Forest, pending outcome of tonight's game with first place Duke (10-0) is 5-4.

UNC has its place only after weathering a splendid shooting performance by Ronnie Collins on the second night of the most successful North-South series in history.

A two-night crowd of 19,500 attended the Coliseum show, and 11,611 of them were there Saturday as Collins brought South Carolina back from a 40-31 deficit at half to a 79-78 lead with 2:30 left in the game.

Collins scored a remarkable 29 points in the second half after being saddled with three fouls during the first period. The 6-3 jump shooter finished with 35 (breaking Billy Cunningham's one-day-old record of 33) but his last point came a bit too soon, and he left on fouls 14 seconds before the end.

Mike Cooke scored two fouls at 1:15 to give the lead back to UNC, but Jimmy Collins tipped in a bucket for a Gamecock margin (81-80) with 46 seconds remaining.

Cunningham then drove around John Gorsage underneath for the deciding basket at :26. He missed his free throw and another one seven seconds later. UNC kept possession, however, and Bill Brown missed a one-and-one.

The Tar Heels again got the rebound, Charlie Shaffer was fouled, and his two free throws got the 84-81 win with three seconds left.

Ronnie Collins' 16 for 27 floor performance may have been averted with Bryan McSweeney in the UNC lineup. But the Tar Heel forward went home to New York Saturday morning with stomach pains, and Collins was able to break the North - South field goal record—probably because of it.

Cunningham got 27 points Saturday and, with 33 against Clemson Friday, established another North-South mark for two games.

His 25 rebounds against South Carolina (15 in the first half) fell two short of his own record set last year.

Perhaps the most pleasing aspect of a week which saw UNC lose two games they could have won—and win another by less than they should have—was the resurgence of Mike Cooke.

"We've been kidding Mike about the new shoes he got before the NYU game," Coach Dean Smith said Monday. "But it looks like something sure has helped him."

Cooke, displaced as a starter in the Wake Forest game, got 15 points against NYU last Wednesday and kept the Tar Heels in the game after Cunningham left on personals.

But it was his performance over the weekend that really brought the raves. He shot nine for 17 from the floor against Clemson and added three foul shots for 21 points. In the South Carolina game, he scored 24 on 11 of 13 field goals and two free throws.

Tonight, UNC meets that precocious Maryland team that can, and sometimes does, start five sophomores.

The Terps are 4-5 now in league play (8-11 over-all) after a 79-77 loss to Wake Forest Friday night at home. But Maryland can also be tough on the road as its 97-88 loss here in the middle of Januaryp roved.

It took Cunningham's personal high of points (40) and a school rebound record (28) before the young Terrapins went down.

Four of Coach Bud Millikan's sophs scored in double figures in the teams' first meeting. Mike DeCosmo, a 5-10 guard, had 19, George Suder 15, Gary Ward 14 6-8 center Rick Wise 12.

Two other sophomores and a senior who is making a big comeback provide Maryland with seven top-notch ballplayers. Scott Ferguson (the 6-10 senior) is making a strong late - season drive, has started the last six games and has averaged about 15 in all of them.

Neil Brayton and Jackie Clark, the sophs, are both averaging over eight points a game and one may start tonight for Suder.

It was in the first Maryland game that Bryan McSweeney got the chance to show he has not lost the drive that made him an outstanding sophomore.

McSweeney was playing the best basketball of his career when the mysterious stomach ailment sent him home from Charlotte Saturday.

Smith, however, was to talk to McSweeney over long - distance last night and expected the 6-5 senior to be recovered.

"Bryan probably will fly down to College Park Tuesday and meet us there," said Smith. "We'll sure take his uniform with us. He will start if he's completely okay."

The UNC coach didn't figure on any other changes in his lineup which will include Cunningham at center, Cooke and Shaffer at the guards and Ray Respess and McSweeney or Billy Galantai at the forwards.

Cunningham is now averaging 26.8 points and 16.6 rebounds a game. Look for Billy and Jeff Mullins to make the Look All-America; Fred Hetzel to be left out.

Duke Rated 4th; Davidson Drops

NEW YORK (UPI)—Unbeaten UCLA moved within two votes of a unanimous first-place ranking Monday in the weekly United Press International major college basketball ratings, which underwent the most sweepng change of the season.

Except for UCLA, which ranked No. 1 for the seventh consecutive week, not a single member of the top 20 retained the ranking it held last week.

Michigan recaptured second place from Kentucky. The Wildcats of Coach Adolph Rupp slipped to third but deprived UCLA of a perfect rating by grabbing the remaining two first-place ballots. UCLA was ranked No. 1 by 33 of the 35 coaches on the UPI rating board.

Duke, riding a 10-game winning streak, surged to fourth-place and Villanova (19-2) leaped from ninth to the No. 5 spot. Oregon State (21-3) advanced two places to sixth.

Upset victims filled the 7-8-9 spots. Wichita, knocked from the Missouri Valley lead by Drake, dropped to seventh and Vanderbilt (17-4), which has lost three games by a total of eight points, skidded to ninth after losses to Georgia Tech and Tennessee.

Davidson, also beaten twice last week, fell from fourth to eighth and Loyola of Chicago edged back into the top 10 in 10th, replacing Texas Western, No. 11.

Drake (No. 12), DePaul (No. 13) and Ohio State (No. 14) made significant gains in the second 10. Ohio State, after losing five of its first 10 games has rebounded to within one game of leading Michigan in the Big 10 race while Drake wrested the Missouri Valley lead from Wichita.

San Francisco, the West Coast Athletic Conference leader, made its first appearance on the ratings, tying Utah for 15th. Tennessee, only a half-game behind first-place Kentucky and Georgia in the Southeastern Conference race, tied Texas A&M, the Southwest Conference leader, for 17th. New Mexico, the Western Conference leader, ranked 19th and Utah State, 20th.

Solon Blasts Fin(ished)ley

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Sen. Stuart Symington, (D-Mo.) on the eve of the Senate's anti-trust hearing on baseball, told the American League Monday that Kansas City Athletics owner Charles O. Finley should be called to account for damaging the reputation of baseball.

Symington made the statement in a telegram to Joe Cronin, league president. He also sent a copy of the message to Sen. Philip Hart (D-Mich) chairman of the Senate's anti-trust and monopoly subcommittee, which will conduct Tuesday's hearing.

"Mr. Finley has been and is trying to coerce and intimidate you and the club owners in order to achieve his own selfish gains," Symington said in the telegram to Cronin.

Cabe Makes Right Decision – Matmen Win

By PETE GAMMONS

North Carolina's matmen pulled off an impressive upset Saturday night in defeating Duke, 22-6, to close out its record at 5-5, the best in recent years.

In the highlight bout of the night, Jerry Cabe finished up a year he won't forget for some time. In football, he was the star guard on the Gator Bowl club which beat Duke in the most exciting local game of the year.

As wrestling captain, he finished out the year undefeated, and in doing it, decisioned the Blue Devils' monstrous (6-7, 250) Luke Sharp, who had never lost a match in his life. Cabe's victory makes him one of the top heavyweight men in the country, for Sharp is nationally known.

Jerry's win was by no means the margin of victory however.

A forfeit to Steve Lister (177) was the clinching point, for at the time the Tar Heels led, 14-6.

Earlier Carolina burst to an 11-0 lead after wins by Paul Wellstone (123), Ken Furr (130) and Russ Simmons (137).

Wellstone's win, also coming by forfeit, capped an undefeated and untied season. Other Carolina victories were scored by Dick Blackmon (157), Lister and Cabe.

The only losses were at the expense of Glen Haggerty (147) and Elliott Dworin (167). It was a well earned victory, especially considering last week's double losses.

The UNC freshmen lost their first match of the year to the undefeated Blue Imps, 16-13.

Wayne Verlenden (147) and Bill Johnson (heavyweight) closed out perfect seasons despite the team loss, Johnson's coming on a pin in 47 seconds.

Jimmy Goodwin (130) also finished unbeaten, although he was tied by Duke. Jake Jacobson (157) was the other winner for the Tar Babies. Bill Quarrells (177), Tom Oxford (167), Skip Meyers (137) and Rick Stedman (123) lost.

Despite the loss, the Frosh ended a fine 6-1 season, and hopefully will send help to some of the weak varsity spots.

For the varsity, Wellstone and Cabe both ended unbeaten, although Cabe was tied twice in seven matches. Lister and Blackmon both lost twice.

MRC Joins National Association

First Southern School In Assn.

By PETE WALES

UNC has become the first university in the South to join the National Association of College and University Residence halls.

The Men's Residence Council voted last week to join the organization founded last year at the University of Denver.

"This organization is strictly non-political," MRC President Gerry Good said. "It is not like NSA.

"This organization was started solely for students. It will deal with problems related to their lives and living quarters on the campus."

Good listed problems of construction, state aid, social life, counseling and management as concerns of the association.

The organization now consists of 250,000 students from 33 schools. Most of the members are in the Midwest.

The MRC will send Good with the president-elect and the vice-president-elect to a conference of eastern members at Penn State April 10.

UNC will also send delegates to the national convention April 25 at the University of Denver.

Meanwhile, the MRC plans to try recruiting other schools in the southeast. Good is optimistic about getting more members because of the non-political nature of the organization. Southern schools have long ignored organizations such as NSA because of their liberal political orientations.

The two conventions will meet to discuss problems and share information on their solution.

The national office issues a monthly newsletter and maintains an information service. It also publishes an annual report on the national conference.

The association sponsors an internship program organized similar to a student exchange. Students and recent graduates go to a different college or uni-

Stewart, a Methodist minister herself, is married to a Methodist minister, Dr. Alexander Stewart. She has worked as a lobbyist in Washington for many years and has traveled widely in Europe and the Middle East.

In November, 1961, Mrs. Stewart participated in the first conference of American and Soviet women which was held under the auspices of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and the Jane Addams Peace Association at Bryn Mawr College. This April she will be a member of the delegation which will continue those sessions in Moscow.

In 1963 she was a member of the six-woman delegation that spent two weeks in Poland at the invitation of the League of the Polish Women — a visit which grew out of the attendance of the Polish women as observers at the 1959 and 1962 International Congresses of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Mrs. Stewart was a delegate to both those Congresses.

UN Intern Program Is Announced

Committees Compromise On Pickets

By JIM CLOTFELTER
In The Durham Herald

The Human Relations Committee and a group opposing the Board of Aldermen's ban on night picketing both have made concessions this week in hopes of ending a dispute neither side wants.

The committee has conceded that picketing should be allowed later than 7 p.m., the cutoff time set by the aldermen last week.

The anti-restriction group has conceded that some restriction on time can be made.

Mayor Sandy McClamroch asked Mrs. George Taylor, chairman of the Human Relations Committee, to discuss the picketing dis-

Compromise Is Seen On New Election Date

By JOHN GREENBACKER

A compromise on the spring election date was made by officials of both parties at a meeting of student government's Judiciary Committee yesterday.

April 14, the date originally recommended by the Elections Board as being most convenient, was confirmed as the best by committee members and the chairmen of both University and Student Parties.

Controversy over the date began Feb. 6 when Legislature voted to set the elections for March 24.

On Feb. 1, a SP motion to rescind the March 24 date was defeated when Speaker Bob Spearman broke a tie to vote against it.

Last Thursday another SP motion to rescind was passed by an easy majority, and the election date was changed to April 21.

University Party leaders, unhappy over the new date, issued various charges against the SP.

When Phil Baddour, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, proposed the committee take up changes in the election laws and asked representatives of interested groups to attend yesterday's meeting, UP Floor Leader Don Carson said, "I hope that the SP bosses will rise above partisan considerations in the best interests of the student body."

When the problems of scheduling the Symposium, the Mock Political Convention and the DTH publication dates were added to the problems arising from the change of administration, all attending the meeting agreed the Elections Board's suggestion of April 14 should be accepted.

Proclaiming Student Legislature's actions of the last few weeks on this matter as "looking ridiculous," Baddour said Elections Board Chairman Arthur Hays had the right to say, "I told you so."

The date should be officially changed at the next meeting of the Legislature.

ChiO Makes Statement On Initiation Banquet

Chi Omega sorority yesterday answered charges made by DTH editors Gary Blanchard and Dave Ethridge that they had "done a disservice to student government."

The sorority issued its statement after a news story appeared in yesterday's newspaper reporting the picketing of the sorority at the Pines Restaurant on highway 54. The restaurant is on the list of segregated establishments which the student body has been urged to boycott by President Mike Lawler and the Student Legislature.

The newspaper carried an editorial titled, "But It Would Have Been Inconvenient," citing reasons why the sorority should not have held their banquet at the Pines.

In the statement, the sorority said that it "regrets that its recent dinner for initiates had been interpreted as disregard of university policy or of what is claimed to be student government policy.

"Our social activities are planned long in advance. The possible places and dates for a dinner for 65 are limited and cannot be changed on the spur of the moment.

"In proceeding with this dinner as planned, we have violated neither university or student government regulations."

Papers At 4 Ill. Schools Censored

CHAMPAIGN, Ill (CPS) — The student newspapers at the four Illinois state teachers' universities will have all copy censored by a faculty appointee in the future.

The announcement of the policy was made Monday by the Illinois Teachers College Board, which regulates policy for Illinois State University at Normal, Eastern Illinois University, Western Illinois University and Northern Illinois University.

The policy states in part, "a competent faculty sponsor shall have the right to examine all copy presented for publication, including headlines, nad shall be authorized to correct and edit copy to meet the standards of accuracy and good usage and finally, he shall scan proofs of each page of type and have the authority usually vested in the director of a privately owned publication of general circulation."

The action apparently resulted from the dismissal several weeks ago of John Woods, student editor of the Eastern State News. He tried to print an article which allegedly would have been libelous.

Connie Schneider, who has been named to succeed Woods, said the new policy could curtail the student editors of the paper.

"The faculty adviser is, in effect, the editor if he desires," she said.

Royal A. Stipes, head of the board, said Monday night the policy does not amount to any censorship. According to him, each university always has had a policy similar to this, but the board never has formalized it before.

The statement emphasized that the policy only "reaffirms and formally states" the regulation.

Quincy Doudna, president of Eastern Illinois University, said after the meeting Monday, that the policy "does not in any way change existing policy at Eastern Illinois University.

Woods said that Eastern has always had the power to supress news in the paper, but that it has never exercised its authority before.

Kenneth Hesler, adviser to the Eastern State News, said Eastern's policy regarding student publications is consistent with the board's announced policy. "I foresee no changes, or plan no changes, in my practice or duties as a result of the board policy," he said.

The board's resolution stated:

"All campus publications (of the four universities) are a part of the university functions and are responsible to the university authority, which in turn is responsible for them to the Teachers College Board and the State of Illinois.

"The university administration is accountable . . . for the management and content of all university publication . .

"The fullest freedom of expression, in university publications, should be encouraged, but all such expressions must meet the tests of truth, fairness and judgment, as well as acceptable journalistic standards. The same rules relating to factual content, libel and judicious expression of opinion that apply to publications generally must also be applied to university publications.

Rent Referendum Passed By MRC For Next Election

A referendum to raise room rents $.30 a semester to pay for the intramural managers program has been passed by the Men's Residence Council and will be voted on by students in April.

The program, as it now stands, was initiated this fall by Vice-President Bob Spearman. Student Government pays half the funds required and the administration pays the rest.

The rent increase will bring in $2,250.00, half the cost of paying the intramural managers for one year.

If the students vote for the referendum and the administration consents to continue paying their half, the program will become permanent.

A report issued by Spearman and MRC President Gerry Good shows an increase since last year of 153 teams in residence hall

Would You Please Pass The No-Doze?

HAMINA, Finland (UPI) — A non-sleeping Finn who claims he hasn't dozed off for the past two weeks challenged three Canadians Tuesday to match his record.

The sleepless Finn, crane operator Tioimi Silvo, 51, learned in a telephone conversation with a Helsinki newspaper that three Canadians had entered the contest.

Silvo proposed that the four get together.

"I challenge my three Canadian colleagues to a sleeplessness contest," said Silvo.

"The only condition is that we all keep awake in similar circumstances. Either they come to Finland or I go to Canada.

"I'm sure that someone else —not me—falls asleep first."

Silvo had passed the 14-day mark at 4 a.m. Tuesday, when he heard of the competition.

"I've just eaten a lot of potatoes and bread," he said, "and I've got strength enough to go on.

"I've got to keep awake for the Fatherland."

Silvo plans to keep going until Saturday, when he will have been awake 18 days. But he appeared to be getting weary, and there were doubts that he would hold out long.

He has, however, already remained awake longer than others who had been indulging in the pastime in recent months.

Dodo Bird And Silver Dollar Similar?

RENO, Nev. (UPI)The silver dollar, which has been wearing out pants pockets in Nevada since statehood was granted during the Civil War, may be going the way of the dodo bird.

This bit of shocking news to Nevadans, who are used to going around with a couple of pounds of "change" in their pockets, was announced by someone who should know—Eva Adams, director of the U.S. Mint.

Miss Adams, speaking like the true Nevadan she is, offered "eight-to-five-odds" that a congressional committee presently considering further manufacture of the famed "cartwheels" won't approve further minting of them.

Keep Them Cold Icy Fingers Off Of Me

GENEVA (UPI) — The Soviets dashed cold water Tuesday on President Johnson's proposal for a freeze on missile production but stopped short of rejecting it outright.

Instead, they returned to their old demand that all missiles be destroyed in the first stage of any disarmament program except for an unspecified number strictly limited to defense.

Canadian disarmament negotiator Gen. E. L. M. Burns told the 17-nation disarmament conference this would be like "buying a pig in a poke."

Tax Bill Nears The Final Stages

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House and Senate negotiators hastened to complete work Tuesday on a compromise tax cut bill and clear it for quick final congressional passage.

The compromise form of the priority bill, cornerstone of President's Johnson's good-times ahead economic policies, was being hammered out by a House-Senate conference committee in closed-door bargaining sessions.

If passed by both chambers this week, as backers hope, and signed by the President, millions of American wage earners will feel the impact in slightly higher paychecks the first week in March.

The bill provides top-to-bottom cuts in all tax brackets for 51 million taxpayers, and doles out a net $2.4 billion in extra relief to 576,000 corporations. Two-thirds of the tax reductions will be effective this election year.

IT'S DANCE TIME

The lessons will be given each Thursday from 7 to 8:30 p.m. That is, each Thursday night from March 5 to April 30. So save your money. The instructor needs his $7.50 an hour.

Thoughts On Our Half-Passed Ordinance

In spite of the adamant feelings of many people against the half-passed amendment to the picketing ordinance, and the characteristic refusal of the Board of Aldermen to think about or face the real issue, it is evident that some compromise can and should be reached.

The police force has been stretched thin and worked many hours overtime, and there isn't much chance of the officers getting adequate compensation for this work. This in no way justifies the passage of any ordinance limiting the hours of picketing, but it does demonstrate the need for some sort of solution.

We feel sure that most of the picketers would be willing to cooperate with the police force to the fullest extent possible, and we feel equally sure that they would violate any ordinance limiting picketing at every instance possible. These positions are in no way contradictory, and are both quite reasonable.

But recently there have been rumors that some of the anti-ordinance factions are ready to reach some compromise with the Aldermen which would allow the picketing hours to be extended, but still limited by law. We are not sure just who these people are compromising for, but we can assure them that any legal restrictions the Board of Aldermen attempts to impose will not be adhered to. We wholeheartedly endorse any group who wishes to make any voluntary agreements with the Chief of Police as to when they will picket, but we can not accept any restrictions on hours the Aldermen might wish to impose on all of us.

Mrs. George Taylor, chairman of the Human Relations Committee, seems to be arbitrating the matter, but says she hopes her committee won't have to take a stand on it. Unfortunately, Mrs. Taylor also said that the question of the ordinance's constitutionality "is not terribly pertinent." We must take exception to this, since the constitutionality of the law is the most pertinent question involved.

As soon as the Board of Aldermen, Mayor McClamroch, and the other interested parties realize this point, the quicker a solution to the police department's problem can be worked out. We are all interested in seeing a compromise, but that compromise must not include any prohibitive measures.

We will not accept them, as will not many others.

Political Classics On Dixie Classic

The State College Technician

The events of the past few weeks indicate that everybody wants to get into the act of running higher education in North Carolina.

While interest in higher education is noble and worthy of encouragement, wholesale meddling in the administrative affairs and policy-making procedures can only serve to confuse issues and hamstring those who are qualified, elected, appointed, and hired to guide the colleges and universities of the state.

For example the alumni of this institution appear intent on running the Consolidated University as they see fit regardless of whether the "way they see fit" concurs with the considered, expert if you will, opinions of the duly appointed trustees and administrators.

And of course, the Dixie Classic thorn has again been applied to the sides of Consolidated University officials.

Gubernatorial candidate Dan K. Moore has expressed a view favorable to the reinstatement of the Dixie Classic in the near future. Moore apparently believes that the recent gambling investigations and convictions have removed the evils associated with the holiday tournament which was such a boon to the economy of the Raleigh area. He has apparently decided to ignore the other objections which Consolidated University President Friday, and the University trustees and chancellors have expressed concerning the Classic.

Similarly, Candidate I. Beverly Lake, a Raleigh lawyer, has assumed a typical Raleigh stand favorable to Classic reinstatement. Moreover he has pledged the influence of the governor's office to safeguard the Classic from gangsters if he is elected.

However, the gambling aspect is only one of the factors involved in the Dixie Classic question. As University officials have been quick to point out, the tournament was played primarily as a publicity gimmick for the Big Four and a fund-raising weekend for Raleigh businessmen. Moreover, it may be argued that the scheduling of the tourney left the students out in the cold in that it was played during Christmas holidays at a cost which was prohibitive to participation by most students.

This injection of the affairs of the state's institutions of higher education can come to no good for the university system. The gubernatorial candidates, alumni, and businessmen are backing the Consolidated University into a corner on the Dixie Classic issue. It is therefore in danger of becoming more than a mere question of the sports policy. It is rather leading to a test of the University's long-cherished autonomy. The question is now becoming one of whether the University will be required to yield to virtually every gust of wind that blows from the oft non-expert electorate.

In the light of the passage of the gag law by the last General Assembly, the recent turn of the campaign is being viewed with increasing alarm by educators and friends of higher education.

North Carolina can not afford to sacrifice what is left of the autonomy of her university system for a matter as small as the Dixie Classic.

The best thing which may come of all the sand which is being raised about this issue is an affirmative vote from the citizenry for university autonomy, even though the people may not really appreciate the value of the concept.

Mailman's Bag Still Full

Nash Questions

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I read, as you well know, with considerable appreciation your editorials, dealing with the current crisis in the life of Chapel Hill, in the pages of the Tar Heel. However, could I say that I think that you lose effect with many people when, as with the editorial in the issue for today, you fail to make it evident to your readers that you even see the problem with which the police in Chapel Hill are concerned?

Let me say that I am not defending or attacking the restriction on picketing. I am simply asking that you editorialize only when your readers can perceive that you see the problem. Our police force is overworked and no one is helped by the simpliste logic of your argument: ". . . you do not take away a man's constitutional right to picket because your police force is overworked and underpaid . . . or because you fear some hoodlum may attack a picketer. Instead you protect both the picketer and his right to picket."

Freedom to picket is like freedom of speech. In neither case is it an absolute, e.g. you cannot with impunity shout fire in a theater or interrupt at will a lecturer whilst he is speaking. A further example: there are some things which you can legitimately do at 2 o'clock in the afternoon which it would be unreasonable to expect that you can do at 2 o'clock in the morning, e.g. allow your dog to bark.

Thus, could one of your grateful readers ask you to make it evident to us that you see all the ramifications of the problems before you accuse our civic leaders (whether we agree with them or not) of being stupid: it is so easy for their defenders to reply and apply to you and your editorials the words "ignorant" and "irresponsible." Here again, let me add that I am not saying whether the adjective is or is not rightfully applicable.

Incidentally, could I, as one Chapel Hill citizen, express my admiration for the patience and fairness of our police force when all of us expect them to combine at the same time the gentleness of a nurse, the strength of a night club bouncer and the knowledge of a constitutional lawyer.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold S. Nash
Professor of the History and Sociology of Religion

'Madras Minds...'

Editors, The Tar Heel:

It seemed a bit ironic that on Valentine's Day there should be a letter to the Editor of the Tar Heel from a high official in our student government which resounded dissonantly for those whose minds were filled with thoughts more in keeping with this season. I would like to reply to Mr. Akers.

None of us are free of categorical thinking, but it seems that those who allow their prejudices to remain unchallenged in one area find them cropping up in another. Are "beatniks" so unworthy of our respect? So what if there are shabbily dressed students who value conformity less than the "Madras Mind People" involved in the movement? If Mr. Akers had been a little more observant he would have seen an equal number of "typical-looking" white middle-class suburbans at the demonstration. Are we, too, the "dregs of society?" such as our Revolutionary Heroes.

I have just finished reading Black Like Me by John Howard Griffin. It helped me to better imagine how the American Negro must view the situation. I recommend this to Mr. Akers. Perhaps a dose of "vicarious empathy" would reduce his selective perception problems and give him a view of this struggle for freedom somewhat more in keeping with the martyred saint whose name this day bears.

Sincerely,

Vinegar

Editors, The Tar Heel:

By now you are no doubt fed up with all outside influences or opinions, but, if you'll forgive me, I can't keep the old vinegar down when I feel something is threatening UNC, even if I am as far removed as Germany and, no doubt, poorly informed. What concerns me is the stand the University is taking in the present situation.

I find it unfortunate that CORE, SNICK AND SNEE have so injudiciously chosen the present course, and especially the present scene, of action. Now that it has begun, however, one can only express regrets and certain exceptions and then set to the task at hand. I only hope this effort does not arouse what could be a tragic and futile reaction.

In the past the spirit of UNC and its experience would have assured sympathetic, yet rational, action and a speedy and satisfactory outcome. However, my information concerning your reaction gives me grave misgivings.

Is it really true that once prosecuted by city or county courts a demonstrator faces a trial by the Honor Council for violating the Campus Code?

If so, and if there is yet not revolt by the students under way, I fear not only for the safety and the pride of the town, but for the integrity of the school. Double jeopardy one expects in the military, but to hear that it is present in civilian life destroys somewhat my intense longing to return to it.

For goodness sake, UNC was once renowned for its toleration of all views—liberal or conservative. One might think now that instead of the appelation "tolerant" you were seeking that of "Arch-reactionary." I certainly hope I am wrong.

Sincerely,

Newt Smith '62

Public Accommodations Laws Numerous

By JACK CLAIBORNE
In The Charlotte Observer

WASHINGTON—What Congress does with the hotly disputed public accommodations section of the civil rights bill will have little effect on people in 31 states and 5 cities.

They already live under such laws. Some of them have for as long as 99 years.

While most of these laws are written differently and cover varying kinds of establishments, most of them prohibit racial discrimination in hotels, motels, restaurants and theaters, the places covered by the proposed federal statute.

Unlike the federal proposal, these state laws, however, make it a criminal offense to violate the law. Punishments range from fines of $10 to $500 and jail sentences from 10 days to one year.

Under the proposal set forth in the civil rights bill, a hotel or restaurant operator who discriminated against patrons according to their race or religion can only be taken to court and, if found guilty, ordered to stop discriminating.

In 1865 Massachusetts became the first state to enact a law against discrimination by race in public places.

The law said:

"Section 1. No distinction, discrimination or restriction on account of race or color shall be lawful in any licensed inn, in any public place of amusement, public conveyance or public meeting in this commonwealth.

"Section 2. Any person offending against the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50."

A year later the law was amended to include theaters and today there could be discrimination "for good cause."

In 1869 a similar law was written by Congress for the District of Columbia and the City of Washington. And in 1874 the states of Kansas and New York followed Massachusetts' lead in adopting such laws.

Massachusetts also contributed the U. S. senator, Charles Sumner, who proposed the first federal public accommodations law.

Sumner introduced his measure in 1870. It called for equal rights in "railroads, steamboats, public conveyances, hotels licensed theaters, houses of public entertainment, common schools, and institutions of learning authorized by law, church institutions, cemetery associations incorporated by national or state authority; also on juries in courts, national and state."

Civil rights acts were passed in both 1870 and 1871, but each time Sumner's public accommodations section was deleted from them.

In fact the measure was defeated five times before it was finally adopted by Congress in 1875. The enacting vote in the Senate was 38 to 26 with 9 abstentions and 1 vacancy. There were 37 states in the union at the time.

But in 1883, in a decision on five cases arising out of that federal law, the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional. The regulation of such discrimination, the court said, was up to the several states.

Several states followed up the decision by adopting laws similar to the Sumner law. Iowa, New Jersey, Ohio and Connecticut passed such laws in 1884.

Seven others — Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska and Rhode Island—followed suit in 1885.

Pennsylvania, Washington, Wisconsin and California enacted similar laws in the period from 1885 to 1897,m aking discrimination against the law in 18 states and the District of Columbia at the turn of the century.

No other states passed laws on the subject until 1948, when President Harry Truman's Advisory Commission on Civil Rights issued a report calling on states to write such laws.

The territory of Alaska immediately complied, putting such a law on its books in 1949.

In 1953, such laws got a stern test in the U.S. Supreme Court. Thompson's restaurant in Washington was accused of violating the long-dormant D.C. law. The law had gone unenforced for so long many people thought it had been repealed.

But the Supreme Court upheld it, and in so doing said:

"So far as the federal Constitution is concerned there is no doubt that legislation which prohibits discrimination on the basis of race in the use of facilities serving a public function is within the police power of the states."

On the momentum of that decision, nine states passed public accommodations laws within the next eight years, including Oregon, Montana, New Mexico, Vermont, Maine, Idaho, New Hampshire, North Dakota and Wyoming.

Last year, in the build-up of national sentiment against discrimination by race, three other states acted — Maryland, South Dakota and Kentucky.

Kentucky's law was not an act of the legislature but an executive order of the governor. It is being fought in the courts.

In addition to these states and the District of Columbia, the cities of Wilmington, Del., El Paso, Tex., Kansas City, Mo., and St. Louis also have public accommodations ordinances.

For 66 per cent of the U.S. population, therefore, public accommodations laws are already a reality—although they may not be enforced.

'On Top Of The Table...'

The most popular current sport on the UNC campus, after sex and basketball, seems to be political pot-shooting, a game whereby loud and harsh criticism of every type of student leader is voiced by individuals and groups alike.

In recent days, I've heard blasts at Student Body President

dent Mike Lawler and his entire administration; at the Attorney General and the members of the Men's Council; and, last but not least, at the Daily Tar Heel itself.

Though the criticism varies widely, all of it returns eventually to some aspect of the current racial situation in Chapel Hill, with all its intricate entanglements.

As always, the loudest criticism is also the most unfounded. It comes from those persons who contend that neither Lawler nor the members of the Student Legislature have the "right" to sponsor, speak for, or encourage a student boycott of segregated establishments. They base this contention on the statement that "those students' views are not those of a majority of the student body."

Even if this statement is true, which seems doubtful, such criticism has no logical basis. Our Student Constitution guarantees that, once elected, our student officers have at their disposal all the power of their offices. They may represent their constituents in the manner they deem best, right or wrong. If this basic precept of democracy did not exist, then the election of representative officers on this campus would have no basis.

There are those who step forth to bray that our government is not truly representative. "In last spring's elections," they say, "only about 60 per cent of the students voted. Thus Lawler, who polled a majority not of the student body, but rather of 60 per cent of the student body, is not representing of the majority."

This is the most absurd argument imaginable. It is true that, indeed, only about 60 per cent bothered to vote last spring (4,240 of about 7,000 eligible voters). This is, however, very close to the percentage of votes cast in a number of national elections. Can we then argue that neither our President nor our Congressman are to be declared elected? Of course not.

Perhaps some of those who want to stand on such an infirm ground had best take stock of the situation. I daresay those who squeal loudest are, in many cases, those who didn't find time to visit the polls last April.

This brings us to another point. Many of those who did vote claim that they did not consider the candidate's stand on race or similar issues when they cast their ballots.

"He seemed like a nice fellow, so I voted for him," comes the complaint. "Now he's double-crossed me by voting against my ideals."

This argument, too, holds little water. Those who vote, knowing the powers that their officers will hold, should make the necessary effort to inform themselves on the issues and support the candidates who will represent their views in the legislature and in the executive branch.

Good, sound government comes from positve action, and is seldom if ever a product of negative criticism. Clearly the student body is divided on the racial question. One group claims to have an anti-boycott petition with 1500 names, though same has not been produced as of this writing. A petition in support of Lawler's action and bearing several hundred signatures is also circulating.

Spring elections are less than two months away. If the racial question and its handling are to be the issues, let's make them clear.

Let those who scream "misrepresentation of the majority" find their anti-boycott candidates and support them at the polls. Let those on the other side do likewise. Find out what your candidates think and how they will stand if elected. Then vote.

Perhaps if this can be done, we will avoid future instances of persons hiding behind foolish rationalization when their side loses, and the game will be played on top of the table for a change.

Economists Agree: Cuba Better Under Fidel

Five economists—two English and three Chilean—agree that Cuba has prospered under the regime of Fidel Castro.

In a book entitled "Cuba, The Economic and Social Revolution," published last week by the UNC Press, five economists who went to Cuba to get their information conclude that although Cuba is in serious difficulty in many areas, the country and the people are better off now than they were in 1959 prior to the revolution.

According to Castro, the intention of the revolution was to bring about social, economic and educational reforms in Cuba, and to a degree he has been successful. The population of Cuba is now more integrated with a narrowing gap between urban and rural living standards; the educational program has reduced illiteracy to a stated three per cent; unemployment has declined; recreational facilities are now more available to more people, and there is a more egalitarian income policy.

However, Castro achieved these things at a cost to the middle classes and former rich, whose incomes and holdings have been cut drastically. Though there is a rise in profits in Cuba, many products have risen considerably in cost; and there is a lack of consumer products as evidenced by the food rationings.

The authors of "Cuba . . ." have written the first comprehensive, realistic and objective study of the economic and social developments in Cuba since 1959. Dudley Seers, who edited the book and wrote a portion of it, is an English economist currently director of the Division of Trade and Surveys of the Economic Commission for Africa. Until 1963 he was a visiting professor at Yale University.

Other authors are Andres Bianchi, Max Nolff of Chile and Richard Jolly of England, all noted economists in their own countries and in America.

Although, the Revolutionary government admits many problems, such as a lack of supplies, and an underestimation of the entire agricultural problem, there is evidence that Castro is profiting from his mistakes. He has taken steps to tackle the problem of labor supply; and he continues to work on the educational program which still does not fill the need for skilled workers, educated managers, and professional people.

In the area of agriculture, education and industry, Cuba fares as follows:

1. Agriculture—

Although it is still too soon to evaluate comprehensively the economic effects of the Cuban agrarian reform, they have been favorable in some respects, with considerable expansion of the cultivated area, and a more stable and higher level of employment of the agricultural labor force. There has also been vigorous stimulation to the production of poultry, hogs, coffee and tobacco.

2. Education—

In education, a unique plan of educating the masses has virtually eliminated illiteracy, although it is difficult to tell just how much Cuba will prosper from this plan. Castro has also worked very hard to improve the quality and quantity of primary and secondary schools, to turn out more educated children faster and to boost school attendance. There are still many problems connected with the educational system.

3. Industry—

In 1960, the government took abrupt steps to nationalize industries, which defined the socialistic character of the Revolution and accentuated the need for devising a new economic organization. The new system was based upon the fixing of itemized balances of materials, available labor supply and finances. In addition, Cuba changed her source of supply from North American to the Soviet Countries, which brought up problems: the adoption of the metric system caused difficulty in placing orders; machine parts were hard to replace, and often machines had to be used for spare parts for other machines.

But according to the authors of "Cuba . . .", the prospect for industrial development in Cuba is promising. The scarcity of skilled labor is being met through intensive training and by contracting for foreign technicians. Castro has understood that it is important to carry out scientific investigations with the purpose of making better use of Cuba's natural resources.

Another important factor in the industrialization of Cuba is that financial and technical assistance on the part of the socialist countries will be increased in the next few years, and the debts will be postponed until the present programs are carried out. In this way, Cuba may become one of the most industrialized countries in Latin America at the end of this decade, and she will be in a position to improve the standard of living of her population.

In short, though the revolutionary government has made many mistakes, they have proved that . . . "organization rather than capital, is the clue to really rapid structural change," and that it is conceivable to change the quality of the labor supply of a country.

1) Paid managers feel greater responsibility for performing their job well.

2) Central organization is possible because managers have set duties to perform.

3) Active competition for salaried jobs produces a higher caliber of applicant.

4) It has been found that students who volunteer for the job without pay do not necessarily do a more enthusiastic job.

New Hearing Seen In Hoffa's Trial

CHATTANOOGA Tenn. (UPI)—A federal judge granted a hearing Tuesday on a defense move to throw out testimony of a key government witness in James R. Hoffa's jury tampering trial.

Judge Frank Wilson said he would hear arguments on whether to suppress the testimony of Edwin Partin, who linked Hoffa directly to alleged attempts to rig a federal jury in Nashville, Tenn.

The Teamster president and five other persons are being tried on charges of attempting to bribe and "corruptly influence" members of the jury in Hoffa's 1962 Nashville trial on conspiracy charges.

Partin, a Louisiana Teamster official, testified he was with Hoffa at the time of the trial and heard the union leader discuss efforts to approach jurors.

The motion to throw out the testimony alleged that Partin, acting as a government informer, illegally recorded a telephone conversation with Hoffa prior to the trial in Nashville.

Wilson said he would conduct the hearing when evidence in the case is concluded. This would be prior to final arguments by both sides.

Hoffa, facing federal charges for the fifth time, could be sentenced to 15 years in prison if convicted. His Nashville trial and one other federal case ended in mistrial. Two others resulted in aquittal.

Allen Dorfman, one of Hoffa's codefendants, testified in his own behalf Tuesday. The government contends Dorfman and another codefendant, Nicholas Tweel, attempted to line up and approach jurors in the conspiracy trial.

Tweel, a businessman from Huntington, W. Va., made a similar denial of charges Monday. He flatly contradicted Partin who testified Tweel said Dorfman asked him to come to Nashville to "help get to the jury."

pute with Dr. Joseph Straley and Dr. Allen Reddick, who oppose the restriction.

The committee also was requested to present its position on the ordinance to the aldermen when they meet Feb. 24.

Mrs. Taylor said recently she thinks the group opposing the ordinance will "voluntarily agree" to a restriction on picketing with the cutoff time later than 7 p.m.

She said the Human Relations Committee hopes "we won't have to take a position on this.

"Right now this ordinance is just another ground for discord and we would like to get rid of the discord if we can," she said.

The anti-restriction group is pushing for adoption of these hours for picketing:

—Picketing allowed until 8 on all nights.

—Picketing allowed from 9:30 to 11:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

—Picketing allowed all day Saturday through 11:30 p.m.

In addition to agreeing that some restriction can be made on time — because of the difficulty Chapel Hill's undermanned police force has in safeguarding all demonstrators — the anti-restriction group apparently has agreed to inform police of all picketing 12 hours in advance.

Whether the restriction on night picketing is constitutional, Mrs. Taylor said, "is not terribly pertinent.

"It probably is unconstitutional. It might be considered constitutional, though, by a loose interpretation by the courts."

Mayor McClamroch earlier stated the board had not considered the question of constitutionality when the restriction first was passed. Opponents of the measure claim it is an unconstitutional infringement on free speech.

Because the restrction passed only by a 4-3 vote last week, it must be voted upon again at the Feb. 24 aldermanic meeting.

Maryland's Kiddies Upend Erratic Tar Heels, 74-64

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

Sure it's the middle of February. Sure it's raining, freezing and generally miserable outside. But none of this is going to stop Walt Rabb. The word is out that this is to be UNC's year on the diamond, and the tobacco-chewing coach wants to make sure of it.

Though the first game is still more than a month off, Rabb put his baseball team through its first workout of the season Monday afternoon. He just couldn't wait another day to get a look at that infield.

That infield is made up of first baseman Bill Brown, second baseman Dickie Prindle, shortstop Jim Speight and third baseman Tom Wright. If these names sound familiar to you, it may be because all four were in the starting infield last spring when the Tar Heels finished runner-up to Wake Forest in the ACC and posted a sparkling 20-9 record overall.

"I guess you could say our infield is set," drawls Rabb. "We have some good reserves, but all four of our starters had good years last season and could easily be better this spring."

It's an understatement to say that the UNC infield had a good year in 1963. Wright and Speight were the two leading hitters on the team last season, socking at respective .377 and .333 clips. Prindle, considered by many af the team's MVP, wasn't far down the ladder, with a .283 mark, and Brown hit .253 with 17 RBI, second high on the team.

"Brown and Prindle are both first-rate glovemen," says Rabb. "Speight, I think, has gained a lot of steadiness in the field and Wright is adequate at third."

Behind the starters, Rabb can look to Dickie Fleming and Bobby Reagan for reserve duty. Fleming can do the job in the field at second, short or third, while Reagan will likely see late-inning duty at first.

The Tar Heel outfield did not completely escape graduation, but the makings of a respectable picket line is still there. Although center fielder Heyward Hull (.312) and right fielder Buddy Tilden (.310) are gone, footballers Ken Willard and Gary Black are both on hand again this spring.

Willard, a regular in left last spring, led the team in homers (4) and RBI (18) last year, and is expected to improve on both his power and his average (.220) this season. The big fellow killed the fast ball last season, but was in turn killed himself by the curve. This may change after a summer of city league ball in Richmond.

Black, who can cover a lot of ground in center, was the top outfield reserve last year. Rabb expects Black to improve as much at the plate (.172) as he did at quarterback for Jim Hickey this past fall.

Big Battles In Right, Behind Plate

Right field, just to make things interesting, is wide open. Bill Taylor, an infield-outfield reserve last spring, is battling a flock of promising sophomores for the starting job. Included are Bob Kaufman, Bob Bonczek and Alan MacArthur, any of whom will be considered for a left or center field spot should either Willard or Black falter.

The situation behind the plate is also unclear at the moment, mainly because there are so many promising candidates for the starting spot. Merle Kruer (.250) is perhaps the most likely to fill the vacancy left by Bernie Isgett, who left school to become a missionary for the Morman Church in Tahiti.

Also fighting for the catching job are Ken Boykin (.333), Bob Hundley, footballer Eddie Kesler and soph John Shaw. Rabb may try out Boykin in right field, as he would like to have the lefty-swinger's bat in the line-up.

Pitching is always a question-mark in a short season, but the Tar Heels have the ingredients of an excellent staff, if things go right. The top four hurlers from last season's mound crew are all back, and pitching was a strong point for Carolina last year.

The "Big Four" are all right-handers—Bill Haywood, Spence Willard, Bobby Cox and Bill Dannemann. The only experienced southpaw on the club is Jerry Davis, but there are two promising sophs who throw from the left side. They are Beattie Leonard and Buddy Cahoon, and Rabb is counting on at least one of them to come through for him this spring. Which one it will be is to be seen.

Still unmentioned is the most promising newcomer on the entire squad—righthander Mike McLaughlin,- who, in Rabb's words, could be a really outstanding college pitcher.

UNC Drops To 3rd In ACC Standings

By ETADIN MOLADNU

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—Sophomoritis never even touched Maryland Tuesday night, and North Carolina today finds itself no longer in the ACC's second place as a result.

The erratic Tar Heels went down to Bud Millikan's youngsters, 74-64, here and, this, coupled with Wake Forest's stunning 72-71 win over Duke, leaves Wake at 6-4 and UNC at 6-5 in the league.

Rick Wise and Neil Brayton, two of the precocious Terrapins scored 21 and 19 to lead a Maryland attack that had UNC on the ropes twice—the second time for good.

The Terps poured through a Carolina defensive sieve with easy layups to first go ahead by eight (60-52) with about ten minutes left. But Billy Cunningham, who scored 31 points for the night, silenced 4,000 Cole Field House fans by feeding Mike Cooke for a jumper and scoring six straight himself to give UNC a tie at 60 with 7:15 to go.

But the UNC press again failed to hold, and Maryland dumped in eight straight points to put it way. George Suder hit a jump and drove for a bucket for 64-60, and Brayton scored on a one-hander.

At 4:51, Carolina called timeout, but big (6-8) Wise, who hit layups all night, dunked two free throws to give the Terps the 68-60.

Cunningham rebounded with three minutes left, but Suder's basket from underneath after a stall made the win an inevitability. Sub John Yokely scored for 70-64 with 57 seconds remaining, and Carolina had seen its last basket. Suder's layup and Brayton's two foul shots closed the scoring.

UNC dropped behind in the first half on the first flurry of many defensive lapses, and did not come back from it 41-34 trailing at the break till the Tar Heels and Billy tied at 60. Cooke hit 14 points for UNC and Ray Respess added 10. For Marylaand Suder scored 13.

Cunningham hit his first three shots of the game, and UNC shot off to a 6-0 lead before Maryland recovered. The Tar Heels ran it to 23-15 (Cunningham had 12 of them) before hitting a cold spell which threatened to put them out of the game early.

Maryland, from its eight-point deficit, outscored Carolina 20-2 as the Terp sophomores worked the ball well and shot 50.4 per cent over the 1-3-1 zone. Carolina meanwhile, was making telling floor mistakes.

With Brayton, who got 16 in the first half scoring from outside and Wise from underneath, the Terps went to a 35-25 lead before Billy Galantai stopped the rout with a layup.

Cunningham (15 in the half and nine rebounds) paced a small comeback that brought UNC to within seven (41-34) as the teams went to intermission. The 6-8 Wise had 13 points in the half while Cooke got 10 for the vstors.

If Baby Dolphins Could Beat State

By PERRY McCARTY

UNC's freshmen swimmers ran their chart to 10-2 with two lopsided weekend victories over visiting high school teams, 75-20 over Staunton Military and 70-25 over Westminster from Altanta, Ga. Monday night in Raleigh, the young Dolphins faced N. C. State in a return bout, and again came away on the short end of a 59-37 count.

UNC managed only three first places, Strud Norfleet tied for first in the 50 free, Pete Worthen won the 100 free in 49.1. The final freestyle relay team of Jay Scattergood, Steve Hildenbrand, Norfleet and Worthen posted a very respectable 3:27.7 for seven points of UNC's total 37.

Jack Hayden finished third in the individual medley and second in the 200 back, losing both exents to State's Ron Wirth who won the individual in 2:04.6 and the backstroke in 2:04.0. Both of Wirth's marks are close to the exisiting conference records held by UNC's Thompson Mann.

Allen McDonald, Jim Bernuth, Tom Adams, Ron Worley, Bob Bottomly, and Fred Tygart contributed a sprinkling of points in various events. Showing his finest form of the season, diver Butch Aydelette bowed to State's Bill White by a single point.

Swimming against Staunton and Westminster Friday, Worthen tied the existing NCAA freshman 50-yard freestyle record of 21.6. In the same race Norfleet was second in 22.5. Monday Worthen lost to Dan Fellew's 1:51.3 in the 200 free, a scant .3 off the NCAA freshman mark. A former outstanding age group swimmer from California, Fellows is the only person to finish a race ahead of Worthen this season. Coach Pat Earey was quite pleased with his ace sprinter's performance in the longer 200. Worthen swam his first 100 in 51.0 and finished with a fine 1:54.2.

To be sure, State's present crop of fresmen swimmers will make the Wolfpack a threat in the next three years. But Coach Earey also will count heavily next year on the varsity debut of his much improved freshmen swimmers.

The freshmen travel to Maryland and Virginia with the varsity this weekend and conclude the season with the Freshmen Invitational Championships on February 24.

Beatles Show Up, Hold Clay's Hand

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) — Britain's bush-haired Betatles met boxing's baron of bray, Cassius Clay, Tuesday, and it ended up in clowning, off-key pandemonium.

Boxing and singing probably were set back 100 years when Gaseous Cassius teamed up with the rock 'n' roll entertainers to render this refrain, made up on the spot by Clay:

"When Liston reads about the Beatles visiting me,

"He'll get so mad I'll knock him out in three."

Clowns With Singers

Clay, the young fighter who puts all his bragging on the line next Tuesday night when he meets champion Sonny Liston for the heavyweight title, clowned around with the four mop-haired singers during a break in training at the Fifth Street gym.

"Man, you guys are the greatest. The whole world is shook up about you," said Clay, apparently a longtime Beatle fan.

The raucous meeting represented two firsts:

Clay admitted that someone other than himself is "great," for the first time, and he predicted that he will flatten Liston in three rounds, even though the brash 22-year-old contender is a 6-1 underdog at the moment.

Enjoy Meeting

The Beatles, dressed in flashy sport shirts, snow-white vests and beach shoes, enjoyed the meeting as much as Clay.

They entered the training ring with a "yeah, yeah, yeah" and pretended to attack Clay en masse.

For the Beatles, the confrontation with Clay was the kickoff of a leisurely day on the beach. They have no more appearances to make and are vacationing until Friday when they return to London.

Fencers Capture Runner-Up Spot In Clemson Meet

The UNC Fencing team captured second place in a five-way meet Saturday held at Clemson. The outstanding work of the foil team, led by captain Murray Pender, cinched the win by not only winning in foil competition, but also in epee where UNC lacked full strength.

Other teams competing in the meet were Georgia Tech, first; VMI, third; Clemson, fourth; and the Citadel last.

Coach Pebley Barrow has a full schedule arranged for the team this season, including a trip to the nationals this March. He says that UNC has a fine team that should prove to be stiff competition for any schools in the area.

Brock, Oliver Pace Phi Delts To Title

By PETE GAMMONS

Fraternity finals headed Monday's intramural handball action as Phi Delta Theta's Blue team edged out DKE for the championship.

Tim Oliver and Frank Brock defeated Bill Fuller and Bruce Sims in the third and deciding match for the margin of victory. Earlier Mike Michaels and Bill Fink of the Phi Delts had defeated George Butler and Dave Harris. This win offset a DKE victory in the singles by powerful Joe Churchill, who whipped John Shultz.

The DKE's didn't lose out entirely, however, as their White team won its division, defeating the Kappa Psi's 3-0. Al Hunkin rallied to defeat Winston Hollingsworth, 14-21, 21-5, 21-7 in the singles. Tom Roberts and Bill Bennett easily whipped Bill Lamb and Jim Randall, 15-4, 15-10, while Larry Thompson and John Dwight wrapped it up defeating Jack Edwards and Bill Freeman, 21-4, 5-21, 11-19.

Other action saw the Everett Rogahs upset Manly-B, 2-1, in a squeaker. Everett's Vee Hanna and Jim Hugenschmidt nipped Billy Poteat and Bill Belongin, 21-17, 5-21, 21-20. Bob Kaufman and Tom Davis gave the Rogahs their other win by defeating Bob Spruill and Al Vallmer, 15-6, 51-3. Manly's only win came from Ira Batt who beat Robert Cobb, 21-2, 21-14.

Everett's three other teams went down to defeat as the Alexander Poobahs, Aycock Aardvarks, and Winston Stompers whipped the Pumas, Zinjanthropi, and Quizbies respectively.

AN EDITORIAL

Chapel Hill's Great Myth Of '90-95% Integration'

The notion has become firmly fixed in the public mind that Chapel Hill's Negroes already have the cake of civil rights and are now demanding the frosting as well.

It is indicative of the gravity of our situation that nothing could be farther from the truth.

It is also indicative of the competency with which Chapel Hill's racial problem has been handled that no official body of the town has defined the scope of the problem, in terms of making a survey to see how much discrimination there is in, say, public accommodations, to cite one area of concern.

Instead the magic figure of "90-95% integration" has been bandied about to the point where it is accepted as the truth. If it were true, there would be good reason for the disenchantment which has set in among some people of good will, who profess to have become alienated from the Negro's cause in Chapel Hill because of his apparent unreasonableness in demands and tactics.

The first and most obvious fallacy in the integration claim is that desegregation is a far different thing than integration. It's the difference between grudigng admission and hearty acceptance.

So the claim must immediately be amended to read "90-95% desegregation," and the question is, where did this figure come from? Furthermore, what is the actual percentage of desegregation in public accommodations?

(Note that the areas of equal employment, housing and education are not included in this discussion, although only in education has any real desegregation progress been achieved.)

We checked into these questions early last month, and presented some answers in our January 12 edition.

We found that the 95% figure came from a somewhat hit-or-miss survey performed last summer by the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association, in answer to a request from Mayor Sandy McClamroch and The Chapel Hill Weekly. This is not to criticize the Association's excellent executive director, Joe Augustine, who did the best job he could under the hurry-up circumstances. But he nevertheless did an inadequate job, which proved to be quite misleading.

As Augustine was quick to admit when we talked with him, the Association surveyed some 250 retail establishments—as opposed to places of public accommodation, the point at issue—and found that 5-8 per cent of them discriminated in service to Negroes.

What makes the percentage unreliable is not only that the establishments surveyed included such businesses as heating contractors, which have never been known to discriminate on the basis of race anyhow and were thus beside the point. Also involved was the fact that all retail establishments included in the survey were not even called, much less personally checked.

As Augustine told us candidly, "We just called the places where we knew there was some question."

Clearly, the inclusion of businesses with little, if any, relation to public accommodations as they are normally thought of, means that the percentage of businesses which do discriminate turns out to be exceedingly small in overall terms. And the fact that all of these businesses were not even called in any event means that the 5-8 per cent discrimination figure is rendered even less reliable as an indicator of the degree of discrimination in Chapel Hill's public accommodations.

We therefore took our own survey. It too turned out to be inadequate, due chiefly to the difficulty in defining a place of public accommodation and lack of manpower to check all such places. But at least it gave a more accurate picture of discrimination in Chapel Hill's public accommodations.

We selected eight types of retail facilities listed in the Yellow Pages of the town's phone book—facilities which would seem to fall under the title of public accommodation.

In telephone interviews with managers and employees, we discovered that 25% of 116 such places practiced some form of discrimination in service to Negroes.

Examples:

—32% of the local restaurants discriminate in some way, ranging from stand-up or back-door service to Negroes to complete refusal to serve Negroes.

—Five of nine establishments listed as serving beer and ale do not have equal service. That's 55% discrimination.

—Three of five motels do not accept Negro lodgers. The other two are predominantly Negro, but do have some white patronage.

—Of 3 ice-cream businesses, one (Brady's Frozen Custard Drive-In) serves Negroes only at the back window. The other two apparently provide equal service.

There were some bright spots in the survey, such as the fact that only two of the 37 service stations have segregated rest-rooms. There also were some flagrant holes in our survey, such as the inclusion of totally-segregated Watts' Motel and Restaurant, which technically are outside of the town limits. But the holes were honest errors and we readily admit them.

The important fact is that we at least made an effort to find out the extent of discrimination in public accommodations, and our findings are far more revealing than those of the Merchants Association.

Our findings clearly indicate that racial discrimination in Chapel Hill is far more widespread than many good people realize, especially when you take into account the stubbornly woeful state of housing and employment opportunities.

This is why we have supported, and will continue to support, racial protests in Chapel Hill. Despite what you hear to the contrary, racial discrimination here is far from being a straw man.

Approximately 15-20 picketers representing the Wesley Foundation, Newman Club and St. Anthony Hall Fraternity marched outside The Pines around 6 p.m., while the ATO's were holding an old and new officers banquet inside. Reservations for the dinner were made after a boycott of segregated establishments was called by SG President Mike Lawler and the Student Legislature. ## DTH Salaries Slashed By Budget Committee

UP Hears Long Speak Monday

The idea of residence colleges, long considered but never discussed, was brought into the open this week by Dean of Men William G. Long.

Speaking at a meeting of the University Party, Long discussed the college system, which would divide the quads into "residence colleges" which would work as a team for increased social, recreational and study activities. "By this method I believe that UNC would have taken a large step in alleviating the feeling of anonymity created in a mass constitution," he said.

He also discussed some of the problems facing UNC today, including the questioning of the effectiveness of the honor system. He also commented on fraternities and the parking situation.

The Budget Committee of student government has cut $4,263.50 from the requested DTH budget for next year.

Salaries were cut and a request to increase the number of copies delivered to Victory Village and Glen Lennox residents was cut in half.

Art Pearce, DTH business manager, asked for a total budget of $71,218, an increase of $6,569 over this year.

Pearce asked for an additional $4,600 to increase the number of copies printed daily by 1,000 and to circulate about one-half of these door-to-door in Victory Village and Glen Lennox.

The committee cut his request to an increase of 500 copies and eliminated the idea of door-to-door delivery. In its place, some of the money is designated for setting up more mail-boxes in these two areas. There are now two boxes in Victory Village and one in Glen Lennox.

There are presently 8,500 copies printed daily. Of these 7,950 are circulated to students and faculty. The remainder go to

Straley: Boycott Mistake

By JEFFREY DICK

An instructor at the "Freedom School," set up by civil rights leaders to serve members boycotting Lincoln High School, said today he thought the boycott was a mistake.

In a letter to the DTH, Dr. Joseph Straley said "In my opinion, the boycottt is a mistake. I hope that the students will return voluntarily to their classes and that the authorities will accept them upon their return."

Straley's letter will be published in full in the next few days.

In citing his reasons for participating in teaching students at the makeshift school, Straley said he hoped to help the students keep up with their work so they would not be at a loss when they returned to school.

J. V. Henry, spokesman for the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, said he was certain Straley was in sympathy with the aims of the boycott but not in favor of the truancy advocated by the supporters of the boycott.

A group of parents initiating the boycott meet tonight to reconsider their actions.

Henry added that the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee did not institute the boycott but was in support of it.

The boycott started Friday when 55 students walked out of classes at Lincoln High School in protest of racial discrimination. Since that time, 30 have returned to the school. The remainder have been attending the "Freedom School."

One student, head of the Student Coordinating Committee of Lincoln High, which initiated the move, has been expelled by the school. Others face possible action, pending the outcome of the next meeting of the Chapel Hill School Board on Monday. Another student who has participated in the boycott was expelled for an unstated reason and is scheduled to appear before authorities today.

INTERVIEWS

The Elections Board of Student Government will be holding interviews today from 3-4:45 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room of GM.

Arthur Hays, chairman, announced yesterday that approximately 10 positions are open. The Elections Board is responsible for the supervision of All-Campus elections, including the arrangements and ballot-counting.

Attorney General Supports Town Picketing Amendment

State Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody has advised Chapel Hill Town officials that he thinks the pending ordinance amendment to limit the hours of picketing here is constitutional.

The opinion has been sent to Town Attorney J. Q. LeGrand and will be presented to the Board of Aldermen at its regular meeting next Monday night.

Mr. Moody described the amendment as the "fairest and most equitable proposal we have found in a long time."

The amendment would limit picketing in Chapel Hill to the hours between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. It was passed on a 4-3 vote by the Aldermen at their meeting last week, but will have to be approved again since it failed to get a two thirds majority on first reading.

A member of the Board of Aldermen, Mrs. Adelaide Walters, raised the question as to the amendment's constitutionality. The amendment also has been protested by a group of citizens who have retained attorney Barry Winston.

Shortly after its initial passage, the amendment was tested by a dozen pickets at Town Hall. The test was impossible to develop, however, after Town officials discovered that the amendment was not yet law.

In the interim, the Attorney General's office and the Institute of Government were asked for legal opinions. The Institute of Government has not yet presented its report.

"I could see nothing wrong with it," Mr. Moody said yesterday. "It is a neutral ordinance for all people and not aimed at any one person, race or color.

"In my opinion, it does not deprive the people of their rights in the First and Fourteenth Amendments."

Mr. Moody said his opinion ruled on the whole ordinance, and not just last week's amendment.

The original picketing ordinance, passed in 1960, is regulatory, limiting the number of pickets to a block, the distance between pickets, and restricting size of signs.

In addition to the requests for legal opinions, the Town asked the Human Relations Committee to consider the amendment.

Earlier this week, Mrs. George Taylor, chairman of the Human Relations Committee, and representatives of a group opposing the amendment, discussed a possible compromise.

Mrs. Taylor said she thought the opponents would "voluntarily agree" to an amendment with a deadline later than 7 p.m.

Mrs. Taylor was quoted by a daily newspaper as saying the constitutionality of the amendment was "not terribly pertin-

'All Groups Needed In CPU'—Spearman

A group of politically interested students has banded together in an attempt to restore the Carolina Political Union.

Bob Spearman, vice-president of the student body, is leading the movement.

"I am very encouraged at the turnout at our first meeting," he said. "I hope that we can get a fair representation of all political groups within the Union in order that discussion will be valuable to all."

A reorganization meeting was held Tuesday in Graham Memorial and a pilot committee to study by-laws of the Union was set up. It was agreed that the Union would not vote or take any official stand on the subjects they discussed.

The by-laws committee will present a constitution to the group at the next meeting.

Joel Fleishman, legal adviser to Governor Sanford and former chairman of the CPU, addressed the group. He discussed the reasons for the decline of the original CPU, citing the McCarthy era as the main cause.

The Union, founded in 1936 by political science students of Dr. E. J. Woodhouse, was discontinued in 1954.

It consisted of a limited membership, which met weekly to discuss major political and social questions and hear distinguished speakers.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Earl Browder and the Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan were a few of the speakers secured by the Union.

"I urge all persons interested in this to contact me," Spearman said. "We are interested in having persons of all political views in this organization."

Those attending the meeting included Gerry Hancock, Chuck Neely, Mike Chanin, Phil Baddour, Brick Ottinger, Neal Jackson, Don Curtis, Fred Seely, John Ulfelder, Don Carson, Lane Brown, Nick Nicholson, Warren Ogden, Harold Berty and Bob Spearman.

Quarterly Needs Poetry Editor

The Carolina Quarterly is in need of a poetry editor to handle verse for its Spring and summer issues. According to Editor Louis Bourne, the job is "probably the most difficult on the magazine, due to the diversity of styles in modern poetry and the necessity for being conversant with a number of contemporary poets.

"There is a $25 salary for each issue, but all interested parties better have butterfly souls to start with since the task is greater than the financial reward. We will probably appoint two peotry editors to offset each other's subjective cravings." Applicants are requested to drop by the Quarterly office 3-5 p.m. Wednesday or call the editor nightly at 942-3382.

Preyer Holds Breakfast At New Hope

By HUGH STEVENS

Gubernatorial hopeful L. Richardson Preyer told a group of about 300 Orange County residents yesterday that "there must be a new hope in education and agriculture in North Carolina."

The Greensboro former judge spoke, appropriately, at Camp New Hope near Hillsboro, where he greeted his supporters at an early-morning breakfast.

He noted the recent growth of UNC, but reminded his audience that "growth for growth's sake is not necessarily a virtue."

"The University," he said, "has a certain quality which I hope it will not lose by growing too large, too fast."

Preyer said this "spirit of the University" leads the state, and a flood of students could cause the spirit to cease. He said the answer to this problem could lie in the proposed system of community colleges, which would take a burden off the University itself.

"There is another problem, too," he said. "Figures show that 81 per cent of our students never go to college, and only 6 per cent graduate from college."

"If our high schools don't serve the needs of this large group, then our school system is not flexible enough. We need to prepare those who don't go to college for a vocation."

Preyer said that our school drop-out rate is currently decreasing, but that the supply of unskilled jobs is also dropping.

"We need to add another dimension to education in the form of vocational training," Preyer said. "At the same time, though, we must not neglect to teach our boys and girls about the nature of man and the universe and provide them with the governing principles which they will need."

Judge Preyer also advocated increased intra-state cooperation to prevent the flow of food dollars from North Carolina.

"There is an annual deficit of one billion dollars between the amount North Carolinians spend for food and the amount earned by our farmers," he noted. "Many of our stores which sell produce from other states sit in the midst of unsued fields."

Preyer spent approximately 2 hours chatting with voters, including long-time Orange County legislator John Umstead. Umstead made one of his rare appearances on behalf of a candidate.

It's A Long Way From To To For

Mike Lawler's recent request to the student body for a boycott of all segregated places of public accommodation in Chapel Hill has been much misunderstood, and in some cases, purposely misrepresented.

Some students felt that Lawler, as President of the student body, was trying to speak for all students and all students didn't feel the same way. This impression has been reinforced by some members of the student legislature who opposed Lawler on this issue, and they have done it by consciously misrepresenting the case.

The point is, Mike Lawler did not speak for the student body, he spoke to it. He spoke in the same fashion that the President of the United States speaks to the people when he asks for support for his legislative program. Obviously not everyone agrees with him, but he, and Lawler like him, are elected to lead, and lead they should.

When President Johnson asks the nation for passage of the civil rights bill, he is performing his duties as chief legislator and opinion former, duties he was elected to perform. When Mike Lawler does the same thing he too is performing duties he was elected to perform.

We elected him to lead, and when he requests something of us he is doing just that. That fact that we might disagree with what he asks at times does not mean that he has overstepped the bounds of his office.

Lawler specifically did not address himself to the legal question of whether a public accommodations law is constitutional or not, or whether a man has the legal right to choose whom he wishes to serve. These are thorny arguments with reasonable positions to be found on each side, and Lawler, because he is the elected leader, did not delve into the question.

Only at one point in his speech to the legislature did Lawler presume to speak for the student body. He said, "I am ceratin we believe with unanimity that discrimination on the basis of race in public facilities is morally indefensible . . . Upon what basis can you and I support a restaurant owner who refuses service to a fellow student because his skin is black? Legal questions . . . yes; questions of human dignity . . no."

It is obvious that Lawler asked the students to withdraw their patronage from these segregated establishments on moral grounds, not on legal grounds. He may be mistaken, and he most likely is, that every student at Carolina feels that discrimination is morally indefensible, but we feel sure that he spoke for an overwhelming majority. Even several of the backers of the anti-boycott petition have made it plain that they cannot morally justify racial discrimination. They of course feel this to be secondary to the legal consideration of the man's right to serve whom he pleases.

The Student Legislature is in the same position essentially that Lawler is in. Members of that body are elected more on the basis of leadership ability than on any other question. The fact that they, as campus leaders, also urge the boycott, does not mean their constituents necessarily take the same position.

There has been no attempted power grab in student government nor any attempt to ride rough-shod over student opinion. Rather there has been responsible student government action in the face of an extremely important and pressing question that involves us all very deeply, whether we choose to recognize it or not.

If more students would read President Lawler's full statement and the Resolution passed by the Student Legislature (which will be published tomorrow), they might have a much clearer view of what the problem really is.

It might also be interesting to examine the President's motives for requesting this boycott. He certainly knew that it would gain him nothing politically, which it hasn't. But he requested this boycott, and hoped that it might, if successful, become a substitute for street demonstrations and sit-ins. This sort of substitution is to be greatly desired, as is any form of action that will take the demonstrations out of the streets of Chapel Hill and still insure progress in the area of human rights and dignity.

In requesting this form of action, Lawler was only acting in the best interest of the University and its student body and the town of Chapel Hill.

Utilizing Our Natural Resources

Old East Residence Hall got its Lecture Series underway Tuesday night, and the occasion ought to be recorded. It's the first such instance of student initiative in this area that we've heard of this year.

About 65 people braved the wind and rain to get to Howell Hall auditorium and hear Dr. Harold A. Bierck of the History Department and Dr. John D. Martz of the Institute of Latin American Studies discuss the complicated Panama Canal situation.

Howell Hall holds a lot more than 65 people, but as far as Old East President Dailey Derr is concerned, the program was a success.

"It would have been disappointing," said Derr, "except for the fact that it was raining and those who came were quite responsive."

Clearly, there is a desire for programs of this type. It is to the credit of Derr and his Old East roommates that they care enough about what's going on to provide forums for experts in different areas of current interest.

As we recall, Ruffin Residence Hall last year, but it seems to have folded had a Forum program similar to this up.

We hope that Old East's success will serve as a spur to Ruffin and other Residence Halls to see about setting up similar programs.

The amount of expertise on this campus which goes neglected because of a lack of apparent student interest and initiative should be reduced. Such programs as Old East presented Tuesday night is a great way to do this, in a manner that redounds to everyone's advantage.

Just A Note

Just a note to remind interested students that they still have an opportunity to get a look at what the Peace Corps is all about without much difficulty.

A movie of Peace Corps volunteers in action will be shown tonight at 6:15 and 7 p.m. in Murphey Hall, and the information table in the lobby of the YM-YWCA Building in Y-Court will be in operation throughout the day.

Juniors interested in joining the Corps after graduation can apply now on the Senior Year Program and take the qualifying exams right here on the campus.

Students accepted into the Corps will go through the first part of their training this summer.

The Peace Corps has proven its worth. Among other things, it provides American college students with a chance to prove theirs.

Campus Code

Editors, The Tar Heel:

It saddens me to see that the day of the UNC Campus Code is no more. This code states that UNC students are to act as ladies and gentlemen at all times and to see that their fellow students act in the same gentlemanly manner.

By condoning the racial demonstrations the student government and parts of the university administration destroy the very foundation on which our campus code is based.

Volume 67 of "The Carolina Handbook" states in the section on the campus code: "Misconduct, AT ALL TIMES AND IN ALL PLACES, is a reflection upon the University as well as upon the student." I imagine that by now most of the student demonstrators have police records, which is tragic in itself, and therefore have no more self-respect. These people should be exceptions to the latter part of the above statement. The major concern is that these students and faculty members who demonstrate ARE a reflection on The University.

Although only a small part of the University community takes part, these are the ones that make UNC lose face in the nation. This is hardly fitting for the oldest state university in the Country.

Unfortunately, though, this seems to be the growing trend so I would like to suggest that future editions of "The Carolina Handbook" omit the part on the Campus Code and possibly insert pictures of the UNC demonstrators in its place.

Cartoon

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I feel called up to protest the blatantly unprincipled attack which the Daily Tar Heel unleased upon Armistead Maupin and Clark Crampton in the vicious "cartoon" in the Sunday, Feb. 16 issue of the DTH.

I know both Crampton and Maupin well. Both are gentlemen, perhaps not in the DTH sense of a gentleman being one who stages sit-ins and violates the law because the law violates his conscience, but in the sense of men who believe in abiding by the law and the moral codes by which society exists.

Both Mr. Crampton and Mr. Maupin believe fully as deeply in what they are fighting for as do the Daily Tar Heel editors and CORE believe in what they are fighting for. To place Mr. Crampton and Mr. Maupin in the same category as Mrs. Watts would be laughable if it were not so basically untruthful and libelous.

Perhaps the DTH fears Mr. Crampton and Mr. Maupin because they have chosen to fight with words and not with blows, bombs or crudities along the lines of a Mrs. Watts. Hence the savage cartoon with its attempt to villify these two students.

I am not in agreement with Mr. Maupin or Mr. Crampton; I believe that they represent an intransigent and archaic attitude which must pass if the South is to progress. But neither am I in agreement with the radical and unrealistic policies of CORE and the DTH which are like a corrosive acid eating away at the foundations of American constitutional liberties.

But this is not the point. The crux of the matter is this. If the DTH editors cannot combat its opponents in a reasonable, lucidly logical manner, but must resort to underhanded smears, then it is time for them to step down and let others, more competent to run a college daily, assume their positions.

Gentlemen, by printing the unprincipled cartoon of Sunday, February 16, you have perpetrated a foul piece of degradation, not upon your intended victims, but upon yourselves.

Half Slave And Half Free

Lawlerism

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Through the recent boycott squabble, the defenders of Lawlerism have been telling us what a great job of leading the Student Body the 22 Lawleristic legislators are doing. I seem to remember that these Legislators, when they were candidates, sought the right to REPRESENT us, some of them even promising to bring the Student Government closer to their constituents. Somehow, I can't recall a single one of them issuing the campaign statement: "A great prophet has come from California. I am his disciple. Together we shall lead you out of the wilderness of your own ignorance."

The democratic spirit of Lawler's following has again made itself evident in the postponement of Student Government elections. Arthur Hays provided five semi-legitimate reasons for the later date, all handily refuted by Don Carson. Phil Baddour, the disciple whom Lawler loves, gave a much more believable motivation. Phil told me that the date changing had been enacted in order to give the campus time to cool off after the boycott controversy. It doesn't seem quite in keeping with the other principles of true Lawlerism that the chosen ones should wish to cool off anything, but the ways of divine leaders are not always those of ordinary mortals.

There are several of us still around who remember when the Messianic Michael could be found any night of the week at Harry's, with his unshaven cheeks, his unwashed jeans, and his very nearly unshod feet. Lawler seems to be a North Hollywood Moses, who never realized that sandles do not a prophet make, nor legislative acts a leader.

Gallant Knights

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Being an extremely bright, alert, and constantly aware individual, I am happy to say that it has taken only six months for me to grasp your stand on such issues as the Speaker Ban Law and integration.

Of course, had it not been for your tireless efforts of keeping me informed of the developments day after day after day, I might easily have missed your point. Boy, you guys sure are subtle. I guess we at Carolina are just plain lucky to have such individuals of your caliber to keep us on the ball. Without your continuous stream of new and exciting articles, I would still be the uninformed and dull person I was six months ago.

There are, however, some members of our student body who have not yet understood exactly what you are trying to convey to them. They are not as sharp as I am and on their behalf I request that you continue your flow of information concerning these two topics. With your diverse and unbiased presentation of these two events of interest to the students, I feel that in only four or five more months you will have reached all the students and freed them from the shackles of ignorance and prejudice as you have freed me. I have the utmost confidence that you will not shirk from this courageous task.

Ride on Gallant Knights!

Reviewer Says 'Late Liz' Is Same Old Soap Opera

By DIANE HILE

"The Late Liz," by Gert Behanna. 283 pgs.

History is history — facts is facts, man, and once you know 'em you've heard 'em before.

In the great tradition of the soap opera, "I'll Cry Tomorrow" and True Confessions, we have . . . (fanfare please) . . . "The Late Liz," starring Gert Behanna, girl wonder of the Waldorf Astoria.

You know the book, its the paperback with the sexy dame on the black cover, with all the impressive quotes from various newspapers. It sells for 50 cents at your nearest friendly bookstore!

This is truly a true confession. It's an "uncensored," "to hell and back" account that has "complete candor and sensible evaluations." Gert Behanna, this is your life.

To begin at the beginning of our historical venture, we pause briefly at the entrance of Astorialand. The ticket keeper is big Daddy Sam, the self made man. He gives little Liz a gold glittered ticketbook to try all the rides and spills that await her. However, he made a mistake when he gave her the exit ticket.

For some reason, he stamped her head instead of her hand.

So we have to follow this little girl through the lands of frontier, adventure and fantasy—shedding a husband each go 'round. Sometimes the girl is floating, sometimes she's drugged, but all the time she's selfish and convinced she's wonderful.

At the end of fantasyland we have a brief interlude to rest our weary feet as Liz gets sick from too many rides and tries to escape. But her "spirits" are lifted, she finds God and herself and merrily we go off into tomorrowland.

I must mention Liz's two sons. One got tired out before he reached fantasyland. However, he rejoined us before we closed the book in the place marked tomorrowland, thus assuring a happy ending.

This book is far from great. It's just the story of a girl who hits Skid Row, or as she says a "Skid Row with silk sheets." With blood and guts she pulls herself out.

We are given the facts. Liz has money, is looking for something, worships her father, knows she drinks too much, knows she's smart and an individual, likes men, loves her sons and floats from bar to bar. We know in the end, she finds God and herself.

But she commits the sin of humdrum writing. She tells you she is going on an exciting ride before she pays for the ticket—thus making the clumsy details boring. She analyzes to the extent that there is no challenge to the reader, he soon becomes so spoon fed that it is easy to put the book down.

Her story is a real lulu—but the book is a bore.

The highlights of the book are when Liz is seen through someone else's eyes. It is then that the faint-hearted tremble. These brief interludes come as a welcome change to the constant self analyzes and superficial descriptions. They play on the quick witty answers of the tight tornado she really was.

Her whirlwind personality still persists, though in the book she would have you think she became the shy bleeding rose of humanity. Obviously, her speeches on the college campuses have proved this picture to be false.

I doubt this book will knock you completely out of your chair as some of her speeches are reputed to have done. She stifles her personality and in turn, stifles the story. Her whiplash remarks get lost between the tongue and the pen.

This book was not destined to have been a sensationalized "shocker." No woman who has fought so hard to find herself and God would want to see her book "Banned in Boston." Nevertheless, it should have been presented in a more interesting and less plodding style.

It is recommended that Gert Behanna's next book be written by someone who knows how to make the reader want to get to page 283 before he's lived as long and hard as Liz.

ent." The newspaper also quoted Mrs. Taylor as saying, "It probably is unconstitutional. It might be considered constitutional, though, by a loose interpretation by the courts." (An editorial appearing in this issue of the Weekly was based on the quotes attributed to Mrs. Taylor.)

Mrs. Taylor said last night, however, that she would not be in favor of any restriction which abridged constitutional rights and she believed the other members of the Human Relations Committee felt the same way. She said she hoped some sort of agreement could be worked out by which the strain on the Police Department would be eased, but she emphasized that she would be opposed to any restrictive ordinance infringing on constitutional rights.

ATO's Sam Sampson Hits 13 In 45-32 Win Over Sigma Nu

By PETE GAMMONS

ATO defeated Sigma Nu in Tuesday night's biggest fraternity basketball action, 45-32. Sammy Simpson led the charge that broke open the eight game, and ended up leading all scorers with 13.

Chi Phi downed the Delta Sigs 38-33, to earn the right to meet the DKE's in the first round game last night.Chi Phi's Stan Thompson paced the scoring with 20, while Coleman Ross led the losers with nine.

John Poole poured in 20 as the Phi Delts rolled over the Phi Gams, 63-37 in a Blue playoff. George Wainright, Butch Winstead, and Booby Reagan also hit in double figures for the Phi Delts. Willie Hobson led the Phi Gams with 16.

Later, in the widest margin of the day, DKE bombed the hapless Chi Phis, 82-8. Tom Roberts hit for 24 and Bill Whitaker 22 for the Dekes. Bill Jones led the losers with 4.

Joe Kampf and Tom Davis scored 21 and 20 respectively as Everett eliminated Lewis in the Dorm division, 56-39. Lee Carlin scored 23 for Lewis.

Mangum tipped the Craige A team, 57-53, greatly helped by Craige's loss of baseball players Mike McGlaughlin, Dick Prindle, and Bill Taylor. Tom Huffman scored 20 for Mangum while Bill Batten hit for 17 for Craige.

In handball action the Physics fouls tipped the Med School I, 2-1. In a correction from yesterday, Everett defeated Navy B, rather than Manly B, in handball.

We Get KIX

Three UNC soccer players have been named to the National soccer Coaches Association's All-Southern team.

Left fullback Park McGinty, right halfback Bill Haywood and left wing Jim Talbot were chosen by the All-America selection committee. The three were all outstanding in UNC's 5-3-2 year this past fall. The Tar Heels were 1-1-2 in the ACC. McGinty and Talbot will captain next year's squad.

Open House Friday Will Honor Eaton

The Bull's Head Bookshop will have an open house in honor of poet Charles Eaton Friday at 4 p.m.

The Friday afternoon "meet the public" session at the Bull's Head will follow the 8 p.m. Thursday appearance of the poet at Dey Hall, fourth floor. Mr. Eaton will read selections from his poetry in Dey Hall.

His visit here is sponsored by the North Carolina Poetry Circuit.

His poetry and prose have appeared in over forty publications both here and abroad.

It has a pleasantly grainy texture, like the surface of flagstone, and the colorings it takes are intriguingly odd. Iced Pink. Frost Blue. The cool Stone-Green of lichen, and a Gold as pale as straw. ## Grand Jury Gets Sit-Ins Monday

Civil rights cases of Chapel Hill integrationists will be presented to the grand jury for indictments when the first of four weeks of Orange County Superior Court is convened in Hillsboro Monday.

About 70 cases in which either the defendants or the state waived recorder's court hearings and asked for jury trials are to be presented to the grand jury. The dockets for the first week, carry about 135 cases on the trial calendar. Judge C. W. Hall of Durham will preside.

It is not expected that any of the civil rights cases will be ready for trial next week, since the docket is fairly crowded with other cases.

However, trial of these and upwards of 600 other cases on which indictments are also pending is expected to begin the following week when three special one-week criminal sessions will be held by Judge Raymond Mallard of Tabor City.

The calendar for this March 2-21 period shows about 450 cases on the grand jury calendar and approximately 50 cases, including some of those from next week's grand jury calendar, on the regular trial docket. Court officials emphasized that a number of additional cases may be received and acted upon which were not on hand when the calendar went to press.

The grand jury hearings on indictments will be for as many as a dozen charges against certain individuals who repeatedly participated in the civil rights demonstrations of the last two months in Chapel Hill.

Dance?

Learn to dance—cheap.

GMAB is sponsoring dance lessons once a week from March 5 through April 30, and you can learn such things as fox trot, cha-cha, bosanova and tango, as well as many others. But there are several catches to the whole deal . . .

1. The class is limited—only the first 15 males and 15 females will be accepted.

2. It costs something—but it's only a miserly 25c per lesson for eight lessons.

3. You have to sign up by Wednesday — at the Graham Memorial Information Desk, and the $2.00 for all 8 lessons must be paid in advance.

An experienced dance instructor will be on hand (she gets $5 an hour, usually), and sessions will be held each Thursday night from 7-8:30 p.m. in Graham Memorial.

In addition to becoming a Ginger Rogers (or Fred Astaire), you might also find a boy (or girl) friend.

Petitions Still Going 'Round The Campus

1460 Vs. Boycott
790 For Lawler

Petitions opposing and supporting Student Legislature's boycott resolution are still being circulated.

The petition opposing the boycott, sponsored by Armistead Maupin and Clark Crampton, has almost ceased circulation.

Crampton and Borden Parker, the UP legislator who told the Legislature ten days ago that the Maupin-Crampton petition had 1500 signatures on it, showed a DTH reporter their copies of the petition yesterday. Signatures on them numbered 1460.

When Parker was asked why he represented the petition in Legislature as having 1500 signatures on it, he said Maupin had told him before the meeting that 1380 names were on it, and nearly 20 copies were still being circulated.

"The figure of 1500 signatures I gave the Legislature was an approximation," Parker said.

Crampton and Parker said there may be other copies of the petition still out, but the sponsors have stopped circulation.

Harry Muir, sponsor of the petition supporting the boycott, said his petition had 790 signatures on it at last count. Copies of Muir's petition are being sent to the DTH.

Jim Opton, who is helping Muir circulate the petition, said an additional 200 copies of it are being printed up and circulation is still active.

Crampton and Parker would not allow their 1460 signatures to be submitted to the DTH.

'Question' Opens Sun. In Durham

"A Question of Mother," a new play by Wilton Beauchamp of the UNC Dept. of Drama, will open Sunday night at the Triangle Coffee House in Durham. This is the fifth in a series of new plays by Carolina students to be produced by the Triangle Players.

A comedy of manners, "A Question of Mother" is about a stuffy British family whose Oxford son brings home a very French ma'amzelle as his fiancee. Virginia Cordneau of UNC plays the French girl. Also in the cast are Jane Harris, John Kelley, James Pipkin and Jeff Warner, all of Durham. Dick King, a former Carolina Playmaker, is directing the production.

The play will be presented this Sunday evening, Wednesday, February 26, and Sunday, March 1. Curtain time is 9:30

The Triangle Coffiee House's series of new plays will continue throughout the spring semester.

Cassius Will Leave U.S.A. If He Loses

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) — Challenger Cassius Clay crawled across his training ring Thursday on his hands and knees and then kissed the canvas to illustrate how humble he will be if he loses to champion Sonny Liston next Tuesday night in their heavyweight title fight.

Gaseous Cassius announced loudly from the ring, "If that old man beats me, I'll crawl across to him and kiss his feet and then I'll take the first plane out of the country."

It was the first time he ever had illustrated what he says he will do in defeat at the Miami Beach Convention Hall. He was loudly applauded by the 43 sportswriters and cameramen at the ringside.

Dickson Asks SP To Take CR Stand

"I believe that it is the feeling of the majority of the Student Party members that we should take a firm stand on the civil rights question."

This was the comment of Paul Dickson, SP Chairman, after a panel discussion on integration Wednesday night.

Sitting on the panel were Dr. Robert Sitton of the philosophy department; Father Robert Wilken, Catholic chaplain on campus; Student Body President Mike Lawler and former senior class president Ray Farris. The panel was moderated by Dickson.

Discussion included the recruitment of Negro athletes and the hiring of Negro professors, two areas of student participation.

Farris said that UNC should definitely try to get Negro athletes, provided that they are academically qualified. He pointed out that a number of promising Negro athletes from North Carolina have gone to schools out of the state.

Dr. Sitton said that Negroes should be hired for professorships on account of their qualifications, not their color.

In the question and answer period that followed, Dr. Sitton was asked his opinion of racial demonstrations. He replied that they are of use in that they draw people out and force them to take a stand, rather than remain undecided.

The request was made from the floor that Lawler go to the Men's Residence Council, the Interfraternity Council, the Order of the Grail and other organizations to explain and clarify his recent statement on integration. It was also suggested that he speak in the residence halls for this purpose.

Mississippi Police State, Says Speaker

By JOHN GREENBACKER

"Mississippi today is a police state," Al Lowenstein, assistant professor of social sciences at N. C. State, said Wednesday.

Speaking at the inaugural ceremonies of the Di-Phi, Lowenstein called the deep south state a "disgrace."

"I went to Mississippi with the impression that it would be like an extension of Raleigh," he said. "Instead, I found it to be a different country.

"Mississippi is under police occupation from the Gulf Coast to the Tennessee border," he added. "The police completely disregard the constitutions of the state and federal governments."

Citing numerous examples of police brutality, Lowenstein attempted to portray the situation as vividly as possible.

He described the problems integration groups meet when they attempt to get Negroes to register at the polls. Those Negroes who attempt to register have their names published in the local newspapers and most are fired from their jobs.

Lowenstein recalled one aged sharecropper who tried to register, but while he was away from his home, it was blown up. Local police arrested the man for arson. When fines had wiped out his life savings, the sharecropper found himself without money, job or shelter.

In one town. Lowenstein said,

UNCR To Observe CU Day Tomorrow

This is one of the tuberculosis sanatoriums built with funds gathered by World University Service, one of the charities the UNC Campus Chest will support this year. This sanatorium is in Japan.

By HUGH STEVENS

Tomorrow will be Consolidated University Day at UNC's Raleigh campus—N. C. State

Highlights of the day will include a regular meeting of the Consolidated University Student Council, a speech by Al Lowenstein and free entertainment. The festivities will wind up with the State-Carolina basketball games tomorrow night.

Each campus of the University observes CU Day once each year. Tomorrow's celebration will be the last in this year's series.

The CUSC, headed by Jean Ellen Jones of UNC-G, will convene for a luncheon meeting at 1 p.m. in the Erdahl - Cloyd Student Union. The agenda will include a discussion of recent changes in the manner of selecting members of the various council delegations. Improvements in CU Day activities and better methods of recruiting students for the University will also be discussed.

Lowenstein, a professor of Social Studies at State and an outspoken advocate of integration, will speak in the Student Union ballroom at 4 p.m.

"The Cold Cuts," a musical group of 15 girls from St. Mary's Junior College, will offer free entertainment following Lowenstein's address. Refreshments will also be offered during an informal social hour, also in the ballroom.

The State-Carolina freshman man, better known as "The Bobby Lewis Show," will tap off at 6:15 in William Neal Reynolds Colisum. Billy Cunningham's varsity crew follows the yearlings onto the floor at 8 p.m., and the Tar Heels will be seeking to come back from a ten-point upset loss to Maryland earlier in the week.

Tickets for both games will be available at the Coliseum box office tomorrow, and the game is not expected to be a sellout.

WUS To Receive Campus Chest $$

By BRUCE HUNTER
The Campds Chest

Twenty-five cents will provide three meals a doy at Florina College in Greece.

Two dollars and fifty cents will buy a pair of eye glasses for an Indian statement. These are only two of the ways the World University Service aids students in other parts of the world. WUS is one of the five organizations that will receive funds from the Campus Chest this year.

WUS, which spans 50 countries on all continents, is an international mutual assistance program. It is the only one in which aid is given on a student-to-student basis.

WUS administers a $3 million a year program consisiting of mutual assistance projects in the fields of student health, lodging and living, educational activities and facilities and individual and emergency aid.

The World University Service, however, is more than just a "hand-out" organization. Every dollar spent by its International Committee is matched by the student who is being helped.

The assistance given by the organization is neither random charity nor based on prejudiced policies. Aid is administered along sound economic lines. Whenever possible, conditions are created in which students can help themselves rather than rely on others. Aid is provided without regard to race, creed, or nationality. Ability and proven need alone are the criteria.

High on the list of projects is the University of Algiers. OAS bombings burned out the university's 500,000 volume library and destroyed several other buildings. WUS has pledged $30,000 for the reconstruction of the university.

In Japan a 30-bed tuberculosis sanitorium was recently opened. The building contains facilities which enable students to continue their studies while hospitalized. WUS is presently working on 85 projects of this nature, and all depend entirely on the support of college students.

QUEEN REIGNS

Anne Queen, staff member of the campus YWCA, will speak at the Southeastern Baptist Seminary, Wake Forest, on Saturday.

"The Peace Corps as an Opportunity for Altruistic Service" is the title of Queen's address. She will speak to attendees at a two-day missions conference in which students from about 100 colleges and universities in the South are participating.

Miss Queen is a member of Governor Sanford's Peace Corps Advisory Council and she works with the UNC campus Peace Corps Committee.

Committee Of 100 Is Formed

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The "third force" in Chapel Hill's racial picture showed the first signs of moving out of the embryonic stage Wednesday night as it renamed itself, elected a chairman and elaborated on its goals.

"It is our hope to act as a commission link between Mayor McClamroch and CORE," said Dr. Joseph Straley, newly-elected chairman of the newly-named Committee of Concerned Citizens.

"We exisit in response to a situation," Straley said of the group. "Segregation policies and, in particular, the current crisis, call for some action by the townspeople."

Straley, a 1941 graduate of Ohio State and now in his 20th year as a member of the University Physics Department, admits that his group's purpose is vague.

"We can not define our goals too closely, because we must be able to respond to all problems as they arise," he explained.

At the moment, the Committee of Concerned Citizens is concern-

Committee Says 'No' To New Law

The mayor's Human Relations Committee has called on the Board of Aldermen not to pass the proposed restriction on picketing.

The committee recommended instead that picketing groups "voluntarily" restrict their activity and notify police 12 hours in advance of all picketing.

The committee's action was taken after short discussion Wednesday night, with no dissent.

Two committee members indicated Wednesday that they doubted the restriction is constitutional. They were UNC Law School Dean Henry Brandis and Warren Wicker of the Institute of Government.

A report from several members said discussions with townspeople led them to believe that "the prohibition of peaceful picketing from the hours 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. is undesirable and probably unlawfully restrictive of constitutionally protected rights."

Asst. Atty. Gen. Ralph Moody this week issued an opinion saying that the ordinance was constitutional.

The report first suggested that the 12 hour advance notice to Dean Katherine Carmichael as a typical Carolina Coed?

Dr. Bernard Boyd as an athlete?

Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont as a scholar?

No, kind reader, South Building hasn't changed into South Wing—it's all in fun. Tonight these three will participate in the faculty skit at the All-Campus Talent Show sponsored by the freshman class, along with such luminaries of the stage as Andrew Scott, Walter Fallow, Dr. George Daniels, Dr. William Koch and Sue Ross. Curtain time is 8 p.m. at Memorial Hall.

Add to this Ray Stansbuy, Orange County's only candidate for governor, football player Charlie Davis, the renown "Fuzzy Wuzzy" McInnis and basketball star, Bob Bennett, and you have quite a big show. There is a total of 17 acts.

Stansbury will bring his country and western band into Memorial Hall, and as a finale will deliver one of his famous campaign speeches. Among the points on his platform is stronger laws designed at stopping the flow of North Carolina tax money to South Dakota.

Davis, according to Talent Show chairman Teddy O'Toole, is "a great singer." Bennett will join with Suzi Sterling in a modern dance arrangement and McInnis will play the piano.

Tickets for the show are 75c stag and $1 a couple. Proceeds will go to the freshman class treasury to help finance a big weekend in the spring.

Tickets will be on sale all day in Y-Court and GM, as well as at the door tonight.

Schools Cancel Speakers

CHICAGO (CPS)—Two Chicago-area universities recently cancelled the scheduled speaking engagements of nationally controversial political speakers.

Loyola University of Chicago banned Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace from appearing at its "Speak-Easy" student forum last Friday afternoon. Northwestern University announced that Arizona Sen. Barry Goldwater would not appear at an April 10 rally sponsored by Youth for Goldwater.

The Loyola-Wallace incident brought charges of a lack of administrative faith in faculty members from Stan Dale, lecturer in the Loyola speech department. Dale, also a newsman for WLS, Chicago's ABC radio outlet, had extended the invitation to Wallace.

"The question", Dale said, "is do they have faith in their faculty members or don't they?" Dale felt that as a faculty member his decisions in inviting speakers should be binding on the university.

Richard Barry, Loyola director of public relations, said that university regulations "require all outside speakers to be cleared with the office of the dean of students prior to their invitation." In the Wallace case, claimed Barry, such permission was never requested until after the invitation had been extended.

"Dale thought he had the authority to invite speakers," stated Barry. "In reality he did not." Conflicting statements came from instructor Dale. He charged that the prior clearance rule had never before been enforced.

"I only submit requests for clearance after I've invited an individual," said Dale. "If the prior clearance rule were to be enforced, we'd never get these individuals here," he added.

Loyola dean of students Harry L. McCloskey, said that the school has been favorable to and has conducted programs for the students at which both popular and unpopular points of view were expressed by nationally known speakers on controversial issues."

Stated Barry: "We take the liberty of deciding which issues shall be discussed at what time. In this situation, we are acting as citizens of Chicago. We feel it would not be of benefit to the Chicago community for Wallace to speak at Loyola."

Northwestern University officials said they cancelled the Goldwater speech due to the demands of its sponsors to erect 10,000 temporary seats in McGaw Memorial Hall for the event.

Permanent seating of 4,000 exists in the fieldhouse. Northwestern claimed that the use of extra seating would conflict with the school's spring athletic program. NU Youth for Goldwater chairman James Kolbe was in agreement with the official comment on the incident.

However, Youth for Goldwater national steering committee member Robert F. Croll claimed that the group's initial request had included the request for additional seating.

He charged that the initial request was turned down and that a request to see NU President J. Roscoe Miller about the speech was denied.

More Facts For The Forum, Friends

As promised in yesterday's Tar Heel, we are today printing a copy of the boycott resolution passed by Student Legislature a week ago last Tuesday. We hope that this, plus our earlier publication in full of President Mike Lawler's statement calling for a voluntary boycott of establishments which practice racial discrimination, will make debate about the boycott more factual.

Date: February 11, 1964
Introduced by: Neal Jackson (SP) DM V and Darst Murphy (UP) TW
Action: Passed as amended February 11, 1964

A RESOLUTION DIRECTED TOWARD THE ALLEVIATION OF TENSIONS IN CHAPEL HILL

WHEREAS: Past negotiations and demonstrations have not served to alleviate the problems of racial discrimination in the Chapel Hill area, and

WHEREAS: An extreme state of tension—conducive to violence and prohibitive to negotiation—now exists in this community, and

WHEREAS: We as students affirm our belief in the equality of opportunity for all students, and

WHEREAS: We wish to affirm our belief by actively discouraging the policies basically responsible for the present state of tension in Chapel Hill,

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE STUDENT LEGISLATURE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA THAT:

ARTICLE I. Although we clearly affirm the constitutional guarantee available to protest civil inequities, we submit that the present form of civil demonstrations in Chapel Hill is not proving rational or successful in the attainment of equal opportunities for all students of this university.

ARTICLE II. This body supports the position of the student judiciary in investigating possible Campus Code violations arising from demonstrations.

ARTICLE III. This body urges those Chapel Hill merchants who maintain segregated establishments to offer equal service to all students without regard to race, creed, religion, or national origin, and this body further urges our constituents to refrain from patronizing those establishments in Chapel Hill which continue to refuse equal service to all students.

ARTICLE IV. This body urges the Chapel Hill Board of Alderman to accept on its Special Racial Mediation Committee one student representative to be appointed by the Speaker of the Student Legislature.

ARTICLE V. The body further urges the President of the Student Body to name a student to serve on the Chapel Hill Human Relations Committee.

(s) Robert W. Spearman, Vice-President of the Student Body and Speaker of the Student Legislature.

(s) Michael H. Lawler, President of the Student Body

Various Things About Various Things

Sometimes little things annoy us, or we have some vague thoughts about things going on on campus, but the annoyance is never large enough or the thought clear enough to deserve an editorial and so they slide by unchronicled. The only trouble is the list grows longer, and they all deserve some mention, so we decided to mention a few of the more obvious ones.

First, there's Cameron Ave. They (that means somebody somewhere) dug it up to do something sometime in the past, and it is still dug up. Cameron had enough of its own natural craters without the new man made ones that seem to be permanent. Last Saturday night a student managed to blow out two tires and break his rear axle in one of these unmarked ravines. He estimated his speed at not more than 25 mph at the time. After his accident a barricade was erected to keep others out of the same trouble. The hole shouldn't have been there in the first place, and secondly, it should have been marked. But the whole street needs to be completely repaved, and needs it badly.

Then there's the Campus Mail. Now the Campus Mail is a service which is provided free to most anyone in the University Community who wishes to use it, and is unquestionably a convience. They only trouble is that every now and then something goes into the Campus Mail and doesn't come out again, or comes out two months later. This has had particularly serious effects on the efforts of the Carolina Forum this year since several letters from prospective speakers arrived at the Forum more than a month after they arrived in Chapel Hill. It is almost impossible to grouse about something that is provided free, but if the University is going to provide this service, some effort should be made to make it a good bit safer means of transmitting the various communications which pass through it.

No list of things which annoy could be complete without mentioning the Book Exchange. Unfortunately most of the gripes about this den of robber barons is somewhat misplaced since the publishing houses set the prices on text books, and the Exchange just adds handling costs. They say. We aren't quite sure just who is involved in the grand conspiracy, but there have been a few notable instances of books being published for the general public and then being converted to text books with an enormous price jump. As we said, most of this can be laid at the door of the publisher, but one thing that can be taken directly to the Exchange is the price the Exchange buys used books for, and the price they get when they resell them. It is impossible to imagine that handling costs for these texts could run to a dollar or more. That's some high priced handling.

Then there is the basement of Hanes Hall. We have become particularly fond of this bastion of bureauracracy, having spent many hours down there marveling at the efficiency with which they are able to turn sound, well-balanced students into sobbing wrecks within a matter of minutes.

At one point in our past we were informed that our registration had been cancelled. Upon checking, we found that the registration department had a pink card that we were supposed to have, and they could only explain this phenomonon by concluding that we were no longer in residence. After fourteen trips to the dean's office and back we were told we could re-register if we could get the proper pink card. We got the pink card and went back only to be asked where our green card was. "I didn't know I had to have a green card, and when you told me to get the pink card why didn't you tell me about the green one?"

"You didn't ask me about whether you needed a green card."

"Oh. Well before I go for the green card, do I need a red card, a blue card, a yellow card, a purple card . . ."

"No, but since it's ten days after the beginning of the semester, you'll have to pay a $5 late registration fee."

At that point we broke down and surrendered unconditionally to our obvious fate.

Just one more little short gripe. We are tired of getting the feeling that the employees at the Pine Room are doing us a favor when we order something. We are also tired of waiting for twenty minutes for a grilled cheese sandwich only to find that our order was lost in the shuffle.

That's the end of this list, but not nearly the end of things which will get comment, eventually.

Visit To A Grave

By LOUDON WAINWRIGHT
Life Magazine

It was the kind of windy, not-quite-bitter afternoon when he would have left his topcoat in the White House and his hair would have kept scudding down across his forehead. The clouds charged eastward in ragged phalanxes, and the February sun, repeatedly uncovered by their passing, threw bleak spotlight shafts—now on the Capitol, now on a piece of the cold Potomac, now on the ragged line of people stretching up the Arlington hillside to the grave. The line that Sunday was perhaps a quarter mile long and held 1,000 people. It moved very slowly, and because newcomers joined its beginning at about the same rate others completed the walk past the grave, the line remained the same length all afternoon.

Two little boys, brothers, left the line at about its midpoint and began playing in the winter-brown grass among the stones. Here the round-topped headstones of the enlisted dead were uniform and small, their precise files following the contours of the hill. Farther up, near the pillared Curtis-Lee mansion, a hierarchy was evident, reflected in the greater size and varying shapes of the stones which marked the graves of generals and admirals.

One of the boys leaned on the marker covering Edwarl Burns Tyler, and the other crouched behind James Henry McDonald. They began firing imaginary pistols at each other.

"Do you think that's all right?" their mother asked.

Her husband shrugged and grinned. "If it worries you, don't look."

It was a patient crowd, even a cheerful one, and if the people in it were making any sort of a pilgrimage, they appeared to be unconscious of it. Above all, it was an intimate, family crowd there on the hillside, as if going to the grave were the sort of basic personal occasion one attends only in the company of close relatives, or sweethearts, or the truest friends. Children, brought direct from Sunday dinner, were everywhere, and the gayest colors in the line came from blankets which sheltered babies from the raw wind.

"Just think," a father said, "under every one of those stones, somebody's down there."

"Under the ground?" his daughter asked.

"Yes, under the ground."

"Why?"

The girl's brother spoke: "They got shot."

The father frowned at the boy. "You don't have to get shot to get in here," he said.

The line shuffled forward up the cemetery roadway. A few yards from the line an old couple in black coats walked along a row of stones, stopping at each one and bending over together to read the name, like dinner guests looking for place cards at a table. The higher up in the line one moved, the better the view back toward Washington. The traffic, coming across the wide bridge from the Lincoln Memorial, clotted at the intersection directly in front of the Arlington gates, and the constant screech of police whistles was audible on the hillside.

"Where have they got Pope John?" a child asked his mother.

"Pope John? Oh, he's not here, dear. He's in Italy."

"What do we do when we get there?"

"We just stand there and look."

About two thirds of the distance to the grave, the line left the roadway and cut across the grass on a narrow boardwalk covered with canvas. The jumble of footsteps on this new surface sounded hollow, reminiscent of the sounds of the drums heard so often that weekend in November. The grave, or at least the low white picket fence around it, was clearly visible now, and so were the flame and the big displays of flowers in horseshoes and circles of almost every color.

As the line came closer to the grave, it moved a bit faster and the people, who by now had been inching forward for more than an hour, grew quieter. Some began to make last-minute adjustments on their cameras. One woman took a compact from her purse and quickly powdered her nose. Straight up the hill beyond the grave, another crowd looked down on the scene from a terrace in front of the Custis-Lee mansion.

"I don't think I'm going to cry," one young woman told her husband.

Suddenly, up a path that paralleled the main walkway, a guard sergeant led three women directly to the grave. They all wore scarves over their hair and they stood silently for a moment looking in across the picket fense.

"Who are they?" somebody whispered.

"They must be friends of the family."

"I wonder if she will come today."

The three women left, and the line, now very close to the grave, narrowed almost to single file and began to move quite rapidly. The walkway ended, changed to gravel, and the plot came into full view. It was a very simple gravesite. The dimensions of thep lot inside the picket fence were perhaps 20 by 30 feet. It appeared to slant downhill. The big floral displays were arranged all along the fence in the upper half. More flowers, these in smaller bunches, were lined up at the foot of the three graves. One of the children's graves had a headstone over it, the other a cross. Over the big grave in the center was a pile of evergreens and there, too, was the flame, burning orange and flickering in the wind.

But still, simple as it looked, one could not take it all in. The long, slow walk achieved, there was suddenly too much to see and too little time to see it.One strained for a solid record to keep, and yet the impressions came too fast, piling on top of one another before the mind was ready. There were questions to be asked about everything. Inside the fence, all those flowers—where did they come from and what did the ribbons on them say? The little cross on the right that read "Baby Girl Kennedy"—what was the date on it? Those servicemen's hats resting on the evergreens piled on the grave—who put them there and why?

"Please keep it moving, sir," said a guard, his young face ruddy from the cold. "There are a lot of people left to go and we close up soon."

"Is it like this every day?"

"Most every day, sir. Even in the week."

Some, braking themselves with cameras at their eyes, lingered momentarily, but the main stream of the line flowed around the fence and down another walkway that led away from the grave.

"Was he there, under that fire?" a child asked his mother. And she only looked down and nodded.

Where the walkway came back to the winding cemetery road, a young man stood beside a small sign which read: President John F. Kennedy, Gravesite Entrance. The young man made a somber face and a friend took his picture. The two changed places and the photographer was photographed beside the sign. Then, their right to claim a small personal share of a great public event duly documented, they looked for a moment at the wonderful view of Washington and started down the hill.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Freedom School

Editors, The Tar Heel:

A news item has appeared in a number of newspapers indicating that I am one of several teachers at the "Freedom School" which has been established by the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee for students involved in the current boycott of the all-Negro Lincoln High School. This letter is intended to clarify my part in the work of that school.

I played no part in the initiation of the boycott of the Lincoln High School. The Chapel Hill Freedom Committee has at no time asked for my advice regarding the boycott. Furthermore I have not knowingly encouraged any student to stay away from classes at any of the public schools.

In my opinion the boycott is a mistake. I hope that the students will return voluntarily to their classes and that the authorities will accept them upon their return.

As far as I am concerned the boycott is a "fait accompli"; the students are out of school. If my work of less than five hours per week in the teaching of mathematics indicates in any way my sanction of their truancy, I can only express regret at this as an unfortunate by-product of what has been for me a very difficult decision.

I rationalize my work with these students as follows:

(a) Perhaps I can play the role of a "Third Force". The community of Chapel Hill may well need someone one of these days who knows something of the views from both sides of the racial fence.

(b) Through my instruction it may be possible to keep the work of these students in progress during this interim. If this can be accomplished, they will be able to return to their classes without interupting the progress of those who have not engaged in the boycott.

Finally I hope that all who sincerely desire to contribute to an honorable resolution of the present racial crisis in Chapel Hill will note that behind the indignity of sit-in and boycotts there is a genuine aspiration on the part of these students to win a dignity that we, the white race, have denied them.

The Boycott

Editors, the Tar Heel:

One of the main reasons why some of the students of this university have chosen to suggest a boycott of local establishments which will not serve all of us has not been adquately presented. In order to explicate this reason and our position, I would like to submit my statements made at the Student Legislature meeting on February 11.

In introducing the resolution which I co-sponsored: "As you all know, there's a good deal of controversy on campus right now on the pros and cons of students' withdrawing their support from establishments which refuse to serve all students regardless of color. It's good that there is controversy, for it means that the students here are at last giving due consideration to an issue which can no longer be ignored. It is bringing most students out of their typically apathetic attude toward the workings of Student Government also. At last, the students are forced to commit themselves to one side of the issue or the other. And this is as it should be.

"The university, both students and officials, has chosen continually to ignore the growing racial strife in the Chapel Hill area. Most of us do believe in the equality of all peoples and do recognize that integration of all public establishments will come about sooner or later. But the type of demonstrations that some students and professors have participated in have rubbed us the wrong way. And we feel that the action of some demonstrators is unjustiable. But we have not wanted to speak against them because we see that their goals are right and are just. We have hesitated to speak either against or for, and therefore we have said nothing. We have chosen to let the demonstrators and the mechants work it out between themselves.

"But we can no longer ignore the situation and we can no longer keep silent. We can no longer evade commitment. Tensions have built up in Chapel Hill to such a degree that we are on the verge of seeing this university community become another Oxford, Mississippi. We were on television two days ago—not because we are such a fine academic community, but because this is a "tension-ridden town." We cannot stand quietly by and see this happen.

"The merchants do not want to give way, and the demonstrators will not lessen their efforts until the merchants do give in. It is a dilemna. But one which we as students can help to resolve. We know that only when the merchants desegregate can tension here be reduced. Therefore we have an obligation to this university to do our part in discouraging the policies of these merchants if we wish to preserve the peace and self-respect of this community. We can cease patronizing those establishments which do not offer service to all students of this university. We can do this, or we can let Chapel Hill become another Oxford, Mississippi."

In the course of debate, my statements were as follows: "We can not, we should not, and we will not legislate an enforceable boycott. This piece of legislation is a resolution, not a bill. We are suggesting and we are urging, but we are not trying to enforce anything." "In this case, we are not speaking for the student body, we are one group of individuals suggesting to the stu the student body. This is stated in Article III of this resolution. Many may be alienated by this resolution, but it is our job at times to lead our constituents."

These are my statements in full. I hope that they will help at least some students in seeing a major part of the rationale behind the resolution passed in Student Legislature. I regret the Tar Heel has not published the resolution in its entirety, as I feel that all students should know exactly what they are debating.

Disgusted!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I can usually find something in the Tar Heel to disagree with, since my views are somewhat to the right of those of you, the editors, and of many of the letter contributors. However, the cartoon in the edition of Sunday, February 16, has disgusted me completely.

It cannot occur to your broad-minded cartoonist that Mr. Maupin and Mr. Crampton and the fifteen hundred of us who signed the anti-boycott petition are not the allies of Mize, Watts & Co. Mr. Kass has indicted all of us as standing for bigotry, violence, and race hatred. Yet each of us who signed has his own philosophy of the matter. Someone once told me that in Chapel Hill there is a bleeding heart for every cause under the sun. No doubt in some nook or cranny there are students who wish that the demonstrators would be worked over regularly with baseball bats and bleach, and some of their signatures may have found their way onto the petition. But this is certainly not my position, nor that, I think, of the vast majority of the signers of the petition.

It often helps to read. The petition states: "We feel that this (the advocated boycott) would amount to unjustly punishing merchants for exercising their legal rights." As things now stand, the merchants certainly have the legal right to resist integration. Is it unjust to exercise that right? No right can be exercised unjustly, as any opponent of the speaker ban, including myself, can point out. (The gag law excludes those from speaking who have exercised a legal right, the Fifth Amendment.) In my opinion, racial segregation is immoral, un-Christian, and repulsive to everything I have been taught; nevertheless, I have refused to endorse a policy of punishing those who advocate what I consider immoral.

Generally, editorial cartoons have some merit, even the ones in the DTH, but this latest one seems just above the level of absurd trash. It is my dearest hope that your cartoonist will cease painting all the issues of the world in black and white, and will learn that oversimplification does not bring insight, but I doubt he will.

police be incorporated in a town ordinance, but Dean Brandis said that Town Manager Robert Peck suggested that portion be made voluntarily also.

"It was his opinion that this would be a better approach." Dean Brandis said of the Peck suggestion. "Nobody really wanted to arrest anybody for failing to give notice."

The picketing restriction has been the subject of considerable controversy, especially among UNC faculty members and graduate students, some of whom have pledged to test the law in the courts if it is passed again.

The aldermen approved the restriction last week but must vote on it again to make it law.

A voluntary approach by the aldermen would reduce, but not end, late evening picketing, Wicker and committee chairman Mrs. George Taylor said.

The committee said it would continue to "seek voluntary restraint" and self-regulation from picketing groups.

The committee also discussed the recent proposal by UNC philosophy professor E. Maynard Adams to set up a full-time professional staff to work on racial problems.

a member of the Mississippi State Legislature shot and killed a Negro for trying to vote; and the chief witness to the crime, a Negro, was also killed.

Lowenstein recalled an incident in which policemen killed a 20-year-old Negro youth in front of a crowd of people. They said the youth had tried to steal a banana.

In recent voter registration drives, Lowenstein said, field workers were arrested as soon as they entered some towns on such charges as suspicion of auto theft, "resisting to resist arrest" and parking in non-existent no parking zones.

Lowenstein said the police do not use search warrants when they enter a building for investigation.

"The citizens of Mississippi are brainwashed," Lowenstein said. "The children in Mississippi public schools are required to take a course in the superiority of the Caucasian race. The text they use was written in Chapel Hill." (by Dr. W. C. George)

Lowenstein outlined plans for a massive invasion of Mississippi this summer by volunteer field workers from all over the nation. He called for student aid.

"The white people of Mississippi are going to move into the twentieth century or go down into the gutter of disenfranchisement which they have held the Negro in for so many years," he said.

When asked why the national news media do not give the Mississippi problem complete coverage, Lowenstein answered that the wire service employees in the cities are afraid to do so. "They have to live there," he explained.

Switching to the racial difficulties in Chapel Hill, Lowenstein warned local integrationists, "not to forget your objectives. There is in this community a great force of change; don't split it," he added.

Lowenstein advised the body, "As long as there is any injustice in the world, there will be, we hope, those who will try to eradicate it; I ask you to aid them in all ways possible."

ed with the Picketing Ordinance, which will be up for reconsideration at next Monday night's meeting of the Board of Aldermen. The ordinance, if passed, will limit picketing in Chapel Hill to the hours between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m.

"We will of course protest such an ordinance if it is passed," said Straley. He left open the possibility that the group will try to obtain a test case against the ordinance.

Straley also told the organization, gathered in the Hillel House for its third meeting, that he does not intend to be a dictator, but he will have to act on his own a great deal of the time.

"We can't afford to gather all our members together and hold a long debate everytime something comes up. Many times I will just be able to consult the steering committee before I act."

The steering committee is composed of Dr. Allen Reddick, head of the group's picketing committee; Dr. Charles D. Wright, head of the letter-writing committee; F. J. Peirce, head of the finance committee; and Mrs. Dodi Donnelly, secretary of the organization.

The organization, composed of some 100 professors, graduate students and their wives, has been in existence for almost three weeks under the name of the "Committee of the Hundred." At the Wednesday night meeting, the group abandoned this title and adopted its new name by voice proclamation.

"There was another group which had the name of Committee of Concerned Citizens," explained Reddick, one of the key men behind the organization. "However, that group became defunct last month."

Reddick, a 42-year-old teacher who is between jobs at the moment, is writing a book during his stay in Chapel Hill. He was on the steering committee of the defunct CCC, and is, along with Dr. Robert Sitton of the Philosophy Department, the prime force behind the new CCC.

"Nothing has ever stirred Chapel Hill like CORE," said Reddick. "While we may disagree with some of their methods—and actually I disagree with very few of them—we must admit they have done the job of waking up this community."

Straley said that the Committee of Concerned Citizens does not want to look like a wing of CORE.

"We want to stand separately," the physics professor said. "We want to show the people of the community that people other than CORE's people are concerned about racial discrimination here."

The committee's present activities include the picketing of four local establishments, including Clarence's Bar & Grill, The Pines Restaurant, Brady's Restaurant and The University Motel.

Straley firmly denied a rumor that the group plans a wholesale boycott of all Chapel Hill merchants, segregated or otherwise.

Man Commits Suicide

A 76-year old man drowned in University Lake just oustide Carrboro late Wednesday night.

The Orange County Coroner's Office ruled that Jack W. Sparrow Sr. committed suicide by jumping from a bridge into University Lake.

Chapel Hill police Chief W. D. Blake said a search began for Sparrow after a relative found a note the man had left.

His car and overcoat were found on the bridge around 1 a.m. The body was found by the Graham Rescue Squad at 8:30 a.m. after they had dragged the lake the entire night.

BEAUTY NOTES
BY ALICE STONE

Here are a few stray facts concerning women and beauty; Although some women refrain from shaving their legs in the belief that this makes the hair grow faster and tougher, such is not the case . . . . It is estimated that some three million American women are tattooed . . . . Have you heard it said that some women grow old before their time trying to look young after their time? . . . . Strangely, candy bars and perfume have something in common—both contain vanilla . . . . Not so strangely, there is scarcely a head of hair in six counties that won't respond beautifully to a permanent at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. The reasons: Highly-trained, patient and imaginative operators who know all the tricks. Dennis Moffatt, B.A., Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, '57, joined Western Electric in 1961 after two years of graduate work at the State University of Iowa and two years with the Army. Most important to Dennis was the fact that WE offered him the chance to move ahead . . . fast. Dennis started at Western Electric's Hawthorne Works in Chicago as a Staff Trainee in Industrial Relations.

After only a year with the Company and the completion of one of WE's training programs for college graduates, Dennis became a Personnel Placement Analyst. Advancing rapidly, Dennis was recently promoted to Section Chief, Employment and Placement, Systems Equipment Engineering.

If you, like Dennis Moffatt, want a career with a company that will recognize your skills and abilities, and have the qualifications we're looking for—let's talk! Opportunities for fast-moving careers exist now for liberal arts, physical science and business majors, as well as for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers. # Dolphins Risk Perfect ACC Mark At Maryland

BY PERRY McCARTY

UNC's powerful Blue Dolphins place their perfect 5-0 ACC chart on the line tonight when they face an awesome Maryland at College Park, Md. Coach Pat Earey remarked that the Terrapins will be "the toughest we've faced so far, both because they have an outstanding group of swimmers and the added incentive—the conference flavor with so much riding on the outcome."

Last year on a herculean effort the Dolphins shaded Maryland by two points in Bowman Gray Pool.

The home ground and familiar pool give the Terps a slight edge tonight for several reasons. First, the partisan College Park fans launch a screaming melee at all visitors, especially serious ACC opposition.

Then too, the Maryland pool is a relatively small one. The natators from Heeldom will have to be thick-skinned out of the water, as well as in, to come away with a victory.

Heading the list of fine Terp swimmers are Jim Dunfy and Steve Nullmeyer. A strong man in both 200 and 500 freestyle events, sophomore Nullmeyer already has been 1:49.0 for the 200.

First line breaststroker Tim Doheney has a 2:24.0 to his credit in the 200; his second, Monty Ray, is right behind him with a 2:27.0. Raoul Riballaird can swim any event and is the Terp wildcard.

Freestylers Phil Gearey, Mike Guilson, and Ron Lampey all are excellent sprinters. Divers Ron Squires and Bill Jennings have been around so long they seem to be permanent fixtures. Squires is the current ACC champ from both one and three meter boards.

For all their colossal strength, the Terps do lack backstroke power; and this may prove to be their "Achilles' Heel," for UNC sports nationally-ranked Thompson Mann along with Scot Smiley.

Coach Earey is counting on peak performances from Harrison Merrill, John Sheldon, Davis Roberts, Chip Smith, Scot Taylor, Fred Lipp, Rick Forum, Joe Lea, Dick Boardman, Ernie Oare and Dave Moody. Maryland clearly has superior depth so strategist Earey and assistant Tom Cannon will concentrate on placing men just where they will be most effective.

Surely, on this occasion as numerous previous ones, UNC's fortunes will depend largely on the battle-test brilliance of All Americas Mann and Merrill.

The freshmen meet between the two schools will match two of the nation's top freestyle sprinters—UNC's Pete Worthen and Maryland's By Dinkawitz. Both boys are big and strong; talk has been buzzing for weeks on speculation of who will come off on top when the two confront each other.

To date, Dinkawitz has faster times, 21.3 for the 50 and 48.4 for the 100, as compared with Worthen's 21.6 and 48.7. Earey (among others) knows what a fierce competitor Worthen is and is conceding nothing. Again the young Terps have good depth, and the contest should be a very tight battle. Saturday both freshman and varsity teams travel to Virginia where they should encounter considerably less resistance.

Five Teams Scramble To Avoid 4th Place

By MAT FRIEDMAN

In case you hadn't noticed, there is a red hot battle going on in the ACC. It's for second place, and the Tar Heels still have a good shot at it.

At the moment, Wake Forest, still in the clouds over its upset of Duke, is all alone in the second spot with a 6-4 conference record. Carolina follows at 6-5, with Clemson, South Carolina and Maryland right behind at 5-5.

Capturing the second or third spot in the conference is all-important, because the fourth place team must face a tough opening round opponent—the fifth place finisher—and would most likely have to meet Duke in the semi-finals.

The Tar Heels' chances of catching Wake appear to be fairly good at this point. The Deacons have four tough ACC clashes to go—with Clemson Friday, South Carolina on Saturday, Duke on Monday, and N. C. State the final day of the season. And the first three are on the road.

Carolina travels to State on Saturday, Virginia on Monday, and comes back to Chapel Hill for the finale with Duke on Feb. 29. The ACC tournament begins in Raleigh on Thursday, Mar. 5, and ends on Saturday, Mar. 7. As usual, it is all sold out—and has been for some time.

The way Duke has dominated the ACC this season, it's a tribute to local hoop enthusiasm that interest in the post-season playoff is so high. But it takes only one defeat to end things for the Blue Devils and, as Wake Forest proved the other night, such an occurrence is far from impossible.

UNC knows this all too well. In 1960, the Tar Heels tied for the regular season championship with Wake Forest and were then beaten by Duke, a 7-7 club, in the semi-finals. The Blue Devils went on to win the NCAA berth.

The following year, the Tar Heels won the title outright but did not play in the ACC tournament because they had been declared ineligible for NCAA tourney competition. Second-place Wake won the ACC play-offs that year, beating Duke in the finals.

The 1962 and 63 regular season champions, Wake Forest and Duke respectively, managed to escape the jinx. But who knows—maybe someone will revive it this year. Maybe that someone will be Carolina.

Funderbrook, Poe Score And Score As Craige Romps

By PETE GAMMONS

Ronnie Funderbrook (30 points) and Larry Poe (29), led the high scoring Craige-A five to a crushing 86-30 win over Mangum-II Wednesday night. Football-studded Ehringhaus-B continued to roll over its opposition, trouncing Victory Village, 71-41. Baseball star Bill Haywood led the scorers with 18, while grid teammates Eddie Kesler (17), Junior Edge (16) and Frank Gallagher (10) also hit in double figures.

In closer action the Town Toughies needed two overtimes and a clutch free throw by Wayne Hardy to down Craige-B, 55-53. Hardy was also high scorer with 21. Dan Fowler and Bob Keeber each had 16 for the losers. By winning, the Toughies earned the right to meet Everett in the quarter-final round. Alexander also earned a quarter-final spot by tipping Ehringhaus-C, 52-45. Bob Liles with 19 and Bill Brown with 18 led Alexander. In anther close match, Tommy Taylor poured in 15 as Winston downed Parker, 41-36. Fred Hobson hit for 12 for the losers.

In the day's only fraternity action DKE eliminated Chi Phi from the playoffs, 33-28. Bronson Van Wyck, Norris Barnes, and Hap Stewart all hit 8 for the DKE's while consistent Stan Thompson led all scorers with 16. Chi Phi's only consolation is that they did better than their Blue team, which lost to the DKE's by 76 points the previous day.

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

IT TOOK THE weather to slow down Jim Hickey. Varying weather conditions, ranging from frozen ground Monday to muddy ground Thursday, caused Hickey to postpone the start of spring football drills until today, but the guy really deserved the rest in the first place.

Ever since his triumphant return from Jacksonville, Hickey has been running all over the map, looking in hollow logs for high school football players and handling after-dinner verbal chores in such wonderful places as Mt. Pleasant, N. C. and Unpleasant Hill, Va.

"Our recruiting got off to a slow start, but it's really picked up in the last two weeks," said Hickey, as he leaned back in his swivel-chair Wednesday afternoon and found time to think.

"I spent three days up in Norfolk last week. There is a flock of real good prospects up in that area."

And the Tar Heel recruiting board has already landed two of them. A big end named Charlie Carr is the sweetest. He grabs passes and kicks like crazy, and is pretty good with the books too. The Princess Anne High (Virginia Beach, Va.) product is billed as a true high school All-America. His teammate, quarterback Buster O'Brien, carries the same label. He's still looking at schools, and Carolina is one he's looking at.

The other signee from the Tidewater area is quarterback Dave Mueller who played ball for Newport News High. He's the only signal-caller signed this year by the Tar Heels.

Woody's Loss May Be Our Gain

ANOTHER NAME WHICH stands out among UNC's eleven signees so far (the school gives 25 grant-in-aids in all) is Dennis Casteele. This fellow is big (6-3, 225) and he comes from football territory (Troy, Ohio). A tackle, Casteele wasn't interested in playing for Woody Hayes at Ohio State, and chose UNC because his high school coach is an old friend of Carolina's George Barclay.

The other eight that Hickey has in the fold are ends Jim Flowe (Charlotte), Billy Warren (Rocky Mount), Lynwood Duncan (Greensboro) and Brent Milgrom (Battleboro); centers Bill Spain (Burlington) and Chap Thompson (Washington, N. C.); and fullbacks Jim Collins (Durham) and Tom Ingle (North Wilkesboro).

Assistant coaches Bud Carson and Vito Ragazzo are combing Pennsylvania at the moment, Carson in the western part of the state and Ragazzo in the eastern half. Hickey will go up to the Pittsburgh area on March 7.

"Actually, looking for them is about over," said Hickey. "Now the job is getting them. We are now in the process of bringing boys down to look over the school, and so forth."

North Carolina concentrates on four states in its recruiting—New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina. This has been the custom in the past, and certainly this past year it has proved successful.

Tar Heels Set Well In Print

YOU MAY NOT find the Tar Heels in any of the (Top Ten) polls these days, but you won't have to look long to find them on the magazine racks. UNC athletes—past and present—are receiving mention in the current issues of no fewer than three national sports publications.

Billy Cunningham is called everything except God in the latest issue of The Sporting News. Gene Warren of the Greensboro Daily News does the story on The Kid, and the build-up won't hurt at all when they start passing out All-America honors in a few weeks. You can look for Billy to make most of the gem teams.

Sports Cavalcade (no, I hadn't heard of it either) does a bit of reminiscing on the 1957 NCAA Champion Tar Heels. The magazine calls the UNC-Kansas finale "the greatest college basketball game ever played!" The whole story has a pretty good plot and might be used as reference for the 1964-65 season (that's next year).

And finally there's the March issue of Sport which offers, among other things, a cover picture of Cassius Clay—suitable for framing. Inside there is a poll of 62 of the nation's foremost college track coaches. Their job is to pick the All-Time Track and Field Team, and somehow they did it. At least Sport says they did. And topping the field in the ballot for the No. 1 two-miler is UNC's own Jim Beatty. Jim also took third in the mile-run category, behind Herb Elliott and Peter Snell. The All-Time All-Around Performer? Ohio State's Jesse Owens—by a land slide.

SL Covers Lost Ground Thursday

By JOHN GREENBACKER

The new Community Welfare Committee of Student Legislature was set up Thursday night.

The Committee's purpose, as described by Speaker Bob Spearman, is to study proposals for improving education and economic conditions in the Chapel Hill area. (See story, page one).

April 14 was officially declared the date for spring elections, ending a long and partisan battle in the Legislature.

A compromise on the date was reached by party leaders and representatives of interested organizations last Tuesday.

A lengthy bill covering the jurisdiction and procedures of the Interfraternity Court was passed, including changes in the penalties system.

In the wake of criticism from students over the recently enacted boycott resolution, Student Party Floor Leader Phil Baddour rose to read to the body a statement by Russell Kirk, "a noted conservative writer and analyst."

The statement read, "What America needs is better leadership in politics instead of what it is getting—a reflection of the public will. If leaders think solely of the image they made then they aren't leaders at all. They are seeing what the public wants and then doing it at the right time."

Legislature also passed a bill appropriating $200 from the general surplus to WUNC radio for the purchase of needed equipment.

The principal dissenter to the bill was Arthur Hays (SP), who questioned the advisability of setting a precedent in this area.

A resolution urging the University Traffic Safety Committee to consider safety measures for the road leading from the Morehead Bell Tower to the Craige-Ehringhaus area was passed after much debate.

The bill originally suggested the Committee have asphalt humps placed in the road. Bill Straughn (SP), told the body his sleep was disturbed by "horns, mufflers, and the anguished screams of students being run down by speeding motorists."

Straughn supported the placement of humps in the road and recommended that signs be placed before them labeled "hump ahead."

Borden Parker (UP) moved that the passage calling for the humps be removed. It was removed by a vote of 17-15.

Hays told the body afterwards, "Only a body such as this could spend twenty minutes debating humps."

An amendment calling for better lighting on the road was passed.

In another action by the Legislature, a bill calling for the Faculty Council and the Faculty Committee on the Calendar to consider the establishment of a reading day before final exams was passed.

Symposium Seminars Planned

Seminars and discussion groups planned for the 1964 Carolina Symposium will be headed by Emily Klyce, Vance Barron and Bill Graham.

Discussion groups relating to Symposium questions and topics suggested by this year's Symposium title, "Arms and the Man," will be held beginning March 12. These groups will be held in the women's residence hall social rooms in conjunction with the various men's dormitories and will be led by interested professors. At the same time the sororities and fraternities will hold similar after-dinner seminars.

Later, during the Symposium week this spring, classroom seminars will be held in the departments and schools of the University. In addition, several departments are sponsoring their own speakers.

"Seminars and discussion groups give the alert and concerned students a chance to express their opinions as well as hear others express theirs. They provide an ideal way to make both new friends and enemies," said Harry DeLung and Virginia Carnes, co-publicity chairmen.

RESERVE ROOMS NOW

Room reservations for next fall should be made before April 1, director of housing James Wadsworth said yesterday.

"If a student wishes to reserve the same room he is in now, he will have to do so by April 1," Wadsworth said. "If he doesn't he stands a chance of not getting a room at all."

A $10 deposit is required when the rooms are reserved.

Persons interested in the DTH position should contact Art Pearce in the DTH office. Those interested in the Carolina Handbook positions should contact Martin Lancaster, 204 Parker, 968-9140.

Sign-up sheets for interviews will be posted Friday at 4 on the door of Roland Parker 3.

The business manager of the DTH may expect to make approximately $1,200 next year. The editor and business manager of the Handbook may expect about $100 each.

The DTH position will be filled between 4:30 and 5 and the Handbook positions between 5 and 5:30.

SLIFKIN AT PFEIFFER

Dr. Lawrence Slifkin of the UNC department of physics will spend two days at Pfeiffer College lecturing, holding informal meetings with students and assisting faculty members with curriculum and research problems.

Castro Says 'No' On Returning Boat

MIAMI (UPI)—Premier Fidel Castro refused to return a stolen American shrimp boat Friday on grounds some of his Cuban fishermen had been "robbed blind" by U. S. officials.

His charges were promptly denounced as a "complete falsehood."

The bearded leader leveled the accusations while participating in a hero's welcome for the 29 Cuban fishermen who were jailed at Key West for poaching in Florida waters. The captains of the four boats involved in the poaching were fined a total of $2,000 and their fish catch was confiscated.

During the dockside welcome the fishermen went before television cameras and microphones to charge that while they were in a Key West jail U. S. officials indulged in wholesale thievery.

"Our clothing, eating utensils and Cuban flag were stolen and the motors of our ships were burned out," they charged.

They also contended the galleys of their boats were smashed, "our cooking pots stolen and our wine thrown overboard."

"I'll be damned if we're going to hand over that shrimp boat now," said Castro in a Havana broadcast monitored here.

The boat to which he referred was stolen by Deny Lee Kirby, a 22-year-old Vallejo, Calif., man who sailed it to Cuba claiming he was "tired of the American way of life."

The boat's owner, Charles H. Griffin Jr. of Thunderbolt, Ga., was preparing to leave Key West for the Cuban capital to pick up the 60-foot vessel, the "Johnny Reb," when Castro unleashed his charges.

Two Innocent, One Guilty

A student was placed on definite probation and two others were found innocent of a cheating charge in Men's Council trials Thursday night.

In the first case a student was charged with assaulting another student, a Campus Code violation, and stealing the other student's watch, an Honor Code violation.

He was found guilty of the assault charge. The defendant said he had been drinking and thought he had heard the other student shout an insult. He started a fight with him.

The assaulted student said he had put his watch down during the fight and then couldn't find it afterwards.

The Council found the defendant innocent of the stealing charge because of lack of evidence. There were three other men at the scene who might have taken the watch.

Integration Leaders Extend Moratorium

Statement Cites Local Improvement

The Chapel Hill Freedom Committee yesterday announced they had added an additional week to their civil disobedience moratorium.

In a brief statement issued late in the afternoon, spokesman John Dunne cited "certain indications this week that the city fathers have begun to act." The moratorium will continue through Feb. 28.

The initial moratorium was instituted last Friday, when integration leaders called a halt to sit-ins and other forms of active protest.

The complete statement:

"Since February 11, the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee has not engaged in acts of intentional civil disobedience. This policy has been followed in the hopes that the leadership of Chapel Hill would at last respond to the needs and requests of its citizens.

"There have been certain indications this week that the city fathers have begun to act and it is in this light that we extend this moratorium through Friday, February 28. We are confident that through this period we will see concrete steps taken on the part of the officials of Chapel Hill to erase forever the liability of racial discrimination from this town.

"At the same time we will continue to exercise our constitutional rights of peaceful protest as we deem neeessary in order to keep before the public's eye the pressing urgency of this problem."

Dunne also announced that a mass meeting would be held today at 2 p.m.

Long-Term Community Welfare Group Formed

A committee to study the longtrem community welfare problems of Chapel Hill has been organized by Bob Spearman, student body vice-president and speaker of legislature.

In a statement to legislature explaining his action, Spearman commented that "the real solutions to many of the pressing problems which face the Chapel Hill and University Community today lie in the areas of educational improvemnet, better economic opportunities and rising living standards." He further cited work at other schools, notably Salem College.

Spearman appointed legislators Brick Oettinger, Diana Wellons and John Harmon to serve on the committee. Oettinger will serve as chairman.

Spearman's complete statement:

"It is the opinion of the Speaker that the current pressing controversy over racial demonstrations and segregated establishments has obscured some of the more important long-term problems.

"The real solutions to many of the pressing problems which face the Chapel Hill and University Community today lie in the areas of educational improvement, better economic opportunities and rising living standards. Students and Student Governments both at Carolina and elsewhere have long been active in this type of activity.

"Recent work at Salem College is especially notable, where students have initiated a special tutorial project in the Winston-Salem community.

"Therefore, I am appointing a special legislative committee, to be called The Community Welfare Committee, to investigate the possibility of such a student project in the Chapel Hill community. This committee will be directed to report on similar projects at other schools, to discuss possible projects with town officials, local pastors and welfare workers and to make specific recommendations for action both to the Executive and to the Student Legislature."

Film Society Tickets Are Now On Sale

Membership tickets for the University Film Society go on sale Monday in Lenoir Hall and Tuesday in Y-Court.

The film society was organized to bring film classics to the University Community. Films shown during the series are rarely shown in commercial theaters.

The series opens Thursday night with the showing of "The Gold Diggers of '33'." Other films to be shown are: "The Love of Jeanne Ney," "The Thief of Bagdad," "To Have and to Have Not," "Manhandled," "Bed and Sofa," "Hell's Angels," and "El-la Cinders."

The pianistics of the keyboard duo, Ferrante and Teicher, will be demonstrated to local concert-goers on Monday, Feb. 24, when the recording stars, whose versions of "Exodus," "The Apartment," and "Tonight" sold well over three million records, bring their show, "The Many Moods of Ferrante and Teicher" to Memorial Hall at 8:00 p.m., as a part of the GM series.

Placement Bureau Has Many Jobs

By DIANE HILE

Senior girls don't seem to be looking for jobs. The Job Placement Bureau said that the student turnout for interviews is considerably lower than last year.

On-campus interviews have been scheduled by the Bureau since last October and will continue through April. Interviewing for job positions with representatives of large companies has been at its peak for the last month.

For general information, the Placement Bureau is located on the second floor of Gardner.

To apply for a job, the Bureau requests that the applicant fill out questionnaires for the Bureau's personnel records. Following his application, the Bureau trys to keep him notified of any on-campus interviews or job openings that might be of interest.

If an unusual job is what you are searching for, the Bureau will be able to help you obtain information. Many job opportunities and openings are posted on the bulletin board outside the Bureau offices.

Last year the girls placed by the Bureau had salaries ranging from $240 to $594 a month. the median wage was $325.

Girls who majored in mathematics had the highest wages —between $450 and $594. Science majors had the second highest salaries—$300 to $450.

A large majority of the other jobs taken by last year's senior girls were in personnel work, retailing, banking, teaching, social work and journalism.

Government jobs offer good starting salaries and are often selected by the girls.

Most applicants wish to work in the larger cities. This often presents a shortage of desirable available in the location of your choice. The Bureau's library, located next to the offices in Gardner, may help you find a position in your chosen location if you are not satisfied with the opportunities available.

Of last year's female applicants, 33 per cent went to work in North Carolina, 55 per cent went out of state and 12 per cent went to graduate school.

Of the girls who went to work out of state, 15 per cent went to Washington, 7 per cent to Atlanta and to New York, 5 per cent to Richmond, 3 per cent to Boston and 18 per cent are scattered throughout the United States.

Guitarists Alan Neely And Scott Ackerman

The Graham Memorial Music Committee will present an Evening of Musical Specialties Sunday at 8:00 p.m. in the GM Lounge. The program will feature the musical talents of three UNC students: Emily Klyce, John L. Currie and Scott Ackerman.

Miss Klyce, from Memphis, Tenn. has had an extensive musical background. She has studied piano since grammar school and in the ninth grade began classical guitar lessons which she continued while a student at Wellesley College. In Sunday night's recital, she will play flamenco and classical selections on her guitar.

John L. Currie, ragtime pianist, is from Carthage, N.C. He has played the piano since the age of eight, and ragtime since he was 15. He became interested in this field from listening to old records. A self-taught musician, he has written music and is a former chairman of the Music Committee. His program for Sunday night will include a special dance number featuring Jane and Ann Coxhead. He will also conduct a "sing-along", with song sheets provided for the audience.

Scott Ackerman is a folk singer from Atlanta, Ga. accompanying himself on the guitar and banjo. He became interested in folk-singing and the guitar when he traveled in Europe in the summer of 1962. Since then, he has been a member of the folksinging group which toured with the UNC Glee Club and has played at Meredith College and on WTVD. He will be accompanied by Alan Neely Sunday night in a varied program of folk songs.

SCIENCE NEWS

Dr. Robert Cadmus, of Memorial Hospital, reports that there are about 10,000 vacant public health jobs in North Carolina.

He and other medical and health people in the Chapel Hill area feel that the shortage is very serious and have set out to do something about it.

From April 1 to 4, more than 50,000 children from schools all over the state are expected to attend the North Carolina Health Fair at Duke indoor stadium. The Durham-Orange County Medical Foundation, sponsor of the event ,hopes that the fair will stimulate some of these children to pursue a career in the medical and health professionh.

"It seems," says Dr. George Watson, of the fair committee, "that our sons do not want to be doctors and are not interested in nursing. This has been something of a blow to our pride."

Those who attend will be treated to an impressive array of health and medical exhibits of every size and shape. Exhibitors range from the Atomic Energy Commission to the American Medical Association, and reports are that several requests had to be turned down. The exhibits, said to be of very high quality, will just about fill the huge arena. They should be highly educational for both children and adults.

UNC, like many other universities around the nation, is playing a part in the project to put a man on the moon. The computer department here, according to Dr. J. W. Hanson, is working on some of the complex mathematical problems in missile guidance which must be solved if the Saturn project is to be successful.

The Saturn rocket, largest in America's repertoire, represents a very important phase of the long range space program. Several rockets have already been sent up.

Good News, But Many Eyes Are Watching

It is good news that the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee has decided to extend its moratorium on civil disobedience tactics for another week. The committee leaders would not have done so if they had not seen strong indications that Chapel Hill has been awakened to the need for remedcal action to correct some of the inequities that exist for those members of our community who happen to be Negro.

These indications of awareness are many—UNC Philosophy Professor Maynard Adams has proposed a long-range "Blueprint For Progress" idea; the campus has come alive with proof of concern by both students and professors in the form of support for a boycott; a "Committee of Concerned Citizens" has been formed to work in the general area of civil rights; meeting after meeting has been quietly held over town; and there is some reason to think that the Mayor and the Board of Aldermen are ready to start dealing with the cause of the demonstrations rather than their effects.

Many eyes will be on the Aldermen when they meet Monday night to see if any constructive response to the moratorium is forthcoming. Such a response is long overdue.

Many eyes are also on the Freedom Committee's leaders, to see how quickly they resolve the school boycott issue.

And many eyes are on us, here on the campus, to see how well we support the boycott against merchants who discriminate on the basis of race. Such a boycott, pending bold action by the Mayor and Board of Aldermen, is the only meaningful alternative to mass demonstrations involving civil disobedience.

DTH Soars To New Heights

If there's one thing we pride ourselves on at the Daily Tar Heel, it's the fact that we're always open for suggestions. So, naturally, when a reader suggested the other day that we "Go Fly A Kite," we did. Yesterday.

Actually, to be even more exact, we flew two kites. The first one was one of those little plastic things that you can buy at the ten-cent store. It lasted about ten minutes, was caught up in a foul cross-current and plunged to its death in the top of one of Dr. Coker's trees.

The second kite proved far superior. Our enterprising Associate Editor constructed it out of a little paste, a couple of sticks, and three back issues of the Tar Heel. It flew like a dove, and soon we were hustling down the street for more string. It presented quite a picture drifting placidly in the blue sky over the Morehead Planetarium.

But, alas, all good things must end, and a break in the string brought about the untimely demise of kite number two. It remains this morning, impaled in a tree behind McIver Hall.

Some of the people who walked by while we were out flying our kite might have thought it was a bunch of juvenile nonsense, but we looked upon it as an opportunity for the paper to reach new heights, even if there were strings attached.

Contralto 'Seduced The Audience'

By HENRY McINNIS

She stood there encased in a shimmering sheath of a gown. Needing no props no angle, and no gimmick, she poised herself and the program began Tuesday night with three songs by Handel. The rest is Memorial Hall history.

Claramae Turner, nationally known contralto, beautiful and radiant, accompanied by Wilton Mason of the University's Music Department, created an evening of music distinguished for its enormous sensitivity and rich artistry. Miss Turner has a marvelous voice reminiscent of the early Marian Anderson and she knows well how to control it to advantage.

Singing Handel's "Art Thou Troubled?", she brought out its deep spiritual sadness with effortless ease and convincing depth. In Schubert's "The Erl King" the power of her magnificent talent was employed effectively to bring out the surging tension and drama of the lyrics. However, she gave at this point the evening's first indication that she was maintaining a rather tight rein on the projection of emotion into strictly musical terms.

Her Saint-Saens aria, "My Heart and Thy Sweet Voice," was lacking in the high electricity and vibrancy this music needs. Miss Turner avoided singing the high notes at the song's climax, but one must assume she preferred the lower notes lest she force the tone into a mild scream. But this is Madame's option.

Dr. Mason, always thoughtfully playing with Miss Turner as if the two were one musical soul, worked his way with agility through the difficult rhythm problem of the accompaniment, constantly avoiding the many pitfalls less talented pianists are heir to. His keyboard artistry never failed to catch the delicate shadings of mood required for each piece, and when power and assertion were called for, Mason was a master.

After a long and fruitful association with the blond contralto, he is the refined and intelligent musician who never allows the piano to overshadow Miss Turner or be reduced to an improper subordination.

Respighi's icy and impressionistic "Mists" was executed with beguiling charm and beauty. Particularly noteworthy is the singer's versatility with many different musical styles and periods. The fragility of Cimara's "Snowflakes" came across well.

Possibly the most exciting song in the concert was "To This We've Come" from Menotti's opera, "The Consul." In this vocal firework, Turner burned with a furious flame and practically scorched a few people on the front row with her stage rage. Like a tempestuous tigress, she almost revealed that kind of animalism that reminds one of Maria Callas singing from a fiery mad scene.

The three concluding selections by George Cory and Douglas Cross, personal friends of the contralto, were "Peace of Mind," "Tenderness" and "Landlocked." This trite trio, devoid of brio, smacked of saccharine sentimentality in their verging on the popular song genre, but they were pleasant little pastries notable for their lightness and sweet simplicity.

The rapt and generous audience called Miss Turner back for three well-deserved encores and the gracious and obliging star offered them cake instead of meat, it must be said. Chirpling like a high-class Helen Morgan, and leaning discreetly on that superb and exquisite Steinway, she sang "I Lost My Heart In San Francisco," and it sounded like she indeed had, being a native of the Bay City. Then came that inevitable, and it appears, inescapable monument to cloying cuteness, the ever-unctuous "I Enjoy Being A Girl" by Rodgers and Hammerstein. So much for that.

Closing the concert, the glamorous diva turned into a ravishing Carmen and rendered a passionate "Habenera" from Bizet's masterpiece. And with this being done, she had not only sealed Don Jose's fate but completely seduced the Chapel Hill audience with a most memorable evening of satisfying song.

Bravo Miss Turner and Dr. Mason!

Cartoon: Ugh!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

We, the undersigned members of the Student Party feel that the recent Daily Tar Heel cartoon attacking Mr. Armistead Maupin and Mr. Clark Crampton was both misleading and unfair to those two persons and the positions which they hold. Although we disagree with their position on civil rights, we look to a rational consideration of those differences which separate us, rather than the increased emotionalism which is fostered by such tactics as the cartoon.

Akers' Comfort

In response to a letter Submitted Feb. 14 by Mr. Dick Akers, Treasurer of the Student Body

Mr. Akers:

Although I question the validity of even replying to your obvious sneer of those involved in the civil rights demonstrations, I reply because I feel involved. Not because I participate, for much to my shame and embarrassment I lack the courage, but because I fail to see how the dress of one standing, lying, sitting, or kneeling for something he believes can undermine the purpose of his action. Our forefathers donned the clothes of Indians for the Boston Tea Party, and I'm sure that they too looked quite "unkept;" nevertheless, I doubt if their clothing hurt the principle of their actions.

I don't question or oppose your right to stand for what you believe. I do oppose and am repulsed by your illfounded, prejudiced accusations. Mr. Akers, you accuse these people of being "dregs of society." Mr. Webster defines the word: "the most useless part of anything." I see these people as far more than useless; for in taking a stand they force us all to evaluate our positions. This, Mr. Akers, you have shown us to have done when you admitted your moment of "comfort" that Saturday.

I do not propose that the demonstrators are infallible, but the important thing is they are making an effort in support of a principle - equality of mankind. America is pregnant with people such as I, complacent and apathetic. I believe she needs individuals willing to sacrifice, yes, even to use their frustrations to bring forth action. I have no doubt that the demonstrators are frustrated — frustrated with a complacent, lethargic America.

Stupid? No!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I would like to comment upon your implication of stupidity concerning the Chapel Hill Aldermen's latest move in the racial crisis, which appeared in the DTH's Saturday issue of February 15.

First of all, I agree that the limiting of picketing hours, when taken out of the context of the present situation of Chapel Hill's racial problem, is unconstitutional and is a direct violation of Americans' freedom to assemble and right to expression; however, whether you, the editors, realize it or not, Chapel Hill has been fortunate to have not had any serious cases of group violence concerning the demonstrations—thanks to the incredible efficiency of the Chapel Hill police department. Now Chapel Hill finds itself lacking an adequate amount of policemen to constantly patrol the area (at least two officers have quit the force already) and this leaves Chapel Hill civil rights demonstrators vulnerable to dangers unknown to them while they had more thorough police protection.

Presently, the Aldermen's most important responsibility is to prevent Chapel Hill from becoming a violence-torn town such as was Birmingham last year.

I do feel that you are not willing to state that you would run the risk of race riots, possible property destruction and death just so demonstrators could have the right to march or picket in the evening hours.

Again, I would like to reiterate that the picket ban is unconstitutional when taken out of context but like martial law in other emergency situations, it is a necessary evil to prevent worse repercussions. It is my hope that if the picket ban is passed that it will be only a temporary law until either "peace" between civil rights forces and the town has been established or until Chapel Hill can muster up enough protection to allow a 24-hour picket right.

You call the Aldermen stupid? Sirs, I would like to say that they are acting in a humanitarian manner and just because the Aldermen do not agree with you on how to solve the racial problem, is no valid reason for you to brand them with the curse of stupidity.

Sincerely,
F. Neil Smith

Boycott: Yes

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Any endorsement, monetarily or otherwise, of segregated establishments in Chapel Hill is in fact an endorsement of anti-Negro sentiment, and not simply an endorsement of the right of a property owner or businessman to serve or admit whom he pleases. How absolutely hypocritical and evasive it is that pretenders to the glory of conservatism bury their real motives under myriad copies of the Constitution. The truth remains that many among us do not care for Negroes, nor do they wish to eat with them in public places or sit by them in public vehicles. Those of us who request that establishments which serve the public be indeed accessable to all members of the public do so openly. Is it then too much to ask that those who do not want public establishments so accessable proffer their genuine reasons for discriminatory practice?

We have not clearly determined that at least fifteen per cent of the student body is bigoted, hateful, and utterly imbecilic, but we have determined that at least fifteen per cent of the student body is backward. This is not to summarily discredit the recent petitioners, for they have one point worthy of consideration: can an extremely heterogeneous institution present unified aim without disregarding the opinions of a few or even many members of that institution? Or more properly, can an institution urge something which is more amenable to existential rather than societal decisions?

Neither President Lawler nor the Student Legislature, however, have presented the student body any form of a law or order; instead, a resolution, asking that students do not support segregated businesses. There exists no method to punish those who do not wish to heed this request; obviously, any white student may impuniously continue to drop his ducats into the coffers of segregationists. It does not then appear to be manifestation of poor taste, representative irresponsibility, or governmental coercion which is now before us, but rather an entreaty that as students of this university do not sanction areas of the community which rejects some of our peers. This request can be repugnant only to those who also reject some of our peers on purely superficial bases.

The notion of impeaching Mr. Lawler is ludicrous in the extreme. But the university would probably improve itself greatly if it disinfected the Sigma Nu house, which seems to be fraught with little beasties that have big mouthies. Then again there is always Dick Akers, fashion consultant for UNC, whose hallmark is that he relates every ethical or moral question to matters of dress and personal appearance. His motives are also somewhat suspect.

In the past, students have precipitated revolutions, assassinated autocratic tzars, and fought and died for civil liberties and equity. More recently, students at the University of Virginia protested the shortening of their Thanksgiving holidays. We have before us in Chapel Hill the opportunity of acting efficaciously for a concern of considerable consequence, beside which U. Va.'s complaint pales. Hopefully, for the preservation of our liberties, most of us will decide independently to heed Lawler's request.

Blast!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

This letter is in response to your extremely limp editorial concerning Chi Omega's patronage of the Pine's Restaurant, and your attitude in general. You, the editors, have continually taken a very prejudiced aim, which passes under the title of "integration". You have gone to such extremes as constantly monopolizing editorial space, devoting each consecrated word to what has become a "cliched", very mediocre, and downright nauseating journalism. One might say your "Pine's" editorial was the spark needed to touch off a blaze, heretofore a very intensively smouldering antipathy towards your viewpoint throughout our entire domitory floor, and, we believe, across the entire campus.

The Chi Omegas and the Pine's Restaurant can do as they damn-well please. It's not the business of the Wesley Foundation to tell them where they can eat. It's not the business of the Tar Heel to rob the Pines of patronage, and to coerce this business to alter their policy. The freedom of choice, and the right to discriminate, as the very existence of your paper testifies, is an inalienable, priceless right of every American. A few blind politicians have seemingly lost sight of this right by introducing a technical, minute, insignificant piece of legislation, which promises to do no less than helplessly tangle the otherwise well-defined rights of all Americans by initiating the public accommodations bill. It is pathetic to think that such a bill, which clearly makes exceptions to our inalienable rights, could vaguely be considered justifiable.

Our floor is also gravely concerned that the majority of students on our campus have become a rubber stamp, a string puppet, a mass insignificance, victims to the authoritarian and mal-approved actions taken by President Lawler, which are ardently backed by the Tar Heel. The first example may be the indication in your "Letters to the Editor" column. We've rarely seen letters which applaud your isolated viewpoint. Rather, they indicate a definite dissatisfaction, to say the least, with your persistent advocations . . . just count the letters next time. The second, more questionable indication has been the recent flood of petitions . . .what Lawler may regard as insignificant, the 1,500 signatures opposing him, are a hell-of-a-lot more than the puny, few names which have dribbled into your "Letter" column in recent days, supporting Lawler's actions. And, I may add, you've not given one inch of space to printing the former petition or the names therein, as you have the latter. So look who's prejudiced!

We feel very strongly about this, and are willing, just as the freedom marchers, to put our words into action. We wish you would not continue to represent pretentiously the will of the student body with journalism of the present quality and content. Furthermore, we would not move to stop an impeachment of our President, should he continue his suppositions of acting in the interests of our student body, by independent actions not meeting with the approval of his electorate.

'My Mail Is Different . . .'

If you get the usual stuff in your mailbox these days, you don't work for the Daily Tar Heel.

I mean, if you get nice, friendly letters, magazines, and once in a while a few inocuous advertisements, you're lucky. The stuff I receive is amazing.

In a way, it's to be expected that our mail would be a little different from that of the average individual—but not that different.

It's been getting worse lately, but one day this week it got downright ridiculous. In one day, just one, I received all of the following:

—Thirty-two campus newspapers. Now this is to be expected, as the DTH carries on an extensive exchange program with other colleges. As always, there's the LSU paper, with a pretty girl on the front page; and the Mississippi paper, with an even prettier girl on the front page; and the Georgia paper, with . . . well, never mind — all those Southeast Conference schools only care about football and sex, anyway.

—News releases from Duke University's Medical School ("how interesting, they've found a cure for which there is no disease"), the Wake Forest College Athletic Department ("didn't know they had one"), and WRAL-TV ("guess where THAT goes!") —Propaganda from almost everybody. We get this all the time, and are accused of printing most of it. The World Student News, for instance, comes from Czechoslovakia, and is undoubtedly the biggest Commie rag in the world. Well, we made up for it—the next day we got a copy of American Opinion, and you know what THAT is, don't you? All this stuff goes into the large circular file on the floor behind my desk—immediately.

—A reprint from The Progressive Farmer, December, 1963, Georgia-Alabama-Florida edition. Someone immediately observed that a mistake had been made, there being no progressive farmers in those states. The story was for real though, and chock full of interesting things. Did you know, for instance, that the total taxes levied on tobacco products last year amounted to $3,102,480,000? No? Well, neither did I. Did you also know that the poor farmer gets just 3 1/4 cents of the price of each pack of cigarettes? I canned that one right after that wonderful statistic.

—Seven Letters to the Editor. ("Hmm. Old Dick Akers is really pulling in the fan mail.") Six of the letters are typed. One is written in crayon on brown paper ("must be from a prof"). Of the six that are typed, four are more than five pages in length ("hold them until we have space," the editor says"), and two are fit to print immediately.

—A sheet of paper entitled "Enrollment Report, Spring Semester 1964, etc." It tells me that there are 33 females in the dental school, three special students in Journalism, and 1299 coeds. I believe all but the last figure, and the sheet goes into the trash basket with all the other stuff.

—A letter invitingly entitled "To Students Planning to Visit Daytona Beach," and signed by A. O. Folsom, Chief of Police. It lists ten DON'TS to observe during your Florida trip this spring. It concludes the marvelous line "do not drive your vehicle in the ocean, as this is not only unlawful but the corrosive action of the salt water is damaging to the vehicle . . ." I resolved to print the rules for your enlightenment later on in the spring, and the letter got passed around the office for everybody's laughs.

—Last, but not least, a gorgeous two-color press notice from the Metropolitan Miami Fishing Tournament! Wow! With it was this insane picture about 10" by 15" showing this fellow apparently trying to hide behind a fish. Examination of the accompanying story revealed that he was none other than Dr. Richard Rudders of N. C. Memorial Hospital, posing with his 20 lb., 8 oz. African pompano. Oh. That explains it. (The tournament, by the way, runs through April 19, so if you go to Daytona, perhaps you can slip on down and reel in your very own African pompano.) I called the Nurses Dorm to explain that something at the hospital really was fishy, it was Dr. Rudders, and opened my last piece of mail. It was:

—A press release about Venereal Disease from the U. S. Government. It's great. In fact, I'm going to print it for your enjoyment—soon.

Freedom

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In The Fire Next Time, James Baldwin writes ". . .a civilization is not destroyed by wicked people; it is not necessary that people be wicked only that they be spineless."

In the same essay he describes a meeting with Elijah Muhammed, the leader of the Nation of Islam movement in the United States; and Mr. Baldwin states that in a way he owes the invitation to this meeting to the "incredible, abysmal, and really cowardly obtuseness of white liberals." White citizens of Chapel Hill, so proud of their liberal progressive spirit and tradition, would do well to consider the validity of this indictment.

Consider the varieties of smoke screens behind which citizens of avowed good faith and good will rationalize their reluctance or refusal to act, speak, or positively affirm what they assert they believe: namely, the equality of all men under the law. Atticus Finch, of To Kill a Mockingbird, counsels his children that in order to understand a person one must crawl inside that person's skin and walk around. How often have the self-congratulatory citizens of Chapel Hill crawled inside a Negro's skin and tried to walk around?

Consider the statement that the Negroes are pushing too fast; are too demanding, too militant. From a Negro's point of view this is laughable; analogous to complaining that the Jews in concentration camps were too strident in their pleas not to be gassed.

Consider the statement that the "Movement" has taken on an evangelical character, that it is not dignified enough for a white person of education and gentle breeding to identify himself with. Consider, from the Negro's point of view, how pompous this is, how arrogant, how self-delusory. The evangelical tradition may or may not be your particular mode of expression, but it is the tradition of many Southern Negroes; and for the white liberal to contend that his conservative, sophisticated sensibilities are offended by a certain amount of hand clapping and singing is to display a colossal misunderstanding of the basic issues involved: which are not whether or not a person feels comfortable doing what he is doing but rather against injustices to fellow human beings.

Consider even the white person who voluntarily demonstrates and pickets with the Negro in an attempt to eliminate segregation and all its terrible, destructive ramifications. This person may well feel, walking down Franklin Street in a demonstration, that he is rejected, unpopular, spat upon and called nasty and vulgar names, condemned as part of a group rather than judged on his own merits, vulnerable, embarrassed at so exposing himself to ridicule, uncertain of his own worth, in short, despised. But consider that when that white person gets off the picket line and out of the demonstration, he can return to his own safe white world, a world in which he will be judged on his beauty, talents, intelligence, charm, creativity. A Negro lives forever a Negro; he is judged as a Negro; there is no escape for him. He is every moment of his life walking in a demonstration, vulnerable and uncertain and rejected. A white man uses the lightness of his skin as the touchstone of his reality; he is individually assessed because he is white. The Negro, because he is black, is assigned to a group, judged as a group, in many instances despised as a group. Certainly he is oppressed as a group.

What do Negroes want? Simply, they want their freedom. They want a fair chance. Reverend B. Elton Cox, when he addressed a meeting in Chapel Hill, said a much more significant thing tan threatening to burn himself up. He said, impatiently and rather testily, that he was not interested in marrying your daughter. HE WANTED HIS FREEDOM.

History Books

Editors, The Tar Heel

For the past several weeks, I've been reading the pros and cons of whether the local demonstrators are "social dregs" or, at best, "social misfits," based on their manner of dress, need of haircuts, and the like. I propose that the arguments, pro and con, are fundamentally foolish. First, if sloppy dress is an indicator of "social dregs," then I can nominate a half-dozen, Southern Senators who qualify for this distinction, hands down furthermore, shall we condemn the memory of Albert Einstein, just because he had a long hair foible Secondly, why must "social misfits" necessarily be a derogatory term? If it hadn't been for a number of "social misfits," Generals Grant and T. Jackson, for example, certainly our history would have suffered.

I hasten to add that I do not condone the recent demonstrators or their actions, for I am a died-in-the-wool Southerner, thoroughly indoctrinated in the natural prejudices of my fore-fathers; however, I do not condemn my enemies on a question of dress styles or social graces. Let these men be judged by what they do—by their actions, and by what they believe and how they support their beliefs. In short, let these men be judged by what they are, rather than by how they look. Frankly, fellow Southerners, this is a difficult proposal for me to make, for it places us in the precarious position of being similarly judged. Lately I have been doing a good deal of soul-searching and I fear that I had rather be considered on the quality of my wardrobe than on the justice of my beliefs.

Perhaps our forte up to now has been our clean-cut, ivy appearance, which perhaps covers an "inside" that needs serious repair. I think that I had rather be a "social misfit" on the outside, than a "social dreg" on the inside; therefore, I have been worrying quite a bit lately—worrying and wondering what history will record of my South's behavior during its siege by those blasted tormentors. That's the trouble with their infernal trooping up and down Franklin Street—they make me think too much—think and worry. Will the future be content to point its boney finger at their uncut hair and then to my perfect trim, at their dirty field-jackets and then at my Hart-Schaffner-Marx, or will the future remember, in cold facts of actions, what their character was in contrast to mine? If they'd just stop all that confounded, logical talk about "justice," my South's arguments would look pretty good—but they won't quit: they won't quit talking, singing, or marching, blast 'em!

Therefore, friends, although it pains me to admit it, I am considering sending my character to the dry cleaners instead of my trousers. With effort on my part, perhaps it isn't too late, after all, to remove all those prejudice spots that have been accumulating for more than two-hundred years. Hell, I look at it this way: I'm not going to let them look better than I do in the future's history books.

Briefly?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I should like to discuss briefly two areas of current interest, censorship and segregation. I was pleased and entertained by your satirical article in which you facetiously reported Miss Sturmundrang and her committee as censoring "Goldilocks" ("Sturm und Drang" being a traditional German phrase: literally, "storm and stress"—Cassell's Dictionary). This is a nice lampoon on such kinds of censorship as are based on zealous adherence to pathetically anachronistic values.

But I would like to ask your opinion on the relevance of censorship, if any, to violence. The current Scientific American reports a careful if limited study, the conclusions of which is that, for many people, to witness violence is to be stimulated to aggressive, and possibly violent, behavior. This would cast grave doubt on the wisdom of the current practice of beaming into millions of living rooms television dramas depicting murder and sadism, under the excuse of catharsis, i.e., purgation. Swedish friends of mine have told me that in their own country motion pictures are sometimes censored for violence, in constrast to our own custom of censoring them for overt sexuality.

It appears to me that we must preserve an absolutely free press, even if that means permitting the pulp sado-masochistic magazines one sees everywhere, only by preserving a free press can we preserve freedom of speech on political issues, and only so can we keep works of literary art from being suppressed by matronly postmasters.

But this commitment to a free press does not tell us necessarily what our policy should be regarding television and motion pictures. In many parts of the world, film is being developed as an art form of great expressive power. While we have had some developments in that direction, our current practice appears to me to treat film as a mode of entertainment and recreation, to the neglect of its aesthetic capacities. Some of the more carefully made foreign films such as Virgin Spring and Ivan the Terrible, contain, if matter of factly described, a strong dose of volence. But in those pictures, the violence occurs in a context that gives it aesthetic meaning and sanction. I don't know any answers, but I suggest that this whole area is one where careful thought and meaning dialogue is needed, psychological, political, and philosophical.

Regarding segregation, especially segregation in Chapel Hill, all I read lately seems to be arguments about legality, property rights, trespassing, whether or not we should have boycotts and petitions, whether or not the local police are doing a good job, and whether the demonstrators haven't had recent haircuts. I want to discuss something more fundamental than this, though I would like to say, by the way, that Dr. Sitton's distinction between overt violence and refusal to go to jail, on the one hand, and going limp, on the other, is quite instructive. "Resisting arrest," regardless of what the traditional interpretation has been in Chapel Hill, seems to imply a physically obstructive muscular exertion to keep oneself from being hauled in. The fact that people have been doing that for centuries must be the reason why we have laws all over the country against resisting arrest. But going limp is a recently begun practice, which does not at all fit that description. A person who goes limp is willing to go to jail and does not try to prevent the police from arresting him. He merely abstains from helping them take him to jail.

Now to the more fundamental question about segregation. All this talk about legality and trespassing presupposes that some people still want segregation. If somebody in a university community argues that segregation is legally defensible, this begs the question of whether it's intellectually defensible. By "intellectually defensible," I mean scientifically and morally defensible. Just to set the record straight, I am a white Southerner whose greatgrandfathers owned slaves and fought for the privilege of seccession. In addition, I am not a member of any Communist or Communist-front organizations. I think my ancestors were mistaken on both counts, though they treated their slaves with a degree of affection and decency, and I respect them for that. I do not think segregation is scientifically or morally any more defensible for me today than slavery was for my ancesters. I am surprised that there are people in this university community who still disagree. I would be pleased if some of our more articulate defenders of property rights, states' rights, etc., would address themselves to these questions.

Tar Heels Fight For ACC Life At NC State

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina has lost to NC State in a game of basketball only once since March, 1959. But don't be so sure it won't happen again tonight. And if it does, the Tar Heels are in trouble—real trouble.

Things which usually don't happen to UNC basketball teams have been happening to Dean Smith and his cagers this season. Things like two double-overtime losses to Clemson, a loss to also-ran Maryland, and a loss to Virginia Tech in Woollen Gym (of all places!). The Tar Heels have been erratic and they know it.

They also know that they can't stumble around anymore—not for their ACC lives they can't. Tonight at 8:15 in Raleigh's Reynolds Coliseum, the Tar Heels will be on the spot. They meet the 3-9, but always pesky Wolfpack, and if the Smithmen are going to make a run for it in the ACC Tournament, now is the time to get into high gear.

Coach Everett Case fired up his soph-loaded team to an overtime upset over Clemson last weekend in Charlotte, and the old pro could do it again tonight.

The starting line-up is composed of four sophs and one senior who is having an off-year. But this unimpressive bunch of ragtags can beat you if you don't watch out. Just ask Clemson.

Billy Moffitt (6.8) and Tommy Mattocks (9.3) are the guards, the center is 6-4 Hal Blondeau (7.0), and the forwards are 6-6 Pete Auksel (12.3) and 6-4 Ray Hodgdon (7.9). Auksel, the lone senior, is the team's leading scorer and rebounder. Larry Lakins held both of these honors until he was declared ineligible at the end of the first semester. Lakins had 28 when the 'Pack lost to UNC, 79-71, earlier this year.

Top reserves for the Wolves, who started like a house afire (winning four of their first five) then fell flat to their present 7-9 over-all mark, are 6-9 Phil Taylor (1.3), 6-5 Larry Worsley (5.3) and guard Gary Hale (1.8). All are sophomores.

Blondeau was hampered with a sprained knee down in Charlotte and Taylor had to start in his place. Such may be the case again tonight.

The Tar Heels, fresh from a miserable night at Maryland, need this one tonight. They'll start Bryan McSweeney (5.6), back from a medical check-up along with Billy Cunningham (27.0), Ray Respess (13.9), Mike Cooke (12.5) and Charlie Shaffer (12.8).

Swimmers Win

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—North Carolina's Blue Dolphins are not blue today. They came from behind in the final event last night to upset the previously undefeated Maryland Terps, 48-47.

The victory kept Pat Earey's swimmers' ACC mark unblemished at 6-0 and assured them of the regular season conference title. The ACC Championships will be held in Chapel Hill next Thursday through Saturday.

Trailing 47-41 going into the 400-freestyles relay, the Carolinians were not to be denied. Before 2,000 screaming Terrapin fans, Davis Roberts, Harrison Merrill, Chip Smith and Thompson Mann splashed to a new pool record (3:18.2) and brought Earey his sweetest victory.

Tar Babies In 6:15 Prelim

Bobby Lewis (37.4), Ian Morrison (19.1) and Tom Gauntlett (12.9) will try out their favorite shots on some Baby Wolves this evening.

Ken Rosemond sends his red-hot frosh against the NC State yearlings in the 6:15 preliminary at Reynolds Coliseum.

Also starting for the Tar Babies, who have won ten straight, are guards Danny Talbott (6.0) and Donnie Moe (7.3).

Indoor Trackmen Welcome Roosters, Tigers To Tin Can

By BILL LEE

The Clemson and South Carolina indoor track teams invade the Tin Can from 10:30-3:30 today in an effort to spoil Carolina's undefeated conference record. And it is likely to be one of the oddest meets in a long while.

It seems, you see, that the meet is not a triangular affair, despite the fact that it involves three schools. And unless Coach Joe Hilton can convince the opposing coaches to make it triangular, Carolina will be taking part in two different meets at the same time. Hilton explains that the mixup occurred when scheduling of the ACC Championships forced him to put both schools on the same program.

Both the varsity, beaten only by the Quantico Marines, and the freshmen, who are yet to be defeated, will play host to the two South Carolina schools. Hilton, whose teams won victories in the "Big Five" Indoor Championships last week, is expecting the roughest competition of the season.

"Both schools have excellent sprinters and fair broad jumpers," he said, "and are strong in the high jump. Clemson has Doug Adams in the 600 and is in good shape in the hurdles. South Carolina has Alan Rose in the mile, Cromartie in the 880, and Leland in the broad jump. They also have a pretty good sophomore pole vaulter."

Hilton, for one, will not be unhappy when the indoor season ends. The team, he says, has been riddled by a series of colds and injuries of all varieties. Currently, Jim Meade is out with a knee injury, Mike Folk has a pulled hip muscle, and sprinter Ronnie Jackson is trying to work out a soreness in his leg.

"We were real pleased about that victory last week," he said. "Duke surprised us a lot by not running better than they did."

Opening the competition this morning will be Bill Busby and Bob Bowerman in the pole vault, and Bill Graham and Tom Cordell in the shotput. Broad jumping will be Harvey Whitley and Wayne Burkette.

The hurdles will kick off the running events at 12:30. They feature Milt Baugess, Rich Ambrose, Gary Mead, and Adger Stokes. Starting the 60-yard dash will be Jackson, Dale White, and John McNench.

Running the 2-mile relay will be Worth Helms, Sam Cormartie, Bill Janowitz, and Dave Peltz. Jerry Smith and Art Maillet will run the mile, while Maillet will again try the 2-mile.

Al Dobritch leads the 600, and Bob Bennett will run the 880. The meet will close with the mile relay with Ambrose, Bill Allen, White, and Dobritch running.

The frosh are led by Bob McLean, Johnny Johnson, John Levin, Bob Ancarrow, Bo Wood, Eddie Daw, and Trip MacPherson. Bill Gernon is also expected to turn in a good performance in the 440.

The ACC Conference Championship Meet, originally scheduled for Feburary 29, has been postponed until March 14 because of the Carolina- Duke basketball game next Saturday.

Carolina Fencers Entertain Duke, VMI, The Citadel

The UNC Fencing Team will be host to three visiting teams today in their first home meet of the season. Besides the Tar Heels, fencing will be Duke, VMI, and The Citadel.

The first competition will be between the two military schools at 10 a.m. Carolina opens the afternoon activity with a one o'clock clash with The Citadel.

Duke faces VMI at 2:30 p.m.; then the Tar Heels and Blue Devils will mix for their usual grudge affair. The lone evening match offers VMI against Carolina at 7:30 p.m.

Carolina, which has won three of five matches this season, will be out for revenge against VMI. The Keydets won an earlier skirmish, 15-12.

Peacocks Get Hot, Repeal Law, 90-33

By PETE GAMMONS

The powerful Peacocks, clearly the team to beat in the Grad basketball division, rolled mercilessly over Law School 4, 90-33. To do it they shot an unbelievable 62.4 per-cent from the floor, with all five players hitting over 55 per-cent and hitting in double figures. Tom Parham led the deluge with 24, with Larry Noland close behind with 22. Danny Roth (18), Harry Johnstone (16), and A. C. Hood (10) rounded out the scoring.

In other Grad action Dental School-1A beat the Math Grads, 52-39. Dick Finger scored 25 and Nick Dixon 13 for the Dentists. Dental-5 topped Law-2 led by Don Lenberry with 16.

ATO led the Frat White division games with a crushing 51-30 win over the DKE Reds. John McMillan led the ATO second half rush, leading all scorers with 25. Jimmy Stovall led the Phi Delt White to a 60-41 victory over Delta Sigma Pi. Stovall scored 18, as did Tony Petree for the losers.

Steve Painter and Fred Seely led Chi Psi White to a 38-24 win over Veta Psi. Seely scored only 8, but consistently cleared the boards, and helped to set up Painter, who poured in 12.

UNC Matmen Visit So-Tough Turtles

By PETE GAMMONS

Fresh from their crushing victory over Duke, Coach Sam Barnes and his much-improved wrestlers left Friday for College Park, Maryland, where they'll take on the powerful Terps tonight.

Maryland , last year's ACC champs, should provide stiff opposition for the young Tar Heels. But last week's convincing victory over Duke lends optimism to the team, which has shown tremendous improvement over the season, and is certainly greatly superior to last year's 2-11 club.

Barnes has molded together a young team, led by sophomores like Paul Wellstone and Steve Lister, which has rekindled interest and optimism in the sport here. The Terrapins may be too much, but the Tar Heels should at least give a respectable account of themselves.

Barnes will employ the same lineup which was so impressive last week against the Blue Devils. Undefeated and untied Wellstone (123) will try to keep his streak going, as will undefeated but twice tied Jerry Cabe (heavyweight).

State Edges UNC In Wild Battle, 51-49

Ian, Bob Hit 64 In Rout

By HUGH STEVENS

RALEIGH — UNC's freshman fantastics, Bobby Lewis and Ian Morrison, reeled off 36 of their team's 45 points in the second half here last night and sparked the Tar Babies to an 88-70 rout of State's rangy freshman.

The L and M boys were almost the whole show, tallying 64 points between them for the evening (Morrison 33, Lewis 31).

The terrible twosome, aided by Danny Talbott's beautiful feeds led a second-half blitz during which the freshmen scored 19 ponts while the Wolflets managed just three free throws. That stretch pushed the score from a tight 51-48 to 70-51 in just under six minutes.

Morrison began the drive with a set shot from 30 feet, and Lewis followed with four free throws. Morrison swished three more long ones, one of which seemed to come from outside Reynolds Coliseum.

Lewis then tossed in a free throw and a brilliant layup and Tom Parrish capped the streak with two baskets, the last on a beautiful assist from Talbott.

State finally hit a field goal at this point, but Lewis and Morrison continued to hit down the stretch, and it was never close again.

Before the drive began State had whittled UNC's 11-point halftime lead, 43-32, to just three, but Bill Gentry, who had held Lewis down in the first half, fouled out with 12:21 left, and Carolina began its barrage.

Eddie Biedenbach, a tough backcourt performer, led State with 16 points, Jerry Moore, a 6-7 center, trailed with 13.

Aldermen Will Drop Picketing Restriction

The Board of Aldermen will forget, at least for the time being, a proposed amendment to Chapel Hill's picketing ordinance.

The amendment, which the Aldermen approved by a 4-3 vote at their last meeting, would have limited picketing to the hours between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m.

Since the amendment failed to get a two-thirds vote on its first reading, another vote would have been required.

The Aldermen meet again tomorrow at 7:30 in the Town Hall. Concerning picketing, the Board's agenda says simply: "Picketing has been carried on for nearly two weeks with little or no trouble. At this time it appears to be unnecessary to take further action on the amendment ment to the picketing ordinance proposed at the last meeting."

The decision to drop further action on the amendment followed a recommendation from the Human Relations Committee against adoption.

The Human Relations Committee suggested, however, that groups planning to picket "voluntarily" gave the Police Department at least 12 hours advance notice.

Human Relations Chairman Mrs. George Taylor said discussions with townspeople had led her to believe that prohibition of peaceful picketing, as proposed by the Board of Aldermen, was undesirable and probably unlawful and restrictive of constitutionally protected rights. Voluntary restricting of hours, however, had brought a receptive response from Town groups opposing the 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. proposal.

Warren Wicker, who drew up a preliminary draft of a letter to be presented to Mayor Sandy McClamroch at the Aldermen's meeting tomorrow night, said that 12 hours advance notice for picketing had been suggested by the Police Department.

Town Manager Robert Peck recommended that the picketing ordinance be left the same.

Mr. Wicker's report first suggested that the 12-hour advance notice be incorporated in the ordinance, but he changed it in favor of a voluntary restriction. He said the "feeling was that nobody really wanted to arrest someone for not giving advance notice."

Committee member Henry Brandis suggested that the Committee start by requesting pickeers to give "adequate notice" voluntarily.

"Several people we talked with," Mr. Brandis said, "had no objections to this. It will not eliminate all late evening picketing, but it would reduce it. People picketing should exercise self-restraint if the situation is tense."

Mr. Brandis and Mr. Wicker expressed the opinions that the constitutionality of the Aldermen's original proposal was doubtful.

Assistant State Attorney General Ralph Moody had said earlier in the week that the ordinance was constitutional. Mr. Moody described the ordinance, including the proposed amendment as the "fairest and most equitable . . . we have found in a long time."

The Human Relations Committee said it would continue to "seek voluntary restraint and self-regulation" from picketing

RALEIGH—What happens at Miami Beach Tuesday night will be like a Girl Scout meeting compared with what transpired in Reynolds Coliseum last night. Like Clay and Liston are nothing compared to these Consolidated University basketball players.

NC State pulled the upset it wanted so badly, 51-49. The Pack did it in breathless fashion—little guard Billy Moffitt stealing the ball away from driving Billy Cunningham with four seconds left. That the ball game was ever completed at all is a miracle.

Tempers on both sides flared repeatedly throughout the last ten minutes of the low-scoring battle. Cunningham, conducting a personal war with State's Pete Auksel was called for two technicals. And Bryan McSweeney didn't throw any water on the fire, though he did dampen a few spectators with a well aimed drinking cup — tossed casually over his shoulder while he was on the bench.

Eight fouls were called after Ray Respess hit the last field goal of the contest with 2:47 left on the clock. The corner jumper made it 50-45, in favor of the Wolfpack.

From here three State players —Ray Hodgdon, Larry Worsley and Tommy Mattocks—combined their ineptitude from the free throw line, missing six gift tosses. Hodgdon did manage to drop one, giving the Pack its final point of the hectic night.

Meanwhile, the Tar Heels were sinking their free throws—setting up the final anxious maments. Billy the Kid hit two with 43 seconds left, Charlie Shaffer dropped in two more with 11 showing and the score was 51-49. That's how it ended.

State tried to make the inbounds play, but Respess deflected the pass and UNC almost had a steal. But the ball headed out of bounds—Shaffer dived for it and missed.

After Carolina's last time out, one which they needed then and also later, State tossed in to Worsley and Respess fouled him. The soph forward missed from the line. Cunningham rebounded and charged up court.

He never got the shot off. Moffitt grabbed the ball away back of the foul circle as the last second disappeared from the flashing scoreboard.

Kirkpatrick Wins 2nd Award

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Curry Kirkpatrick, former DTH Sports Editor and a junior in the School of Journalism, has won a second major award of the year in a nation-wide news writing contest sponsored by the William Randolph Hearst Foundation.

Kirkpatrick now ranks an overall first place in nationwide competition among accredited Schools of Journalism. His latest award also boosted the UNC School of Journalism to the number one spot in the nation.

The 20-year old Kirkpatrick won third place for an editorial feature published in the DTH dealing with Republician Presidential hopeful Barry Goldwater. He will receive a $400 cash award. The same amount will be awarded to the UNC School of Journalism.

Last December, Kirkpatrick won first place in the news-writing division for his article, "Impossible to Believe," depicting Chapel Hill's reaction to President Kennedy's assassination. Kirkpatrick won $750 for that story, bringing his total winnings for the year to $1,150.

Kirkpatrick's ability is not confined to the typewriter. He has a B average, and is one of the top students in the Journalism School here.

Last year, while serving as assistant sports editor, Kirkpatrick won second place in the Charlotte Obsever's sportswriting competition for a feature on track star Jim Beatty.

Perry Young, former UNC student now working for the Durham Morning Herald, won 11th place in the latest editorial-writing competition.

Each accredited School of Journalism is permitted to enter two stories in each month's Hearst competition. The local entries are screened by several members of the Journalism School.

Barbers & Beauticians: Should They Serve All?

Should Chapel Hill barber and beauty shops be integrated, or do they have a claim to special circumstances?

This is one of several such questions which demand a decision by some authoritative student group if a recent boycott request from Student Government is to be fair and yet effective.

Not unexpectedly, leaders of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee say barber and beauty shops should be integrated, while many barbers and beauticians—Negro and white—say de facto segregation in such shops is justified due to the obvious difference between the hair texture of whites and Negroes.

The barbers and beauticians, including spokesmen from white and Negro barber and beauty schools in Durham, say different equipment often is required. They also cite the lack of experience of white barbers in cutting Negroes' hair.

"In order to cut Negroes' hair," says Ira Murchison, a director of the Bull City (Negro) Barber College in Durham, "white barbers would have to be taught. Since you wouldn't get that type of training outside of a Negro school, it would be impossible to cut Negroes hair."

"We cut a lot of hair that isn't of the same texture because of the mixture of races, but white barbers don't come into contact with these differences."

Murchison's comments are echoed by Mrs. J. DeShazor, owner of DeShazor's (Negro) Beauty College in Durham.

"There is a Negro and a white school," she says. "Negro hair does have characteristics that make it different. To be perfectly frank about it, white beauticians would need some brushing up and training before they could style Negro women's hair."

White Chapel Hill beauty shop owners, asked about the other services they provide, say they do not give manicures except to regular customers, and even then not always due to the time elementt.

Several white beauty shops said they would serve Negroes if appointments were made far enough in advance.

White Chapel Hill barbers say there are two schools in hair-cutting, and that they are separately maintained by mutual consent. They note that there is no law preventing a Negro from studying in a white college or vice-versa.

Many of the white barbers say they do not want to extend any of their other services—like shaves—to Negroes, because they feel that if one service is provided, other services such as haircutting which they now feel are impossible would soon be demanded on a similar basis.

The barbershop in the basement of Graham Memorial is the only one in Chapel Hill known to serve Negroes and whites on an equal basis. Pittman Culbreth, manager of the shop, says, "the differnce in skin-color doesn't count; the difference in the hair does. To do a good job, you have to have training."

He said he has cut Negroes' hair, but it is difficult to shape. He said he doesn't know how to cut Negroes' hair, but does it because it is the policy of GM's Board of Directors.

Asked for their position on the matter of integrating barber and beauty shops, Freedom Committee leaders said:

"Some barber shops and beauty parlors are included in our list of segregated establishments for the same reason other businesses are. They are licensed by the state to serve all the pub-

Beauticians, No (For Now); Barbers, Si

The economic boycott that is gathering increasing support on and off campus is, like any boycott, a two-edged sword. To be effective, it must be fair. And if it is fair, it will be effective. The purpose of the boycott is not only to withhold patronage from businesses which refuse to provide equal service to all. Its purpose also is to reward through greater patronage those businesses which do live up to their obligation to serve all of the public.

It appears that there has been one case of unfair boycotting lately, at the Carolina Beauty Shop. For some unknown reason, it is the only one of Chapel Hill's several dozen beauty shops to find its name on the boycott list. As a result it has begun to suffer adverse reaction. This situation needs to be corrected. According to our investigation, the manager of the Carolina Beauty Shop is willing to provide equal service to all customers without regard to race, as are many other beauty parlors in town.

There are other beauty shops which have not adopted this same position, however. But until they are pinpointed by an authoritative survey, we ask that the boycott not be extended to cover beauty parlors, and especially not the Carolina.

However, we think barbershops ought to continue to be included in the boycott. There is no reason why white barbers cannot learn to cut Negroes' hair, especially as there are many cases where the difference in hair texture is not that insignificant.

All Negroes do not have different texture hair, just as all whites do not have the same texture hair. If a man is a barber, he ought to be able to cut all types of hair. The same goes for beauty shops: beauticians ought to be able to work with all types of hair.

The heart of the problem seems to be more than hidden race prejudice, to be sure. There are differences in training between white and Negro schools. These differences, however, ought to be eliminated. The State has no right to grant a license to a barber or a beautician if that person has not been sufficiently well-trained to deal with all types of hair, just as a doctor should not be granted a license if he is not able to treat all illnesses.

For a barber or a beautician to say that he or she cannot deal well with a certain type of hair is understandable. But to say that all Negroes have the same type of hair is incorrect, and differences in service on the basis of that incorrect belief are inexcusable.

If Negro barbers can cut all types of hair, why can't white barbers learn to do the same? Surely no one is suggesting that Negro barbers are inherently superior.

But, to return to our main point, we urge that beauty shops be left off the boycott list until a fresh survey is performed and those who discriminate are pinpointed.

Meantime, though, the barbershop boycott should be continued. Where can you go then for a haircut? The barbershop in Graham Memorial is integrated, and its barbers do an excellent job as well.

Dollars & Sense Not A Vulgar Mixture

Greensboro Daily News

The study of Greek literature, an Oxford dean once counseled his students with startling infelicity, "not only elevates above the vulgar herd, but leads not infrequently to positions of considerable emolument."

With a good bit more finesse, Chancellor William B. Aycock of the university at Chapel Hill recently hailed a welcome trend in college teaching: While "elevation" retains its high priority in the good scholar's allegiance, "emolument" is coming along very nicely, too. Speaking to new Phi Beta Kappa initiates, Mr. Aycock made the following points:

—Competition for "trained intelligence" is hot today, not only between universities and other users (such as business, industry and government) but among universities themselves.

—Salaries are rising.

—More and more Ph.D.'s are being appointed initially as assistant professors, a rung above the traditional beginning as instructor.

—Promotions are becoming more or less automatic in many institutions, so that a really good teacher may hope to reach full professional rank in some cases within a decade.

—Fringe benefits are multiplying; leaves with pay are becoming a reality.

This kind of bread and butter talk has traditionally gone on in hushed tones. But there is really no point in disguising the fact that potential college teachers, like everyone else, are mindful of financial security. An increasingly outmoded legend of austerity and threadbareness lingers on over college and university teaching, which may help to explain why the statistical jugglers reckon that by 1970 only half the needed college teachers will be available. The deterrent should be exploded, Chancellor Aycock apparently believes; and if current trends continue, "persons with substantial means may soon begin to advise their sons as well as their daughters to consider a career in education along with other professions when choosing their life's work."

Of course affluence is not an unmixed blessing in teaching; but as Mr. Aycock recognizes it is silly of the academic world, in an era of dire need, to conceal its growing appeal under the illusion that it is vulgar to mix dollars and sense.

"In these difficult days," Chancellor Aycock asked in conclusion, "if Phi Beta Kappa graduates are not willing to assume the vital tasks demanded of faculty members to whom shall we turn?"

Bright college undergraduates, whether Phi Beta Kappa or not, should ponder the chancellor's question at length—and may do so, it seems, without fearing vows of poverty.

'Dear Sir'

Notes from the Congressional mailbag, as relayed by our spy in Washington.

—A lady wrote her Congressman asking for assistance. She concluded her letter with, "I'll be very graceful if you can help me."

—Another letter a few days later from another constituent contained the persuasive information: "I'm a register and a voter and I have been since I became of age."

—Another voter, appreciative of his Representative's help wrote: "I appreciate all the time and trouble you've given me."

"To bind men together in brothehood based upon eternal and immutable principles, with a bond as strong as right itself and as lasting as humanity; to know no North, no South, no East, no West, but to know man as man, to teach that true men the world over should stand together and contend for supremacy of good over evil; to teach not politics, but morals; to foster not partisanship but the recognition of true merit wherever found; to have no narrower limits within which to work together for the elevation of man than the outlines of the world; these were the thoughts and hopes uppermost in the minds of the founders of the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity (in 1880)."

It is with great regret that we report the absence, at least temporarily, of Curry Kirkpatrick from our staff. We differed with him on a matter of taste, and we found the difference to be irreconcilable. It was a hard decision to make as Kirkpatrick was one of our best writers and most dedicated staff members.

SALUTATORY.

The growing demands of the University have shown the need of a weekly paper. The University Athletic Association regarding itself as the means by which such a need could be supplied, at a stated meeting elected a board of editors (chief and five subs) and a business manager.

With this apology only, the first issue of the first volume of the TAR HEEL makes its appearance.

This new venture is necessarily entered upon by the present board with no little trepidation, nevertheless with a determination, to make a success which can only be done through the indulgence and assistance of our faculty and fellow-students. Therefore we invite honest criticism, aid in the advancement of [illegible] new project will be thankfully appreciated.

THE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE VISIT THE UNIVERSITY.

The following members of the legislature composing the visitation committee arrived at the University on a special train Friday morning, February 3rd:

Messrs. Battle, chairman; Cheek Aycoke, James, Pou, of the senate; and Messrs. Holt (chairman) Buse, Parker, Starnes, Walker, Ward, of the house.

After breakfasting, the regular chapel exercises were attended, then visits were made to the reading room, libraries and various lecture rooms where classes were assembled. The numerous laboratories were inspected as well as some of the students' rooms. In the afternoon meetings of both the societies were held and the gentlemen who were not alumni were made honorary members. Just after prayers the boys called repeatedly for speeches from our visitors, a majority of whom responded most felicitously and gave words of encouragement for the future outlook of the university, from a legislative appropriation standpoint. All saw the need of a sufficient appropriation and fully equip, this the most useful and important of all the State institutions, and give to a university of whose past brilliant record and whose future prospects are such as would make any State in the union proud to be the possessor of such an heritage to hand to posterity, a sufficient appropriation to put the university on a financial basis equal to its rapid expansion and growth. When some of the committee expressed their deep regret at not having had an opportunity of receiving an education, in their youth, we could not but feel that it was a duty that was owed to future generations, and which has been due to the se that have passed away, that the supreme law making power in the State, ought to make tuition at the university free to North Carolinians as is done at the University of Virginia to Virginians and the only way to do this is to appropriate a sufficient amount to keep the university up, until resources from outside States and the technical courses shall make itself sustaining, and, too, we could not but think what a shame and loss it was to North Carolina, that it had failed to open the doors of the university, in the past to such sterling manhood as represented the legislature on the committee. The body of the students were well pleased with our friends, if they are fair sample of our legislators this year. North Carolina is in good hands. They know the needs of the University.

Action

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Students at Chapel Hill and across the country have been able to stay neutral on the issue of Civil Rights in the past, but now everyone of us must decide and act. The United States is one of the few countries in which the leaders of tomorrow have not been actively affirming their convictions. We all sit back and profess our ideals, but to use a cliche, it's all words and no actions.

The resolution for a boycott is not a law and should not be interpreted as such. However, as citizens who are an integral part of society, we must help to shape the surroundings in which we live. Our country is based on high ideals, most of which were fought for at the levels of civil disobedience and boycott; and if we are to maintain these ideals we must continue to fight.

A boycott in no way involves an infraction of the law, but it often produces greater results. The integration of the local movie theaters attest to the effectiveness and future peace and goodwill Chapel Hill can expect to find.

In support of the resolution I would urge that the students of this university assert their worth to the community and the nation by becoming responsible citizens and acting on behalf of equal rights for all rather than standing on the sidelines and cheering when the paddy wagon picks up demonstrators who are doing the job every one of us should do.

As the letter in recent editions of the Tar Heel states, I do not adovcate participating in civil disobedience; however, I do urge students to take a mature view of the situation and do their part in a small but significant way by not patronizing segregated establishments.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel invites comments on current topics from its readers regardless of viewpoint. All letters to the editors should be typewritten, double-spaced and of reasonable length. All letters must be signed, with the address of the author. No letter considered libelous or in poor taste will be printed.

Tar Heel Is Seventy-One Today

The office of the Daily Tar Heel is a busy place, and the pace of turning out a new edition each afternoon seldom leaves room for reflection on the past. But today, the paper is seventy-one, and we pause to glance backward briefly at some of the people who have aided (or hindered) its evolution into one of the largest and most widely-read student newspapers in the country.

The history, like the Tar Heel itself, is a little bit unusual.

The first issue appeared on Thursday, February 23, 1893. This was just over a hundred years after the University first opened its doors.

In those early days, and for 30 years thereafter, the paper was financed by the Athletic Association. It was designed to promote and report athletic events, and was published on a weekly basis in Durham.

Charles Baskerville, the editor, found trouble during the first month of the paper's life. The non-fraternity staff members, agitated over the paper's pro-fraternity policy, pulled out and established a rival paper—the White and Blue—which tried unsuccessfully to abolish not only the Tar Heel, but fraternities as well.

Five years after the founding, color was first used in the Tar Heel. The entire paper was printed in royal blue ink, proclaiming the victory of the Carolina football team over Virginia for the championship of the South. In bold blue headlines the game was termed "the greatest game ever played on a Southern gridiron!"

Scathing editorials against the existing dilapidated gym and abuse of the library appeared in 1899. In that year the paper recorded the birth of organized cheering at athletic contests, giving the official school cheer as "Popsy-Wopsy, Tinkly-Tee, Vivela, Vivela, UNC."

The first coed joined the staff as managing editor in 1901 when J. C. B. Ehringhaus, later governor of the state, was editor. Photographs were first used the following year. Prior to that time, only sketches and drawings broke the monotony of type.

"Overwork and tired eyes" caused Frank P. Graham, (later president of the University) to resign in 1907 after one semester as editor. The next year saw editor O. W. Hyman turn the Tar Heel into a six-page semi-weekly. Two years later, lack of funds changed it again into a weekly.

Wartime Editor W. H. Stephenson holds the record for the shortest editorial term—one week. He was elected in the spring of 1918 to take office in the fall, but during the summer he enrolled in aviation school in New York. His first—and last—editorials were mailed to the paper in in early September.

The next week the Athletic Association replaced him with Forrest Miles, who immediately gave the paper a military character and initiated small type in order to cram six pages of material into four pages of type.

Within the month, Uncle Sam also snatched Miles away, and Managing Editor Thomas Wolfe (Look Homeward Angel . . .) was faced with the job of editing the weekly. Wolfe, desperate for staff members, held a write-in-25 - words - or - less - why - you-would - like - to - be - editor contest and thereby filled the vacant staff positions. Miles returned in January and reclaimed his position. (But Wolfe, who enjoyed the job, ran for editor in the spring and took office in October, 1919. He enlarged the editorial section, crusaded against campus thievery, and campaigned for the return to a semi-weekly printing.

Wolfe's successor, Daniel Grant, made the Tar Heel into a semi-weekly and enlarged it to the present size of 17x23 inches. In the same year the paper helped found the NC Collegiate Press Association, and for the first time the words "official organ of the Athletic Association" were removed from the nameplate.

In 1922 the Tar Heel moved from Durham to Chapel Hill for printing purposes and the paper was released from the control of the Athletic Association. The paper was henceforth published by Student Government under the auspices of the newly-formed Publications Board.

Walter Spearman, (now a UNC journalism professor) inherited a tri-weekly paper and added the first regular sports page in 1928. He led an editorial fight against the rival Yellow Journal—a scandal sheet circulated by Sigma Upsilon literary fraternity.

Spearman relinquished his position in April, 1929, to Glenn Holder, (who left school one month later due to participating in the Yellow Journal) only to edit the paper again during Holder's absence.

Spearman's second term saw the transition to a daily paper and the addition of that word to the nameplate.

Voted in by a 666-148 student body vote, the debut as a daily came during the three days of commencement instead of waiting until fall, as a tribute to visiting alumni and departing seniors.

Holder returned in September, adding telegraphic service to the Tar Heel.

In 1943 the Tar Heel once again assumed a military character and was returned to weekly status. When Walter Damtoft was called into military service during his first month as editor, Kat Hill was elected to finish his term and become the first female editor of the paper in its 50 years of publication.

The following year Editor Horace Carter (who was later to win a Pulitzer Prize) joined the Navy, leaving another coed, Muriel Richter, to assume the editorship.

A freshman, Robert Morrison, was elected editor two years later and still holds the record as the youngest Tar Heel editor. Although defeated for re-election, he returned the paper to a daily and published the first "extra" edition (occasioned by Franklin Roosevelt's death).

During the war years, when staff turnover was greatest, one staff member found himself defeated for editor on four different occasions.

Graham Jones (now the Governor's press secretary) in the spring of 1950 became the only editor to flunk out of school while editing the paper—and return the following fall to graduate with a Phi Beta Kappa key.

Roy Parker, not Jones, edited the paper that fall, adding comics and a syndicated column.

The first and last peacetime female editor of the Tar Heel was Glenn Harden, daughter of former staff member John Harden, who was elected to the post by a 2-1 majority in 1951.

The Tar Heel stepped into one of its major controversies of the past decade when the Supreme Court desegregation decision of 1954 was handed down. In line with the policy of previous DTH editors, Charles Kuralt (now CBS-TV) editorially supported the decision in the face of considerable criticism.

In 1956 came the most controversial fight in which the Tar Heel ever became embroiled. Co-Editors Louis Kraar (now with Time magazine) and Ed Yoder (now with Greensboro Daily News) conducted a hard campaign against the University's hiring "big-time coach" Jim Tatum. Tatum's friends struck back hard, they organized the first "recall" election in the Tar Heel's history in an attempt to get rid of the editors, but Kraar-Yoder won the election.

A year-and-a-half later the Tar Heel saw its second recall election — this one successful. Neil Bass was accused of libeling certain members of the faculty and student body and making malicious and untrue statements. Doug Eisele won the recall.

Curtis Gans became editor in 1958 and was followed by Davis Young the next year. Johnathan Yardly (now with the New York Times) took the helm in 1960. Yardly was followed by the venerable Wayne King, who holds the unofficial longevity record with the paper. King was succeeded by Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye for the school year 1962-63.

The present editors, Gary Blanchard and Dave Ethridge, took over the paper last spring. During their tenure, the physical plans of the offices has been renovated and a new telephone system installed. The paper currently boasts a daily circulation of about 9,000, with a regular staff of 16 people.

Church Views Surveyed

A survey of campus religious attitudes is now in progress at UNC, according to Robert Althauser, graduate student of Sociology, now serving as consultant for the survey.

The survey is intended to be used by several campus religious groups to evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of their programs.

Those conducting the survey hope to draw conclusions as to why students become involved in or alienated from religious institutions. Other objectives are to draw conclusions as to what factors contribute to changes in personal faith since entering the university.

The form has been mailed to a random sample of approximately 1200 students and takes only ten minutes to complete.

Those receiving forms are urged to complete and return them in enclosed stamped self-addressed envelopes.

lic, and the public is multiracial.

"This reason alone is sufficient to require that all such establishments prepare in both training and equipment to serve all people.

Only in very special cases is it necessary for barbers and beauticians to have special training or equipment to adequately serve all customers.

"Since we are in a period of change from the outmoded system of segregation to a system of service and opportunity for all, it is necessary for barbers and beauticians who have in the past only been equipped to serve a limited part of the public to acquire the training and equipment necessary to serve all.

"There are certain services which do not require additional training or equipment in order to serve everyone. They include manicure, pedicure, shampoos and dying, as well as facials and facial depilitation for the ladies and shaves for the men.

"Thus there is no justification for present practices of racial discrimination in these services."

Cops Charge Demonstrators

PRINCESS ANNE, Md. (UPI)—A flying wedge of state troopers using two snarling police dogs charged Saturday into a crowd of 300 Negro students blocking the entrance to a restaurant accused of discrimination.

One Negro student was bitten on the leg and a state police captain was clubbed in the head during the brief melee.

Police disarmed a white man who tried to join in the fray with a knife. Four of the Negro demonstrators were arrested.

The chanting, singing, sign-carrying Negro students from Maryland State College demonstrated in this Eastern Shore community to protest segregation at several Princess Anne restaurants.

But they singled out one restaurant on Somerset Avenue, the main street in town, because it was the scene of a disturbance last night in which a Negro student was struck.

Police Capt. Paul Randall was struck in the head before order was restored and the Negro students resumed their protest march up and down in front of the restaurant.

Police, expecting trouble, had brought two dogs to the scene. But they did not put the dogs into action until the Negro students attemped to block the entrance to the restaurant.

The Committee unanimously approved the letter to Mayor McClamroch.

The latest formal protest to the proposed amendment came from Chapel Hill members of the National Association of Social Workers. At a meeting Thursday night, the Social Workers passed a resolution petitioning the Aldermen to "reaffirm their conviction concerning the right of citizens to peaceful assembly and the right to petition for redress of grievances by refusing to pass the ordinance amendment. . . ."

The Committee of Concerned Citizens, a group formed immediately after the picketing amendment was first proposed, had been making plans to violate the ordinance and test it in court.

(Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and "Barefoot Boy With Cheek".)

ECONOMICS CAN BE CHUCKLES

Many of you have been avoiding economics because it is so widely known as "the dismal science." Oh, good friends, stop cheating yourselves of many a laugh and cheer, because economics is a positive riot! True, it is called the dismal science, but that is only because it was invented in 1681 by Walter C. Dismal.

It is easy to understand why Mr. Dismal's discovery of economics is today almost forgotten, for the fact is that he himself only stayed with the subject for two or three days. After that he took up embonpoint, which means fatness. It is said that at his apogee, Mr. Dismal reached 1200 pounds. This later became known as Guy Fawkes Day.

It was not until 1776 when Adam Smith published his Wealth of Nations (or Ozymandias, as it is usually known as) that the world came to realize what a rosy, twinkly, fun subject economics is. As Mr. Smith showed in his jocular little treatise, there is nothing complicated about economics.

When there is a great demand for a product, a great supply is placed on the market. When there is a small demand, there is a small supply. Take, for example, castanets. You walk into any average American town today and I'll wager you won't see more than eighty or ninety castanet shops. That is because the demand is small.

For Marlboro Cigarettes, on the other hand, the demand is great. Thus, you will find Marlboros—with all their yummy rich tobacco flavor and pure white Selectrate filter and pliable soft pack and unpliable Flip-Top box—at any counter where cigarettes are sold in every one of our fifty great States and Duluth.

To Adam Smith, I say, belongs the distinction of popularizing economics. Mr. Smith was followed by David Ricardo. In fact, everywhere he went he was followed by David Ricardo. Mr. Smith finally got so annoyed that he summoned a bobby, as British policemen are called, and had Mr. Ricardo arrested. This later became known as the Louisiana Purchase.

Upon his release from gaol, as a British jail is called, Mr. Ricardo reported to his parole officer, Thomas Robert Malthus. They soon became fast friends, and one night over a game of whist they invented the stock exchange, or chutney, as it is called in England.

Well sir, with the British having, you might say, a corner on economics, the French decided that they wanted some economics too. Being, however, a proud nation, they refused simply to borrow British economics, but insisted on inventing their own. At first they tried using the truffle hound as a medium of exchange. When this proved less than satisfactory, they switched to pomade. Discouraged by this second disappointment, they finally shrugged and said, "Oh, who cares about economics anyhow?" and returned to the guillotine and Maurice Chevalier.

America, I am pleased to report, had much better success with economics. Our early merchants quickly broke down economics into its two major categories—coins and folding money—and today, as a result of their wisdom, we can all enjoy the automatic toll station.

Well sir, I could go on and on about this fascinating subject, but I know you're all in a tearing hurry to rush out and sign up for Econ I. So I will leave you now with two kindly words of farewell: Gresham's Law.

Frosh Splash Championships Here Monday

Freshman swimmers throughout the ACC, some 50 to 60 strong, converge on Bowman Gray Pool Monday for the tenth annual Freshman Invitational Championships. The meet is strictly an individual affair; team scores are not recorded.

A number of promising yearlings will be featured — racing both against each other and the clock. At least four already have tied or bettered NCAA freshmen records earlier this season. These are Ron Wirth (200 back and individual medley) and Don Freeman (200 free), both of NC State; and Maryland's Phil Denkobitz along with UNC's Pete Worthen, in the 50 and 100 freestyle events.

The 1500-meter freestyle will begin at 3 p.m. Starting at 6 p.m. wil be the 200-yard races in each stroke plus the individual medley, 50 free, and diving, followed by 100 sprints in backstroke, breast, butterfly, and freestyle events.

Ron Jackson Breaks School's Dash Mark

By BILL LEE

The indoor trackmen of UNC handily whipped South Carolina 65-40, and at the same time, dealt Clemson a 60-48 defeat in yesterday's double two-way meet.

To top it off, the freshmen also triumphed over the South Carolinians by a score of 64-44-20 with Clemson and South Carolina trailing respectively.

Ronnie Jackson of the Tar Heels was the man of the day as he turned in a first-place time of 6.1 in the 60-yard dash, setting a new school record. The old record of 6.2 was previously held by Dave Willis, set in 1950, and Jeff Newton, in 1954. Jackson's time was only one tenth of a second off of the world record of 6.0.

In the broad jump, Woody Chapman of USC, won with a jump of 21' 5". Avery Nelson of Clemson won the other meet at 21' 6½". Bob Ancarrow of UNC won for the frosh.

In the pole-valut, Roland Brown won for USC at 12' 6". Bill Jackson of Clemson won the other at 14'. UNC's Johnny Johnson topped the frosh at 13'.

Walt Christiansen lengthened the early USC lead by taking the shotput with a heave of 49' 10". Bill Graham of UNC tossed 47' 8" to top the Clemson meet.

Dale White won the 70-yard low hurdles for both contests with a time of 7.9. Raymond Nesbitt of Clemson led the freshmen in the same time. John Levin of UNC turned in a 6.3 to win the frosh 60-yard.

The two-mile relay team of Worth Helms, Sam Cromartie, Bill Janowitz, and John Dykstra, topped both meets with a time of 8:25.8.

Al Rose of USC won the mile with a time of 4:21.6, while Ernie Drown of Clemson topped the other meet at 4:24.7. Rod Lasher of UNC led the frosh at 4:38.7.

Carolina's Al Dobritch gave the Heels a double victory in the 600-yard run with a 1:15 time. Richard Greene of Clemson won for the frosh at 52.3.

In the 880, Bob Cromby of USC topped the first meet with 1:55.2, but Bob Bennet of UNC was breathing down his neck at 1:55.9 to take the other meet. Eddie Daw of UNC topped the frosh at 2:01.9.

Art Maillett again gave Carolina a double victory in the 2-mile with a time of 9:35.0. Trip MacPherson took the frosh 2-mile at 10:12.5.

Tommy Clark topped both meets also with a jump of 6'4.". Tilden Bridges took the frosh event at six feet even.

To end up the day, Rich Ambrose, Bill Allen, Dale White, and Al Dobritch teamed together to take the mile relay over UNC.

Earey's Blue Dolphins — All Wet, And Very Happy

By PERRY McCARTY

If the true measure of a champion is the uncanny ability to win the close ones, then Coach Pat Earey's swimmers certainly fill the bill. Friday night, UNC bolted the door on the brink of defeat and battled back furiously on sheer determination for a 48-47 win over Maryland, a spotless 6-0 ACC chart, the ACC dual meet crown, and at least a share in the over-all conference title.

UNC's medley relay team of Thompson, Mann, Rick Forum, Fred Lipp and Davis Roberts swam an incredible 3:41.9—a new ACC mark, two full seconds off the old one.

The estimated 2,000 partisan fans who packed the poolside a full hour before meet time had good cause to fret. Scarcely had they caught their breath when the "human motor boat," shod in a muscular frame stamped Harrison Merrill smashed his week-old 200 free record with a new standard of 1:43.2.

Here Maryland began to revive, sweeping first and second in both 50-free and diving events. Then in the 200 fly, Lipp faced Raoul Robillard and Don Dunphy, two of the Terps' finest. Lipp was magnificent as he led all the way winning in 2:02.5—a new UNC record.

Terps firsts in the 100-free and 200-back threatened doom. Again the brilliant Merrill delivered a decisive blow as he waltzed through the 50-fre in 5:12.0 a new pool mark. Even now, the Heels were on the short end of a 43-36 count.

Sophomore breaststroker Forum, who, coaches forecast, can be "just as good as he wants," swam a dazzling 2:21.9, a full four seconds off his previous UNC record.

Going into the final freestyle relay, the count stood 47-41. The burden fell on Chip Smith as Roberts, Merrill, and Mann already had served yeoman duty. The junior freestyle sprinter answered the call with his finest showing of the season.

Swimming the third leg, Smith covered the 100 yards in 49.4, notched a lead which anchor Mann (Thompson) increased to come home with the needed seven points, the 48-47 margin, and a sweet, delectable, long-to-be-remembered win.

Earier, the Maryland frosh shaded UNC's fine team 50-45. Terp Phil Denkobitz bested UNC's Pete Worthen in titan struggle in 50- and 100-freesyle sprints. Denkobitz's times were fantastic—21.0 and 47.3, Worthen did 21.5 and 48.8. The two meet again Monday night in the Freshman Invitational Championships in Chapel Hill.

Freshman Baseball Practice

All candidates for pitcher and catcher on the freshman baseball team should report to Emerson Stadium at four o'clock Monday afternoon. This announcement was made yesterday by Coach Bill Lovingood.

Those frosh interested in trying out for the other positions should report for practice next Thursday (Feb. 27), also at four o'clock.

Lovingood urges all interested freshmen to report for the try-outs.

To Gant, it's more than fabric; it's flair, fit, show—3 vital "inherents," visible only when a shirt is worn. # Humpty Dumpty Tar Heels Sat On A Wall..

...Had A Great Fall...

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—All the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't put the Tar Heels back together again. At least not when Billy Cunningham fouls out with 12:45 remaining and with only six points and eight rebounds to his name.

That's exactly what happened here last night as lowly Virginia rose up to sink the drowning Tar Heel basketball team, 79-64. It was the third straight time UNC has gone under to an underdog opponent. And it was the fifth defeat in the team's last six games. And it was the seventh ACC loss in what is considered a bad year for the conference. And it wasn't even close.

The Cavaliers, playing without their star forward Chip Conner, all but ran the visiting Carolinians out of the ancient field house. With Mac Caldwell (21), Richard Katstra (16) and Jay Lambiotte (12) taking up the scoring slack, UVA came up with one of its better games and UNC came up with one of its worst.

Virginia shot well and worked the ball well. The Tar Heel did so poorly in these categories that Dean Smith finished the game with a line-up of Pud Hassel, Johnny Yokley, Bill Harrison, Bob Bennett and Artie Katz.

The UNC team was beaten even before Cunningham left the game. At the time, the score was 49-38. The rest of the game played itself out.

Charlie Shaffer's jump shots from the corner got the otherwise ragged Tar Heels off to an early lead which was short lived. The Virginians came on strong in the latter part of the first half and held a 38-29 lead at the intermission.

While the Cavalier's 1-2-2 zone was causing Cunningham all kinds of trouble, Shaffer (23 for the game) was hot. He reeled off nine of the first 11 UNC points and 13 of the first 20.

48 Per Cent Of Students Say 'Moderately Liberal'

By PETE WALES

Some 48 per cent of UNC Students consider themselves "moderately liberal" according to a recent student government poll of 133 sophomores, juniors and seniors.

Another 34 per cent described themselves as "moderately conservative." The remaining 18 per cent were split between liberal and conservative.

The poll, conducted by the State Affairs and Communications Committees, began last fall. Results were tabulated this month.

The study, distributed to students all over campus, was designed to poll student opinions on selected campus and political issues.

One-third of those polled said that their political views had changed "from conservative to more liberal" since they entered college. About 30 per cent said their views had not changed at all and 17 per cent said their views had gone "from liberal to more conservative."

Half the students said they were affiliated with the Democratic Party and 29 percent, the Republician Party. Another 18 per cent said they had no party affiliation.

Asked to give three factors that have influnced their political thinking, 62 per cent answered "increased thinking about political questions." About 34 per cent said "increased independent reading in courses" and "influence of friends."

Only six per cent gave "personal contact with faculty members" as an influence.

On the national scene, six out of ten said they would not favor a federal "public accommodations" law.

On the state gubernatorial race, 52 per cent favored L. Richardson Preyer, 17 per cent were for Dan K. Moore, 14 per cent for I. Beverly Lake and 17 per cent did not answer. No other candidates were listed in the possible answers.

The vast majority of students were unfamiliar with the activities of the UNC chapter of the National Student Association and omitted opinions about it.

About 68 per cent said they thought that Student Legislature should not pass "resolutions concerning political issues not directly related to the campus." The poll was finished before the resolution on the boycott was passed.

Some 57 per cent said they considered the DTH editorial policy more liberal than their own views. About 23 per cent said they agreed with the DTH while six per cent said they were more liberal.

Half the students said the DTH's coverage of student government and campus affairs was "fair" and 23 per cent said it was "very good." Another 17 per cent said the coverage was "poor."

Fall Orientation Chairman To Be Perry McCarty

Perry McCarty, a rising senior from Atlanta, Ga., has been appointed Orientation Chairman for next fall.

A Morehead Scholar from the Westminster Schools, McCarty participated in freshman and sophomore honors programs, is a member of Phi Delta Theta, Phi Eta Sigma, the Men's Honor Council and is a pre-med student.

Thursday night's session of Student Legislature confirmed the appointment. President Lawler remarked, "We are indeed gratified that someone of McCarty's high academic caliber will direct Orientation next fall," said student body president Mike Lawler. "We are confident he will continue the splendid job managed jointly by Archie Davis and Diana Teasdale this past fall."

PERRY McCARTY

Tommy Baysden, a member of last year's Orientation Committee, and Bob Wilson, who handled second semester Orientation, will work closely with McCarty.

Interviews for Woman's Orientation Coordinator will be held Wednesday, Feb. 26, from 4-6 p.m. and Thursday Feb. 27, 3-6. Those interested women students should sign up for a time at GM information desk. If, for one reason or another, an applicant cannot be available at these times, please leave name and number on the sign-up sheet.

Interviews for the Orientation Committee will begin March 4; Times will be printed in the DTH.

Old, Old Flicks To Be Featured By Film Society

By HENRY McINNIS

Old-time film classics are coming on campus beginning Wednesday night at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

The series is presented by the University Film Society and tickets for the spring season cost $4. They are on sale today at Graham Memorial and the "Y" Court.

The list of stars in the series include Gloria Swanson, Jean Harlow, Douglas Fairbanks, Humphrey Bogart, Lauren Bacall, Anna May Wong and Coleen Moore.

These flicks are rarely seen in today's movie houses.

For tomorrow night, "Gold Diggers of '33" will flood the screen with a famous old Warner musical and exuberant spectacle starring Ginger Rogers, Joan Blondell and Ruby Keeler as chorus cuties who know the Depression score. The New York Times called it "an imaginatively staged, breezy show."

A short subject will also round out the evening. It is entitled "Paris Weekend" and is a delightful satire on the flight of Parisians to the country for an "idyllic" August Sunday. There is no conversation, but none is needed, for montage, music and sound are entertaining in a universal language.

On March 16 "Hell's Angels" is scheduled, directed by the enigmatic Howard Hughes who also guided "The Bosom," Jane Russell, in his daring sex-in-the-barn epic "The Outlaw." The film boasts the Marilyn Monroe of the 1930's, Jean Harlow, who later followed the poison path of death like Monroe, from sun radiation. This is considered her finest and most incandescent screen appearance.

The short with "Hell's Angels" is called "Vagabonding with John Barrymore" and offers The

Fulbright To Keynote Carolina Symposium

Cooper Accepts Invitation

By HARRY DELUNG

Senator William Fulbright, generally accepted as Capitol Hill's most influential authority on foreign affairs, will speak here on the first night of the Carolina Symposium.

Fulbright's acceptance for Sunday evening, April 5, was announced yesterday by Chairman Dick Hesse.

The topic of the speech will be "Individual Freedom and Collective Security." The Arkansas Democratic attracted national attention in this area in 1950 when he attacked the "witch hunting" of Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

Senator John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) will speak the following afternoon on the related topic of "Civil Liberties and National Security."

Fulbright stood alone in 1951 as the only Senator voting against the appropriation for McCarthy's investigatory committee.

"Politics U.S.A.", a text used here in introductory political science, indentifies him as "one of the leaders in the successful Senate battle to censure Sen. McCarthy." During this period, Fulbright was attacked nationally as a traitor," a "Red skunk," and other abuse.

He now serves a chairman of the highly-respected Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and as the senior Senator from Arkansas.

Although in agreement with the United Nations goals for world peace, Fulbright is sometimes pessimistic about its capacity to deal with Cold War problems. He looks to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) to take an increased role in economic and cultural unity.

The Senator is noted for his statement that the West is as much to blame for the Berlin problem as the East. Two weeks following this the Berlin Wall was erected.

A panel discussion featuring four party leaders will highlight the program. Harry, DeLung, Don Carson, Don Curtis and Buzzy Stubbs comprise the panel, to be moderated by Jeff Adams, party chairman.

The meeting will be at 8 in Carroll Hall.

"All party members are urged to attend to express their views on this issue," commented Adams. "We must have the opinion of all concerned members before the party can take a stand on this issue.

Playmakers Offer Tickets For Play

Approximately 1500 student tickets for the Carolina Playmakers production of Archibald MacLeish's "J.B." will go on sale in Y-Court tomorrow morning.

These tickets, being released to freshman and sophomore students who are studying the play in English 2 and English 21, are being offered at half price ($1.00). The sale will be continued for a limited time only, and students are urged to purchase their tickets as early as possible.

Students have a choice of the following performances: March 10, 11, 12, 15 (2 performances), and 16. In the event that there is a large demand for these reserved seat tickets, an extra performance will be scheduled for March 17. The March 10 performance is the regular "Student Night" performance, with all seats on a general admission basis, but all other performances offer reserved seats.

"J.B." is being directed by Harry Davis, chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art, and the production will feature David Hooks, a prominent Broadway actor and UNC alumnus, in the title role. Other performers in leading parts are Foster Fitz-Simons, David Gullette, Martha Nell Hardy, Pat Tone, Harry Callahan and Mickey Blackwell.

Special Music Program Set For Hill Hall

A special "Festival Program of Music" will be presented by UNC music faculty and student soloists tonight at 8 in Hill Music Hall. Also appearing with selections by well-known American composers are the North Carolina String Quartet and the University Men's Glee Club.

This program, a tribute to the serious composers of 20th Century America, is a Tuesday Evening Series presentation sponsored by the UNC Music Department. Admission is free.

The program will present works of six contemporary American composers. They are Samual Barber's 1963 Pulitzer Prize winning First Piano Concerto, with William Robinson, soloist; five songs by Charles Ives sung by Wayne Zarr, tenor; Myron J. Roberts' organ composition "Homage to Perotin" performed by Martha Johnson, organist; and the Sonta for peter, and Carlene Watson, pianist.

North Carolina's most beloved and well-known composer, the late Lamar Stringfield, is represented by his String Quartet entitled "Moods of a Moonshiner," to be performed by the North Carolina String Quartet. This 1933 work is programmatic in depicting the "conflicting emotions and moods of the moonshiner at work, his nervousness over snooping Revenuers, and his glee after outwitting them."

The University Men's Glee Club and the Gleemen, Joel Carter, director, will unite with the Notrh Carolino String Quartet to perform Randall Thompson's "Testament to Freedom." This composition is a musical setting of four passages from the writings of Thomas Jefferson.

Court Fails To Docket Sit-In Cases

Persons appearing before this term of Orange County Superior Court in Hillsboro will be required to be present every day of court until their specific case is called, the DTH learned yesterday.

The absence of a specific timetable of cases was confirmed yesterday by the Chapel Hill Police Dept.

These factors place members of the Student body arraigned before the court in somewhat of a quandary.

The University has established attendance requirements which could not be met if, for example, a student of the University had to appear every day of the three-week session before his case was called.

If students choose not to appear, and their case is called, the law requires forfeiture of bond and a possible citation for contempt of court.

A total of 450 cases resulting from recent demonstration incidents here have been transferred from Chapel Hill Recorder's Court to Orange County for jury trial.

Calendared for grand jury action in the regular session are 60 cases involving charges of trespassing, resisting arrest, assault on a female, obstructing traffic, and blocking the sidewalk.

In addition to the 450 cases transferred, transfer is not yet completed on over 500 other sit-in cases.

Of the 450 cases already sent to Superior Court, 197 are charged with resisting arrest, 35 are charged with obstructing the sidewalk, 174 are charged with trespassing, 12 are charged with disorderly conduct, six are charged with assault and battery, 11 are charged with forcible trespass, five charged with obstructing traffic and ten are charged with assault on a female.

Art Fellowships To Be Offered

The UNC Department of Art will award two fellowships in art history at $2,000 each and one $1,000 travelling fellowship in art to departmental students, it was announced Thursday by Dr. Joseph C. Sloane, professor and chairman of the Department of Art.

The fellowships, to start in September, are made possible by a grant awarded to UNC by the Samuel H. Kress Foundation of New York City. The University was the only Southern institution to receive a grant of $10,000 per year for a period of five years from the Kress Foundation for the study of art history.

The Department of Art will use the remaining $5,000 of the grant for tools necessary in the teaching of art history.

NDEA: A Great Success

WASHINGTON (CPS)—One of the major pieces of education legislation left to come before Congress this year, the extension of the highly popular National Defense Education Act (NDEA), is expected to sail through the legislature with few obstructions.

Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) sponsor of this year's NDEA amendment, saw a "change in mood" on Capitol Hill in regard to the education crisis in the country. Congress is gaining "a greater awareness of the needs of the space age," she said, citing the three highly significant education bills passed last session.

The NDEA program, now in its sixth year, has proven successful on two counts: (1) giving direct aid to college students by grants and loans and (2) providing an incentive for students to enter the teaching profession. The current amendment attempts to extend both aspects of the program.

Francis Keppel, U.S. Commissioner of Education, testifying for the proposed amendment before the House Education Subcommittee earlier this month reported that results of a recent survey indicate that "youths from low income families, regardless of academic ability, have a much poorer chance of going to college than their classmates from upper income families."

Keppel termed it "shameful" that income is permitted to determine "who shall be educated and who shall not, and, hence, who shall rise to positions of leadership and personal fulfillment and who shall not."

The student loan provisions of the NDEA have allowed low-income students to complete their education, through university-administered loan funds. The proposed amendment would raise authorization for the loan funds to $135 million, and Keppel urged that the ceilings for the next year be raised to $150 million. During the past year, almost 600,000 students borrowed money under the loan provisions, and the rate of repayment well exceeded that required by law, according to Keppel.

What A Reasonable Man Would Think Fair

Defendants in sit-in cases scheduled for this term of Orange County Superior Court in Hillsboro have found themselves in somewhat of a bind due to the fact that no docket is being drawn up. This means that these people scheduled to appear have no idea when their case might be called during the three of four weeks the session could last. They will have to be in court every day until their case is called. If someone is absent when his case comes up he automatically forfeits his bond, and could possibly be cited for contempt of court.

It would seem that this puts an unnecessary hardship on the defendants, and especially on those students who have participated in the demonstrations, since they can't possibly be in court every day and still fulfill the University's attendance requirements. The same is true of the Lincoln High School students, and school officials have informed us that appearance at court is not an excusable absence.

For those people who have jobs and are supporting families, the burden is even harsher. They could lose up to three weeks pay.

But daily attendance at court is not the only unnecessary inconvenience involved in not docketing the cases. Transportation must be arranged to get these people to Hillsboro every morning and back every night. So far, 450 cases have been transferred from Chapel Hill Recorder's Court to Hillsboro, and 500 more are awaiting disposition.

Most of the demonstrators don't own cars, and getting to court and back is going to be a constant problem during the whole session if a docket is not drawn up.

Our court system was established by the people and for the people so that we might render our own justice in line with what we think is fair. It is true that state law does not provide that cases must be docketed, but in instances such as these it seems imminently fair they they should be. Forcing these people to appear in court daily until their case is called does not fall within the historic concept of what a reasonable man would think fair.

We only hope that Judge Raymond Mallard, who has the reputation of being quite strict but most fair, will move to remedy the situation.

A Bad Ball Game All Around

Saturday night's basketball game between the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the University of North Carolina at Raleigh was beyond a doubt the most disappointing display of poor temper handling, as well as poor ball handling, that we have witnessed this season.

We were naturally saddened to see our Tar Heels suffer through such a miserable performance with the ball, but the veritable brawl that transpired throughout most of the game made us more than a little embarassed to identify ourselves with either institution. Who's to blame is not really important, for both teams were probably equally guilty. What is important is that a game between two outstanding institutions of higher learning was reduced to a shoving, tripping, and name-calling match that would have discredited any two junior high school teams.

Saturday was CU Day in Raleigh, and representatives of the University's three branches met to consolidate plans for better future relations between the separate schools. If the basketball game was any indication, however, their efforts were in vain.

Heated rivalries are to be expected; hard-fought, well-contested games are acceptable; fights are juvenile. We may only hope that in the future, our visits to Raleigh may at least be marked with greater accord, if not with greater success.

On Making Students Safe For Ideas

Greensboro Daily News

Up at Champaign, Ill., a university classicist is under heavy fire because he attacked the late President Kennedy in a John Birch Society periodical.

The attack was scathing all right. Prof. Revilo P. Oliver charged that Kennedy was assassinated because he fell behind in a Communist timetable for turning the United States over to the Russians. He charged the late President with sponsoring "a fake invasion of Cuba designed to strengthen our mortal enemies there." He said Kennedy collaborated with Soviet Premier Khrushchev in a "phony embargo" to provide a cover for transfer of Soviet troops and weapons to Cuba to use against the United States. Kennedy's memory, he said, would be "cherished with distaste."

Professor Oliver's article has been highly complimented by Robert Welch, head of the John Birch Society, but it has raised a political storm on the University of Illinois campus. Fortunately the university has clear-headed leaders. Dr. Jack W. Peltason, dean of the college of liberal arts and sciences and acting provost of the university, said he considers the Oliver attack "in bad taste and offensive." But at the same time he upholds Oliver's right to his opinion. Howard W. Clement, president of the university's board of trustees, said he disagrees with Oliver "head-on" but added that the professor has "the right as a private citizen to express himself and is so guaranteed those rights by the statutes of the university." "Only a strong and free society could permit Professor Oliver his own freedom," said an editorial in the student newspaper.

Clark Kerr, president of the University of California, said the other day that "the university is not engaged in making ideas safe for students; it is engaged in making students safe for ideas."

Is it safe to have such ideas floating around the university campus at Champaign? Is it safe to have a professor sounding off so irresponsibly off campus?

Well, apparently the university is convinced that Professor Oliver is competent in his own field and "does not use his classroom to promote his own political views." It is willing to leave the marketplace of ideas "free for error"—on the assumption that the clash of truth and error is part of the process of making students "safe for ideas."

It's a thought North Carolina legislators might ponder.

Something To See

'Tom Jones' is a great movie.

It stimulates your mind, and the rest of you too.

From the red-faced, lechorous, gluttonous squire to the Ultimate Stereotype, the fair maiden and object of True Love, the characters are superb, and worthy of admiration, and in most cases imitation.

'Tom Jones' will continue for another week at the Rialto Theatre in Durham, to give those who have seen it once or twice, a second and third opportunity, and those too slothful and secluded to have seen it already, their first opportunity.

"Hey, Listen — For Just A Little Bit More We Can Get A Real One"

Professor Says Yes

Rights Bill: Legal?

By BILL STROUPE

The House of Representatives recently passed by a 290-130 vote an omnibus civil rights bill, which includes a Public Accommodations Act.

Since this Act could help settle racial unrest — or create hard feelings among opponents of the Act—the Senate will play a historic role in acting on the bill as a whole.

Before the bill reached the House, Dr. Earle Wallace of UNC's Political Science Department had this to say about the public accommodations provision:

"I think the critical question—the pragmatic question—is whether enough members of Congress feel that this law is desirable, rather than does Congress have the authority to pass it'"

However, debate over the Act has centered on the legal objections, since these arguments are more defensible than prejudices. The main legal issues are these:

First, can Congress base the Act on interstate commerce? And does the 14th amendment apply to the businesses that would be affected? Finally, are the powers that the Act grants the Attorney General constitutional?

Proponents of the Act answer a strong "YES" to all three questions.

Bill Is Legal

Dr. Wallace said, "Congress can regulate commerce for any purpose it wants to regulate it, and it can include these things in a civil rights bill such as this."

Proponents also cite court decisions that upheld broad interpretations of interstate commerce. The Supreme Court ruled in Wickard v. Filburn, for example, that Filburn had affected interstate commerce by growing his own wheat. The Courts said that he would have had to buy it somewhere else if he had not grown it, and this affected the price of wheat.

Dr. Wallace said, "The point has been raised that you would have to prove in each individual case that it is (interstate) commerce. Well, I don't think this is true. You can make general statutes, as Congress has in many cases, concerning what is interstate commerce."

He gave such examples as the minimum wage, the Child Labor Act and safety regulations in coal mines.

"All of these things are involved in commerce in places that are stationary. Yet Congress can regulate working conditions, safety devices and minimum wages — all of these things — because the product itself is to go into interstate commerce.

"So, you can never say that a person is never going to enter interstate commerce. You can base your whole argument on the fact that, as this law (bill) notes, the nation is becoming so mobile that any person at any time may be in interstate commerce."

14th Amendment

The problem with applying the 14th amendment is that it prohibits states from depriving citizens of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

Dr. Wallace said "Well, it is true that the 14th amendment says that no state shall deny any person life, liberty or property without due process of law. We're talking here about liberty — the liberty to take advantage of accommodations. And certainly no state may do it (deprive anyone of this liberty).

"But, at the same time, if the state allows its citizens to deprive a person (of accommodations) under its laws . . . the state is contributing to this discrimination."

At this point, the name of the Act's most noted critic came up, as it almost inevitably had to.

"(North Carolina Senator Sam) Ervin's biggest point has been that this deprives the person owning the business of the right to choose his own customers. It's an age-old right of private property.

"But then again, this bumps into the question of whether it really is private property. If it's a public business, licensed by the state, then it can be construed that it's a public business and not a private business.

"You can go on and say that the state regulates utilities, milk companies, ice companies, has regulated in many cases private businesses for the public good. Bus services, for example, the state regulates, the federal government could regulate."

Dr. Cleveland

Dr. Gordon Cleveland, also of the Poli. Sci. Department, restated the conflict of rights in a later interview:

"We have a clash between individual rights of the business man)." he said "and the interpretation of interstate commerce." He agreed with Dr. Wallace that licensing by the state makes the state liable for discrimination by business places.

To sum up the question of applying the 14th amendment, Dr. Wallace said, "The state cannot divest itself of certain responsibilities toward people living in the state."

The third general criticism of the Act arises over section 5, which provides that the Attorney General can prosecute cases and that successful plaintiffs will be reimbursed, but successful defendants will not.

Proponents point out that in U. S. v. Raines, the Supreme Court ruled that the Attorney General can prosecute violators of voting regulations under the Civil Rights Bill of 1957. They say this is clear precedent.

Dr. Cleveland asked rhetorically, "If it is a federal law, who else should prosecute cases?"

He went on to say, "I think Senator Ervin objects to this part of the bill because of the particular Attorney General in office. Senator Ervin thinks he (Mr. Kennedy) will stir up some cases."

Dr. Wallace thinks reimbursement of legal fees is provided for successful plaintiffs "because most Negroes don't have the money to bring a suit."

"And this has been one of the breakdowns of our judicial system: It's so expensive to bring a suit that those who are going to be deprived almost universally don't have the money to bring a suit, and especially not beyond the lowest courts.

"While it's true that if the defendant wins, he won't be reimbursed, it's likely to be the state."

Overall View

Dr. Wallace's overall view of the legality of the Act is the following:

"I think the question of whether it's constitutional or not is such that Congress itself cannot answer it. You can find as strong an argument that it is constitutional, perfectly constitutional, as you can that it is not.

"Actually, it's not the power and not the duty of Congress to determine whether a law is constitutional or not. This is a function of the courts, and especially this is true under our separation of powers."

He said he believed the Supreme Court will uphold the Act if it is passed. Dr. Cleveland agreed, putting it more strongly:

"If Congress passes the Public Accommodations Act, I'm sure the Supreme Court will bend over backwards to enforce it."

Micksup

By Mickey Blackwell

Compulsory class attendance is ridiculous.

Is it that the University of North Carolina, supposedly one of the most progressive schools in the South, puts a higher value on attendance than on actual learning?

Why is it that a student who cuts one too many classes in a particular course is dropped from the course with an F, even though he may have made excellent grades on every quiz?

At the same time a student who consistently turns in C-grade work, but meets every class, will pass the course and be given credit for it. Is this the way it should be?

There is, of course, a reason for compulsory class attendance. It is that most undergraduate students would not attend classes regularly enough to pass their courses. This implies that the average student is incapable of disciplining himself. And it implies that the average student has so little regard for education itself that he cannot discipline himself to do the necessary amount of work.

All of this reasoning is actually beside the point.

Most students do not come to Carolina because they want to increase their educational background or because they want a greater understanding of our cultural heritage. Most of them don't even come to Carolina with the idea of picking up a little knowledge that will help them make a living later.

They come because their parents want them to, because it's the proper thing to do, because they would rather go to school than to work, and because they want to enjoy the social pleasures of young men and women away from home.

Without the desire for an education, they put up with being educated only because they must.

Those in favor of leaving class attendance up to the individual argue that a man who doesn't want to put out the work to get an education shouldn't be in school anyway. They reason that students who wouldn't attend classes of their own accord don't get much out of the classes they are forced to attend.

And this reasoning is beside the point, too.

There is little doubt that students with a choice would skip so many classes and flunk so many courses at first that many would have to leave school.

But, and this is to the point, it wouldn't take students long to realize that it was necessary to pass courses to stay at Carolina and that it was necessary to attend classes to pass courses.

Students should be given credit for some practicality. Anyone interested in being at Carolina, for any reason, will do whatever is necessary to stay here. If the requirement is to learn a certain amount, all who should stay will stay.

Those who came to learn would learn. And those who came just to enjoy the collegiate pleasures would be forced to learn, rather than just attend, in order to stay.

And anyone who would not place a high enough value on either education or the pleasures afforded by Carolina to discipline himself to do what was necessary to stay here wouldn't get anything out of school under any circumstances. He would drop out of school under the present system.

As it is, students have no choice and thus no real opportunity to decide for themselves whether to go or not to go. They go by habit and force. The result is that many go all the way through school from force of habit.

Why try to cram education down the throats of those who don't want it enough to work for it?

Mark Twain

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In 1866, Mark Twain wrote a few choice words which might be applied to the legislative supporters of the infamous Speaker Ban Law today:

"I have seen a number of Legislatures, and there was a comfortable majority in each of them that knew just about enough to come in when it rained, and that was all. Few men of first class ability can afford to let their affairs go to ruin while they fool away their time in Legislatures for months on a stretch. Few such men care a straw for the small-beer distinctions one is able to achieve in such a place. But your chattering, one-horse village lawyer likes it, and your solemn ass from the cow-counties, who don't know the Constitution from the Lord's Prayer, enjoys it, and these you will always find in the Assembly; the one gabble, gabble, babbling threadbare platitudes and "give-me-liberty-or-give-me-death" buncombe from morning till night and the other asleep, with his slab soled brogans set up like a couple of grave-stones on the top of his desk."

It does seem that if the North Carolina legislators are incapable of doing anything constructive, they might at least refrain from plaguing this state with laws founded on the firm rock of IGNORANCE.

Faulty Logic

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I have been greatly interested by the recent events in the civil rights dispute here in Chapel Hill, and feel (partly because of your urging) that now, more than ever, it is necessary for each and every individual to examine his stand and make it known. We as citizens of Chapel Hill and as students residing here for a brief time must no longer allow this continued wave of apathy to exist.

What I find most disturbing in the recent proclamations and resolutions by Mike Lawler, the student legislature, and others is the feeling of "absoluteness" of their own words. All these groups and individuals (particularity Wesley Foundation's resolution in Saturday's Tar Heel) start from the same point that 1.) segregation is morally indefensible. This statement is completely true, and of this there can be no doubt!! But in moving from step one to step two the reasoning becomes faulty. Step 2.) states that if segregation is morally wrong then any businessman who supports segregation in any form is morally wrong and therefore 3.) we must show our dislike of this practice by economically boycotting any and all businesses who have this practice, and 4.) if we do not do this, then we are all somehow morally.

All this is just faulty logic. Somehow means and ends have become confused in the situation and what should be a means (economic boycotting) has become an end in itself. The problem essentially is that indeed many businesses (and perhaps all) should be shown by student force (i.e. boycotting) that we feel their policies are morally wrong. However, to make boycotting an end in itself, to make it an absolute, is perhaps a greater crime than the segregationists.

Obviously there is not just one way to treat all those businessmen. They are individuals and as individuals are different, and the same tactic will not, indeed cannot serve to reach our desired end. For some businessmen and for perhaps a good number of them, boycotting is the only way to reach them. Perhaps even for the community as a whole the only way to reach it is through street demonstrations. However, somehow Lawler, the student legislature, Wesley Foundation, and other groups and individuals have allowed themselves to be committed, at least temporally, to absolute widespread tactics.

Segregation is morally indefensible, and any man who practices it is morally wrong and we must show our dislike at this process, but economic boycotting is not the only means available. For some reason all the groups involved have seemed, at least publically, to have lost the essential end for which they are striving, i.e. INTEGRATION! All those groups who support those widespread absolutes regardless of who is involved are not after integration but are merely after dis-segregation and in following this approach they are making the gap between the people in the community who must live with this problem after they have long left wider and wider. Segregation must fail and will fail but with the present "absolute" tactics, integration will be far, far behind.

NROTC Flys High In Fla.

By DICK ROTH

As cold weather continues to blanket Chapel Hill, 40 lucky NROTC midshipmen will be taking part in an annual indoctrination program in the Sunshine State.

The midshipmen, accompanied by two supervising officers and two civilians, will fly to Pensacola Naval Air Base early this morning and return Wednesday.

Senior officer in charge, Lt. Cmdr. Hille, said "the annual program is designed as a means of increasing students knowledge of the Navy and stirring in interest in naval aviation."

At Pensacola, the "middies" will get some flying time, possibly in some of the latest jet trainers. They also will be given an introduction to bailout procedures.

In addition to a general tour of the base, they will listen to several programmed lectures, one of which will be held aboard the aircraft carrier Lexington.

One of the highlights of the trip will be special familiarization training in the Navy's T-34. Each midshipman will get the opportunity to fly and individually learn the fundamentals of the training plane from the accompanying naval instructor.

Joining the midshipmen on the trip will be Lt. Cmdr. Hille, Lt. (j.g.) Whalen, Dr. George Galasso and the Director of the Morehead Planetarium, Anthony F. Jenzano.

Great Profile in candid sequences in Mexico.

Sure to shock even the current generation is "Bed and Sofa," scheduled April 6, which is a landmark of the Soviet cinema. This farcical feature has never been shown in the U. S. until recent censorship problems were resolved to make way for "naughty" films such as this one.

The plot concerns a husband and wife who take in a "friend" and boarder in a tiny room the tense three share during the Russian housing shortage of the 1920's. The inevitable happens sure enough. Not knowing which of the two men is the father of her child, the wife goes to have an abortion, but in the end she changes her mind. She will have the child and her independence. She leaves both men without a woman to "wash and cook for them."

Also to be seen April 6 is the strange but graphic short named "Skyscraper" which is a case-history of the construction of New York's 36-story Tishman building at 666 Fifth Avenue.

Attractions of the Film Society after April 20 will be described later in the DAILY TAR HEEL.

Campus Tunes In Sonny-Cassius Tonight At 10

Sonny In 5

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

WHEN CASSIUS CLAY goes to the canvas tonight, he will take the mandatory eight-count. He'll also take two more, and the fight will be over. Clay will be stone—stone cold.

Nothing could be more self-satisfying than to predict Clay to win tonight (better yet—bet on him), and have him do just that. But in all honesty, it just can't be done. Sonny Liston is not unbeatable, but neither is Clay the man to beat him.

Tonight's fight is a curious one. Everybody knows who is going to win, yet interest in the bout is sky high. If you don't believe it, just take a stroll around the dorms and fraternity houses tonight about ten o'clock.

Clay may not win the boxing battle (in fact, he won't), but he has won the battle of the pocketbook. And after all, with a guy like Liston around, what else can a poor heavyweight do?

The Louisville Lip, the Louisville Slugger, Gaseous Cassius, or whatever you want to call him, has talked a good fight. You and I and everybody else realize what Clay has been up to, and, whether we'll admit it or not, we've become more interested in this fight because of Clay—not because of Liston.

If the champion were fighting Fred Jones tonight, interest in a heavyweight championship would probably be at an all time low. Fred's the guy who has climbed up the ladder slowly, losing a few bouts but winning most. He finally gets his long-shot at the title and he takes it. He goes off and trains diligently, says he's in good shape, provides the public with nothing to talk about, loses in the first round, takes his small purse and disappears forever.

Clay has not done this, and even though most of us can see right through his brashness, we still will eagerly turn our attention to Miami Beach tonight at ten.

This fellow named Cassius Clay has the potential to be a real good heavyweight. But he is too inexperienced for his opponent this evening. If he should win (no, I'm not weakening), Cassius will be the luckiest guy in the world. Don't bet on this happening, and at the same time, don't bet on Sonny Boy giving Cassius the same treatment he gave Patterson. Clay is just ham enough to bluff his way through a few rounds—before Liston floors him in the fifth.

And Ev Case Is Still Laughing

THE BALL OF YARN which is the North Carolina basketball team came completely unravelled last Saturday night in Raleigh. And regardless of what happened in Charlottesville last night, it will take nothing short of a win over Duke to get the thing wound back up again.

The days of glory may be over for Everett Case, but don't believe for one moment that the man who put this state on the basketball map still doesn't have his moments of fun. Old Ev has a knack of making the opposing team play his kind of game, and he must have really been chuckling to himself Saturday night as the Tar Heels wandered hopelessly about the court of Reynolds Coliseum—looking more like NC State than NC State could ever look.

At halftime they gave Ev an award for his meritorious service (he's been coaching at State since Billy Cunningham's second birthday), and the 63-year-old pro accepted it graciously. He then hobbled back to the bench and waited for an even better award.

There he sat,—dressed in an olive suit, a towel wrapped around his neck to keep the chill off. There he sat—just watching that yarn unravel.

He wasn't disappointed. Cunningham shot 6-for-21. Bryan McSweeney was one for seven, and the Tar Heels as a whole managed 29.5 per cent from the floor. Many times the ball just refused to go in. Many other times it was just a case of poor shooting. The State defense did a beautiful job of collapsing on Cunningham, keeping him away from the ball and, in general, causing great frustration for the whole UNC team.

The Kid felt things were getting a little rough. He told the ref how he felt and the ref (Jack Vest) called a technical. This fit well into State's plans. The Tar Heels were so angry from here on that they couldn't see straight. Cunningham was given another technical, this time for giving his chief tormentor, Pete Auksel, a gentle shove. Dean Smith kept hopping off the bench—protesting to no avail. McSweeney also was inflamed at the way things were being handled and, admittedly, the game was completely out of hand at various points.

For North Carolina, the whole season now seems completely out of hand. Going into last night's skirmish with the Virginians, the Tar Heels had been felled in four of their last five games. The record stood at 11-9, and six of these losses had come in the ACC. Clemson, Duke, State, Maryland, Wake—all have beaten what many thought would be the team to challenge Duke for the conference title.

There is one chance left for redemption—excluding the ACC tournament which really shouldn't be held in the first place. Duke comes here this Saturday. Need more be said?

Finley's 4-Year Offer Accepted

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI)—City officials accepted owner Charles O. Finley's offer to sign a four-year lease on Municipal Stadium Monday, signaling an apparent end to the crisis over his Kansas City Athletics.

Mayor Ilus W. Davis notified Finley of the acceptance and invited him to return to Kansas City as soon as possible to complete negotiations on the lease, the same lease Finley had sworn repeatedly he would never sign.

After advising him of the decision in a four-line telegram, Davis and the City Council settled back to await word on when the owner will arrive. Herbert Hoffman, city counselor, drew up the formal draft of the lease.

Finley, who had told the city on several occasions it would take a two-year lease or nothing, notified Davis from his home in La Porte, Ind., Sunday night that he was accepting the four-year proposal the city made last Jan. 25.

Champion Favored 7-1 To Quiet Lip

By JACK CUDDY
UPI Sports Writer

MIAMI BEACH Fla. (UPI) — Cassius Clay, rapidly approaching the zero hour when he'll have to use his fists instead of his mouth, kept right on bragging Monday but Sonny Liston remained a 7-1 favorite to win their $5 million heavyweight championship bout tonight.

The gabby challenger made his latest, perhaps final. forecast when he paid an unscheduled visit Monday to the ring in the Miami Beach Convention Hall where he and Liston will tangle for Liston's title.

"I want to get in there and mark an "X" o nthe canvas, where that big ugly bear of a Liston is goin' to fall tomorrow night in the eighth round," proclaimed boxing's "Louisville Lip."

But, perhaps symbolically, Clay was thwarted in this desire by the fact that the ring was cluttered with lights and other paraphenalia and he was unable to climb into the squared circle.

The confidence in his voice did not reflect the betting odds that made 30-year-old champion Liston the 7-1 favorite to make his second successful defense of the crown he won from Floyd Patterson in 1962 on a first-round knockout and defended on a similar opening session kayo against Patterson last July 22.

Ticket Sale Slow

The slow ticket sale here indicated the gate would be about $500,000 instead of the $1 million that co-promoters Bill MocDonald and Chris Dundee had aimed at.

Accordingly MacDonald, millionaire backer of the "live" show, was expected to lose about $300,000. He had "bought" the live show for $625,000 and spent about $200,000 for promotion and other costs.

However, Bob Nilon, Chester Pa., executive vice president of Intercontinental Promotions Inc —the over-all promotion outfit—said Monday the fight will be a huge financial success.

"The closed-circuit television of the fight throughout the United States will be a tremendous success, I learn," Nilon said. "Of the 1,103,451 seats available at 271 locations, I estimate that about 900,000 will be sold for about $4,500,000."

Nilon said that sum plus the probable $500,000 gate in Miami Beach would boost the total take beyond the $5—million mark—by far the richest one-shot attraction of any kind ever staged.

Both fighters took walks Monday but otherwise rested in order to store up energy for their scheduled 15-round fight, for which they will weigh-in at 10:30 a.m. EST Tuesday in Convention Hall.

Knockout Expected

That the fight will not last its programmed distance and that challenger Clay will be belted out was indicated overwhelmingly by a United Press International poll of 58 sports writers from the United States and other countries. Fifty-five picked Liston, all by a knockout. Only three favored "Gaseous Cassius," and only one of them said he would win on a knockout.

Liston is favored at even money to knock out the challenger within five rounds and at 8-5 to finish him within 10.

Clay, Olympic light heavyweight champion in 1960, has won 15 by knockouts. He is an inch and one-half taller than the six-foot one champ and is expected to weigh about the same—215 pounds. But he is given little chance because of his amateurish style, his comparatively light punch and his lesser ruggedness.

Liston seeks his 29th straight victory, his fifth straight knockout, and his fourth consecutive kayo in the first round. He lost but one of his 36 fights, on a decision to Marty Marshall, who broke Liston's jaw. In two later bouts, Sonny kayoed Marshall in 6 and outpointed him.

Cooper Wins

MANCHESTER Eng. (UPI) — British and empire heavyweight champ Henry Cooper beat off an early onslaught by bulldog challenger Brian London Monday night to score an overwhelming 15-round verdict in defense of his title and to pick up the vacant European crown as well.

London, scaling 209 pounds to Cooper's 188 pounds and 13 ounces, wound up with his face a bloody mess after taking a boxing lesson as well as a head hammering which left him reeling.

Sonny In 1

CURRY KIRKPATRICK Sports Courier

THE FIRST TIME you look at Sonny Liston, you only hope it doesn't bite. I never thought I'd see anything like it when I was awake. And if I was asleep, I'd wake up screaming.

Tonight, they expect over fifteen thousand to be screaming at the Convention Center in Miami Beach. But it won't be for anybody to win. They're there to see Sonny and Cassius knock each other out. They'll be disappointed. The Champion will win inside of three. Seconds, not rounds.

If I were Cassius, I'd make sure Liston had eaten before he went into the ring. If Sonny gets hungry in the middle of the fight, he may not even throw the bones away.

This is the guy that pounded Floyd Patterson so far into the canvas, they needed a flashlight to find him. Floyd would have had a chance if he could have come in the ring without his chin.

Cassius is up for the same fate. When you get in against Liston, it's not a fight, it's an execution.

Floyd saw the guy twice, but all he recognizes now is Sonny's shoelaces. He asked for a rematch after the first fraud, but he might as well have had them send the money—and the knockout—in the mail. He's the kind of guy who has to be careful walking through a snowstorm. He may be the first in history to be TKOd by flakes.

Patterson started on the way back a while ago by beating some Italian in Sweden. You think that's a funny circumstance? You should have seen the Italian. He threw a right cross like Dean Martin throws down a bourbon.

Floyd said afterward he still felt nothing toward Liston except sorry for him. What he meant was he felt nothing after Sonny hit him except sorry he ever got in the ring with him.

Some guys have told me even they could stay in the ring with the Champ longer than Floyd. I'd like to bet them on it. I wouldn't get in a ring two miles wide with the guy. Unless you gave me a machete. Or a gun. And six bullets. It would take that many to get Sonny down on one knee.

This guy would be an 8-5 favorite over the Marines. He could have played stunt man for King Kong. The guy's fists are so big his boxing gloves look like saddles. If you saw his footprint in the snow of the Himalayas, four expeditions would be launched to capture him. He may be slow, but so is a freight train.

Sonny is the best argument I know for schooling. They tell me Gene Tunney used to read Shakespeare. Liston has a tough time reading a "No Smoking" sign.

Sonny Side Up With The Law

SONNY HAS BEEN on the wrong side of the law a couple of times—the top side, looking down. He slugged a policeman in St. Louis once, and six cops started to jump him. But the chief intervened. He got an even dozen to do the job. Still, Sonny held his own. He's beaten more cops than Perry Mason.

Some are disturbed about the guy's attitude and his surliness. What they don't understand is that Sonny has a hard time adjusting to humans. I'll admit his sense of humor is a little hard to describe. But so was Attila the Hun's.

Don't look for a long fight. One guy parked his car in a twenty minute zone to watch the second Liston-Patterson fiasco. I wouldn't even turn off the ignition for this one.

The betting here is not whether Clay will win or lose but whether he will show up. I think Sonny could knock him out even if he doesn't. The man has such a remarkably long reach he could jab Clay from the second row of ringside. He may score a few points from his stool.

If you're batted out of the ring, they give you 20 seconds to get back. From the look of Liston's hands, Cassius may need a cab to get back. If Sonny knocked me out of the ring, I would be inclined to let it go at that and—go—take in a show.

Cassius should certainly have a doctor on hand. But he'll more likely need a Priest. And a basket. He says he'll end it in eight. Who's he kidding? The only way Clay can survive the eighth round is by hiding under the ring until the ninth.

Cassius may not last through the National Anthem. I bet one guy Liston knocks him out in two fifty-seven of the introduction.

Sonny has only one fear—that Cassius might get hit by a streetcar before the fight. In fact, that might do less damage.

Liston did get beat once. His jaw was broken by a fighter named Marty Marshall one night because he was laughing at Marshall.

He won't be laughing tonight. I don't know if they have a return-bout clause. But it should be on the provision that Clay lives.

If Cassius loses and refuses to fight again, Liston may be the first Champion in history to defend his title against an armed man—or a herd of rhinoceroses.

Wrestlers Set Back At Maryland

By PETE GAMMONS

The powerful Maryland wrestlers, who last year won the ACC championships in eight of nine events, Saturday proved their strength again by crushing the Tar Heel Grapplers, 22-8.

The only consolations from the evening were saved by Paul Wellstone and Russ Simmons. Wellstone (123) continued his unbeaten streak by winning via a decision. He has now won ten consecutive matches, and owns the only unblemished record on the team. Simmons (137), who has been rapidly improving throughout the season, scored on an impressive pin.

These were, however, the only bright spots in what otherwise was a dismal night. Most disappointing was the loss of Captain Jerry Cabe (heavyweight), who suffered his first defeat of the season. Also disappointing was the loss by Steve Lister (177), who had been coming on strong of late. Kenny Furr (130) and Roy Haggerty (147) were similarly losers by points. Losing by pins were Dick Blackmon (157) and Elliott Dworing (167).

The defeat was definitely a setback in Coach Sam Barnes' drive towards the ACC Championships March 6 and 7 at College Park. However, more pressing, is the all important match against powerfull State here Saturday night. For certain individuals, the upcoming matches and championships could prove quite interesting. Wellstone has an excellent chance to win the ACC Championship in the 123 class, and move on towards the NCAA meet March 16-18 at Ithaca, N.Y. Cabe and Lister also have reasonable chances to at least place well.

The State meet is the last regular season meet before the conference championships at Maryland, Barnes hopes to even up the season record in that match, the Maryland loss dropping UNC's record to 5-6.

23 Games On Baseball Sked

Coach Walter Rabb has announced a 26-game schedule for his Tar Heel baseball team. The schedule includes 13 games at Emerson Field.

The season will open March 23 when the Tar Heels will host Connecticut in a 3 o'clock game. The Heels will play the Uconns again the next day, then will leave for Florida to spend spring vacation. They will play four games in Tallahassee before returning to Chapel Hill on April 2 for a game with Yale.

The Tar Heels, who finished second in the ACC last season, will begin their fight for the conference championship on April 10th when they play host to N.C. State's Wolfpack.

The team is in its second week of practice and Rabb is very optimistic about the team's chances in the ACC race.

League Swim Finals Here Thurs.-Sat.

The ACC Swimming Championships will be held here for three days this week, beginning Thursday afternoon at one o'clock.

Bowman Gray Indoor Pool will be the scene of action as UNC's Blue Dolphins seek to win outright the conference crown which they shared with Maryland and N.C. State last year. Coach Pat Earey's swimmers seemingly have the strength to do it, having a perfect 7-0 record in league dual meet competition this winter.

Thursday's opening day slate will include time trials in the 500-free, 400-individual medley, 50-free, 400 medley relay and low dive at one o'clock. Finals in these events will be at eight that night.

Boycott Is Bi-Partisan

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Leaders of both campus political parties signed a statement yesterday concerning the civil rights situation in Chapel Hill.

The statement, initiated by Student Party Chairman Paul Dickson and Student Body Vice President Bob Spearman, was sent to the Editors of the DTH.

The statement reads:

"We the undersigned members of Carolina's oldest and leading political parties feel that it is our responsibility to take a stand on the present civil rights situation in Chapel Hill.

"The racial situation in Chapel Hill is of such pressing importance that we feel it imperative that students take meaningful and effective action.

"We feel that the recent form of civil disobedience in Chapel Hill is not rational, it is not effective and it has served to increase high tensions in the entire community.

"In the past, Student Government has been active in securing equal opportunities for all students by promoting the integration of Kenan Stadium and urging the integration of the downtown theaters.

"We recognize that at the present time business establishments have the legal right to choose their clientele. So may the students legally choose to patronize the businesses whose policies they wish to support.

"We feel the situation is akin to that of a manufacturer who exploits child labor in the absence of regulatory legislation. It is his legal right to do so; however, it is our right and responsibility not to support those businesses of which we disapprove.

"We note that the majority of the businesses in Chapel Hill

Social Room Project Goes To Joyner

Carson Announces Choice At Meeting

Joyner Residence Hall has been selected as the site for Student Government's social room "pilot project."

Don Carson, co-chairman of the Residence Hall Improvement Committee, made the announcement at a meeting of the residence hall last night.

The project will cost about $3,000, and will include wall-to-wall carpeting, new furniture and new lamps. It will be completed by April 15.

The project will cost about $3,000, and will include wall-to-wall carpeting, new furniture and new lamps. It will be completed by April 15.

The project was originally scheduled for a hall in the upper or lower quad, but this would have involved preempting a three-man room. The anticipated overcrowding next year made this impossible at the present time.

In making the announcement, Carson cited the cooperation of the administration, especially Chancellor William B. Aycock and Business Manager J. A. Branch.

"It should be emphasized," Carson said, "that this project is by no means a philanthropy in behalf of Joyner. The residents will have the tremendous responsibility of properly using and caring for the room, and ilts condition depends upon whether or not the Adminuistration will be willing to use funds for other residence halls in the future."

Friday will be the first day for sign-up.

Quarterly Owes

The Carolina Quarterly will not receive a subsidy next year from Student Government's budget unless more interest is shown in the publication, budget committee chairman Dick Akers said yesterday.

The Quarterly showed a loss of $205 last year after it was allotted $1755 in the budget.

This year it received $1905, but Akers reported the magazine expects to double its losses.

"The Quarterly is behind schedule in publication and down in its number of advertisements," Akers said.

He attributed the difficulty to "a general lack of interest on campus and among the Quarterly staff.

"We hope by taking away the money, interest in the magazine will revive," he said. "If a revival of interest occurs, then Student Legislature can allot them more money; they have from now until May to do so."

Leap Year Dance Is This Weekend

By HUGH STEVENS

The old Sadie Hawkins custom of "girl gets boy" will be in effect this week on the Carolina campus—sort of.

The Inter-Class Council will sponsor a Leap Year Dance Friday night following the freshman basketball game, and it's permissible (though not mandatory) for the girls to ask the boys.

The Fabulous Five will play for the dance, which will be held in the Women's Gym from 8:30 to 12:30. Admission will be $1 per couple.

"We thought the girls should have an opportunity to get their dates for a change," a spokesman for the council said. "Besides, why not let them bear the expense for once?"

The spokesman, a male, wished to remain anonymous. He did say, however, that it was still perfectly permissible for boys to get dates "if they think the girls aren't going to ask them."

The sponsoring organization, the Inter-Class Council, is composed of certain officers of the four classes. Its main functions are to co-ordinate class activities to prevent conflicts and to assume responsibility for projects too large for the individual classes.

Woody Harrison, who is currently heading the organization, said this week's dance is designed to lead to greater cooperation between the classes in the future.

"We are also working on several other projects, including a Faculty-Student gathering with discussion topics, an information service concerning the various departments of the University, and an Inter-Class calendar of events," Harrison said.

He also announced that the four classes would share the expense of Friday's dance, and that each class had assumed the responsibility of certain elements of the project.

"We feel that this dance will do a lot to promote better class relations," Harrison concluded. "So far they have divided the responsibilities well, and we feel certain that the dance will be a good one, especially with a combo like the Febulous Five."

SSL DELEGATION

Dates of the session are tomorrow through Saturday in Raleigh. Everyone who plans to attend is required to come to the meeting.

Capias Is Issued For Dunne, Profs

John Dunne, chairman of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, and five Duke University professors were arrested yesterday when they failed to appear in Orange County Superior Court. However, the charges were later dropped by Judge C. W. Hall when the six paid $4, the cost of issuing the capias.

Hall also issued a capias for 15 other persons who failed to appear in court. The Orange County Sheriff's Department has not been able to locate the 15.

The arrests and subsequent releases came on the heels of complaints from local civil rights leaders who say the court cases have not been individually docketed.

Rights leaders say that many students are missing valuable classroom time because they have to be in court whether or not their cases are scheduled.

Pat Cusick, member of the local Freedom Committee, said an attempt would be made to have presiding Judge Raymond Mallard draw up a specific calendar showing when each of the cases is scheduled.

Cusick said that some of the students may flunk out of school if they miss many classes. However, if they don't show up for court, they risk forfeit of bond and possible contempt of court charges.

Stop!

Bar the doors!

That's exactly what the UNC administration may have to do soon, as the applications for admission to these hallowed halls are flooding into South Building at a record rate.

"We just don't have enough dormitory space," President William Friday said Monday. "And the problem is going to get worse.

"Many qualified students are not going to be admitted."

As of this weekend, some 10,500 applications had been filed, and the Office of Admissions expected another six thousand. Only 4,000 places are available.

The University of North Carolina at Greensboro (UNC-G) is experiencing similar difficulties, with applications running well above 20 per cent higher than last year.

The Raleigh branch (UNC-R) figure is 18 per cent above last year's total.

The UNC president made it clear that North Carolina students would have a "clear priority" over those from out of state as in the past. "We intend to continue this policy of admitting North Carolina residents," he said, "but it will be contingent on expansion of facilities and aditional personnel commensurate with growth."

He also made it clear, however, that all applicants could not be accepted.

"It is clear that the university will not be able to accept all applicants," he said, "including some who stand above minimum requirements for admission based on class standing and college board scores. We do not have the necessary class rooms, dormitory or laboratory space to accommodate all applicants. We fear this problem will worsen in the next several years."

Friday pointed out "the urgent need to get on with the job of establishing more comprehensive community colleges in our cities and counties." He also cited the need for expansion to four-year institutions the colleges at Asheville, Charlotte and Wilmington, along with the encouragement of the growth and expansion of church-related and private institutions.

New Veeps Announced By Trustees

Weaver And King Get Top Posts

RALEIGH (UPI)—Changes in administrative positions and praise for a trustee were among action taken Monday by trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

Roy Rowe, recently elected president of the Association of Governing Boards, a national organization of colleges and universities, was praised in a resolution passed by the trustees.

Fred Weaver was approved as vice president of administration and Dr. Arnold K. King as vice president for institutional studies at the request of UNC President William C. Friday.

Weaver and King officially take over their new positions on March 1.

In other action, the trustees changed the position of vice president of graduate studies and research to vice president for academic affairs.

The trustees went into executive session to select this year's winner of the O. Max Gardner Award, presented annually to the UNC faculty member who has done the most for humanity.

Bond Appointed Handbook Editor For Coming Year

Van Lear, Lancaster Also Gain Posts

Carolyn Bond, a senior from Lumberton, is the newly appointed editor of the Carolina Handbook.

A Junior transfer from Peace College where she was editor of the college newspaper, a member of Theta Kappa Junior College Honorary Society and Outstanding Senior, she has been active at Carolina as a member of the State Affairs Committee, an officer in the Student National Education Association and as an orientation Counselor.

The Publications Board announced its selection after interviews were held last Friday.

Carolyn Bond

Other appointments went to Murray Van Lear, a junior from Roanoke, Va., who will be business manager for the Handbook; and to Martin Lancaster, a third year pre-law student from Goldsboro, who will be lay-out editor.

The Carolina Handbook is the freshman orientation guide which is edited in the spring and sent to all incoming students in the summer.

Interviews for positions on the staff will be held in the Publications Office on the second floor of Graham Memorial Thursday and Friday from 4-5 p.m. Positions will be open for section editors, copy writers, ad salesmen, lay-out assistants, and photographers. All interested students are encouraged to come.

Bernard Off To Africa

University of North Carolina's Director of Admissions left yesterday for Africa.

Charles Bernard will interview Africa students who are candidates for scholarships to United States universities under the African scholarship program of American universities.

Bernard is one of 10 U. S. educational administrators serving as members of committees screening candidates for the scholarship awards this year. He will interview students in Tanganyika, Zanzibar, Swaziland, Bechuananland and Basuto.

Lincoln High Won't Admit 2 Walkouts

The Chapel Hill School Board refused to readmit two Negro students expelled from Lincoln High School folowing a walkout. The students were protesting racial discrimination within the school system.

The board left any further decision on readmission of these students to Dr. Howard E. Thompson, superintendent of Chapel Hill schools. The decision came after Thompson told the Board, "If the boys are admitted through a motion by the Board, I will resign."

Thompson, in a statement to the DTH said that the decision was outside the jurisdiction of the Board. "I feel," Thompson said, "the decision is not in the area with which the Board is concerned.

"It is clearly an administrative matter. That is what they hried me for when they hired a superintendent."

Dr. Thompson said the other participants in the boycott are being allowed to return to school and to make up the work they have missed. Dr. Thompson said these students had not been expelled as had the other two.

Butner Hospital Benefits From Campus Chest Dollars

One thousand six hundred mentally retarded patients at the Murdoch Center in Butner will be aided by Campus Chest funds.

This institute is one of four such state supported centers in North Carolina and the cost of running these centers is about $1800 per patient each year. The most any parents pay for this care is $60 a month, and most parents do not pay anything.

Donations received from organizations such as Campus Chest are used to buy chemicals, supplies, and small equipment for the laboratories. In the last year researchers at Murdoch have discovered another of the causes of mental illness, but have not yet found its cure.

One of the causes of mental illness for which a cure is known is phenylketenuria. Testing a baby for this in the first few weeks of his life costs less than 50c and a special diet can prevent mental illness from this cause. Caring for patients in whom the disease was not discovered early enough costs the state an average of $150,000 per patient.

The "children" at Murdoch are six years old and up. They live at the Center, although some of them go home for weekends or vacations.

Many of the patients have I.Q.'s between 60 and 70. Each year from six to 12 of this group are able to leave the center and find work. One now works as a beautician's assistant, another helps on the staff at Murdoch and many are employed as farm hands.

Many of the children are physically, as well as mentally, handicapped. When Miss Ann Cleary, a physical therapist, first came to Murdoch over two years ago, many of her patients were literally on the floor. Today most of these children can walk or use a wheel chair, or both.

These children learn to paint, to sew, and to spell. They know where to find their blocks, books, and musical instruments. They are taught "to become masters of their own environment."

Who Should Offer Aid To Students?

Every now and then a situation comes about that could provide the University Administration and Student Government with an area of mutual agreement and concerted action. One of these situations is upon us at the moment, but as yet neither side seems to have moved.

The problem involves the trial in Orange County Superior Court of those students involved in sit-ins and other civil disobedience. Many of these cases are scheduled for the first Special Term of the Superior Court which begins Monday morning in Hillsboro. The cases will not be docketed by days and the court calendar says, "The following cases will be presented to the Grand Jury on Monday, March 2nd, and may be called for trial at any time during the three weeks of the term. The cases will not necessarily be called in numerical order."

There are 432 charges to be heard involving 131 people in this particular session, and not docketing them means the defendants must appear in court all day every day until their case is called. If they are not present when the case is called they automatically forfeit their bond and can be cited for contempt of court. Of the 131, approximately 31 are UNC students. If they are forced to appear in court every day, many will find it necessary to drop out of school.

Chancellor Aycock said the Administration is taking no hand in the situation, and that the problem of absences should be resolved between the student and his professors. It would seem that the University, using the 'in loco parentis' authority it claims when it fits its purpose, could make some effort to get the cases of students scheduled so they would only to have to miss a minimum amount of time from their classes. We are well aware that the University is loathe to take any action after a student's case reaches Superior Court, but the circumstances would seem to warrant it in this particular situation. Not only is it unusual that so many students are being tried in one session, but it is also unusual, but legal, procedure for a docket not to be drawn.

Student Government could also find an excellent chance for some really significant action in this situation. Student Government is constantly trying to widen the scope of its authority, but if it can't at least initiate some action in trying to aid students in this predicament it might prove itself capable of handling only routine administrative chores, and completely ineffectual when something important is at stake.

We would urge both administrative and student government officials to get together with their counterparts at Duke and North Carolina College, both of which have students in the same situation, and see if some arrangements can't be made with the court so that no student is forced to leave school because of prolonged compulsory court attendance.

Morgan: Public Ignorance

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC News
(Mr. Morgan may be heard daily at 7 p.m. on WRAL radio.)

What, after all, do we Americans know? I am becoming increasingly disturbed about our grasp, or rather our lack of grasp of what's happening in the world. And there seem to be more and more things cropping up all the time which are necessary for us to hold onto long enough to squeeze from them at least a passing understanding. Not only the most vital matters, like the Frank Sinatra, Jr., kidnapping trial and the issue of whom are the Beatles bugging now?, but such less alluring items as peace in the Mediterranean, disarmament, birth control, civil rights and our form of government, which the Supreme Court is determined to make more turly representative, even if nobody else is interested.

We are faced, it appears, with a growing dilemma. Instant communication, more or less, to virtually all parts of the planet is confronting us with an increasing volume of datelines and data from strange places, but the bigger the stream of information about everything the less we seem to know about anything. Here the dilemma mockingly tosses us on its horns: for the more spare time our still rising standard of living gives us to pause and reflect thoughtfully about the world and its problems, the less inclined we seem to be to put this leisure to good use. If the American body politic betrays a shattering immaturity in its reaction to the facts of life today when our work schedule is roughly a forty-hour week, what a craven clan of nincompoops we promise to be when we get the thirty-two-hour week some experts predict is only a generation away, or less!

Indubitably, we minions of the mass media must assume a large part of the responsibility for our predicament. We do not purvey information, we merchandise it. We do not provoke intelligent controversy, an exercise so vital to the health of an open society, we mesmerize, we sensationalize, we scandalize and we temporize. Given a cataclysm, we can rouse ourselves to serious dedication, as the broadcasting industry did on the nation's black weekend last November. But, as the New York Herald-Tribune's television critic, John Horn, has so aptly pointed out, in order to rise to such heights of journalistic excellence and public responsibility, broadcasting had to reject almost completely its daily code of operational ethics with its endless commercials and idiotic entertainment, to which it has now cozily returned. As for the newspapers, it isn't as if they didnt' carry more than a whisper of meaningful information, it's that what informative dispatches they do publish are so thoroughly buried under the groaning poundage of supermarket, real estate and used car ads that the reader is virtually exhausted turning the pages before he can find what he is looking for—if he is looking.

Which brings up the startling question, are newspapers already dead, information-wise, and don't know it? After I, along with many others, mourned the demise of the western edition of the New York Times last month, I received communication from a high school history teacher near Los Angeles who said that while he was sad to see the edition die, he had become indifferent to newspapers. Smothered with more ads than news, he argued, they have become dull. He relies for his "instant information" on radio and television, backs it up with weekly magazines and his own general knowledge. He drives 30 miles roundtrip every day from home to classroom—many westerners drive even further to work—and, he wrote, "I don't need to spend my eyesight on a newspaper. I have too many books I haven't read and too many papers I haven't graded to be bothered with a newspaper . . ."

There is merit to his criticism, though I would hate to think of the country without newspapers, bad and stuffy and superficial as too many of them can be. Another listener, who happens to be a teacher, too, a professor of English at Los Angeles State College, had, I think, a more penetrating reaction—that our basic fault lies in education. Our schools are failing to produce the kind of readers who would demand and support superior newspapers. Author of a textbook himself, he said his editor had informed him that "there seems to be a growing disposition among the school officials who buy textbooks to lump together analysis of the mass media with those really extraneous items which crept into the English curriculum during the past two decades and to dismiss them all as " 'frills.' . . . I do not think," he added, "we will produce an audience for the New York Times if we must confine our treatment of the press in high schools to an excerpt from Addison and Steele's 'Spectator Papers' tucked away in a literature anthology."

The most shattering commentary of all on our intellectual grasp came from a longtime friend of mine from Pasadena, who also happens to be in the teaching profession. "The Greeks and the Romans didn't make it with their civilizations," he said, "and after two thousand years I don't think we are any smarter than they were." More knowledgeable yes, in science, in medicine, in some of the mysteries of the mind, but more intelligent? No. I wonder if this persistent ignorance is really necessary.

'All Of Life's Many Wines'

By BOB O'STEEN

"The Best of H. E. Bates." Boston: Atlantic-Little, Brown. 454 pages. $5.75.

That H. E. Bates is surely one of the best short story writers of the day is well illustrated in "The Best of H. E. Bates," a volume which includes one story from each of his 35 years of writing.

Graham Green has said that Bates' stories can be set against Chekhov's with the Englishman's best being found equal to the best of the Russian's. This comparison is a natural one to make, as Bates writes in the Chekhovian genre, taking the ordinary but revealing moments from life and reflecting in them the truth of an entire lifetime, its meaning being made irresistible by the author's precision in creating reality from words.

And for added pleasure, there is the satisfaction of the poetic quality of Bates' prose which never obscures the story but rather is the organic substance from which each story grows. Even the titles, with their natural suggestiveness have a quiet, warm beauty in them: "Chaff In The Wind" . . . "Love In A Wych Elm" . . . "Now Sleeps The Crimson Petal."

"The Mower," for instance, is almost symbolical in its naturality. The eternal triangle: A husband, wife, and an arrogant young man who can "mow twenty-acre fields afore dark." They labor with their scyths in a huge field around a lake. The young man makes love to the older man's woman, hidden in the long grass, and then continues blithly slicing down the hay, her adoring eyes following always after him. But he remains aloof and, in the end, her face is filled with the conflicting expressions of ". . . exasperation, perplexity, jealousy, longing, hope, anger . . . ," a story of emotions aroused by a vain woman and a proud man; natural emotions in a setting symbolical of fundamental life: a young mower among reapers, taking more from the harvest of life than he gives.

Bates' longer stories run deeper and are increasingly richer. Perhaps it is worth describing a longer one. In "The Mill," a young girl who comes from a Snopes-like family, which lives meagerly by peddling flower arrangements, has been conditioned to lifeless, automatic responses, obedient to whatever demands are thrust on her. She is sent by her father to be employed at an old mill, which, once a place of life-producing activity, she now finds is dead, a study in dereliction, strewn with odd arrays of rusty iron, soaking in the stagnant mill water.

Inside the mill-house she takes care of a dropsied woman and her cast iron-dealing husband, submitting to his physical onslaughts night after night for months, in blank, unfeeling neutrality, because it is demanded of her.

When the mill-couple's son returns home from the army, the young girl is rejected from the husband's attentions, and becomes the object of jealousy by the dropsied wife who now gets her son's attentions and no longer appreciates the girl's help and resents her son's straying eye.

The girl is pregnant but doesn't understand it or care, and thinks unemotionally that she has caught the woman's dropsy causing her to be bloated, her stomach "as moist and warm as a sweating apple." The son realizes it and sends her home. She arrives on the dark threshold of her family's tar-hut and the labor pains shoot up to her brain and her eyes fill with tears and "it was as though they had come to life at last." The light of emotional life had been sparked by new physical life in a half-living woman; the conception of life at a mill that had ceased to be produced the staff of life.

Then in "Across the Bay" there is the poignancy of a hopeless summer love between two people who no longer had a choice about the uses of love, for "there are things that can kill you unless you find someone in their place." And as the couple lie together on a beach about to discover their love, mood is blended with the effect of nature in words of soft poetic texture:

"An afternoon of indigo and snow-white brilliance blew in exhilarating bursts that flowered away into occasional running whirlwinds of sand. Above the dunes there was a tossing and continuous murmer of pines. Waves lashed with glittering and exciting brilliance at the rocks of the small point and sometimes it was too hot, and then too cool, to lie on naked sand in the sun."

H. E. Bates is a writer of precision and subtle artistry, whose stories sample, dark and light, all the many wines of life.

"Boss, I Think The Time Has Come For YOU To Challenge HIM To A Debate"

Hugh Stevens

'You're IN If You Are A...'

Are you IN? Or are you OUT? The most logical answer to either question is OF WHAT? But I'm not talking about interiors—I'm talking about status.

Status is sort of like height—everybody's got some, but some folks have more than others. And the most popular manner of comparing one's status with that of someone else today is to check the list of fashions, fads or fancies that are IN. Accordingly, there is a similar list of things that are OUT. To achieve status in the society, one must rigorously observe the first list, and heartily reject the second.

It is something of a public service, then, for men to give you at least a partial listing of those things on the UNC campus which appear to be IN (or OUT) at the present time.

To give credit where credit is due, I should note here the wonderful help of Mr. Don Curtis, who, though no longer IN or OUT (he has been both at one time or another), was of very valuable assistance in helping compile these lists. I should also mention the fact that these lists are not complete, and existing political circumstances leave them open to sudden change.

From here, though, it appears that you are IN at Carolina if:

—You can wear a coat and tie without having people ask, "Why are you wearing a coat and tie?" (This applies to men only.)

—You can call Mike Lawler "Hank."

—You know the unlisted telephone number of one or more sorority houses.

—Harry won't cash your checks, but Spero will.

—Billy Cunningham knows you.

—You have taken a course under Walter Spearman in the last two semesters.

—You have a staff parking sticker.

—You've been through Drop-Add every semester that you've been in school.

—You have cashed more than five bad checks this year.

—You have more than five credit cards.

—You can regularly be seen at the Toddle House after midnight on Saturday.

—You have broken the Apartment Rule.

—You have not signed a petition of any kind in the last two weeks.

—You have been picketed in the last two weeks.

—You have had a "Letter To The Editors" written about you.

—You wear an Army Surplus jacket to class. (If it still has "U. S. Army" and the name of the previous owner on the pocket, you can practically move in with President Friday.)

—You are a moderate.

—You have already cut five classes this week (three if one was a quiz.)

—You have no Saturday classes.

—You have recently resigned from Student Legislature.

—Johnsye Massenburg has asked you to do something recently.

—You've ever flunked Phys. Ed.

—You're Frieda Collins.

—You're Jim Hickey.

—You have ever dropped out of school for a semester.

—You know Joel Fleishman.

—You have eaten in the back room at Spero's.

—Kitty Carmichael has ever called you on the phone.

—You have used up all your late minutes (girls only).

—Otelia has ever hit you with her umbrella.

—You have been to the beach already this year.

—You are working your way through school but drive an XKE.

—You are not a candidate for anything.

—You've had pebble - grained Weejuns so long the heels are worn out.

—Dave Ethridge likes you.

—Gary Blanchard dislikes you.

That's just the IN list, of course. I'll get together with Mr. Curtis again and give you the OUT list on Saturday. Meanwhile, we'll appreciate any additions you may have for this list or suggestions for the next one. And in conclusion, we'd suggest that if you've read this far, you're IN—bad shape.

Himes Hits Helms, Mauphin

Helms: No!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I am one of the many students who patronize some of the local segregated establishments which are on the DTH blacklist, and who will continue to do so, regardless of any Student Government pronouncements calling for a student boycott.

As such, I feel that the petition asking students to ignore the recent urgings of President Lawler and the Student Legislature is, in its intent, a laudable document.

However, though I signed the petition, I am concerned over the fact that its principal sponsor is Armistead Maupin. While I agree with the objective of the petition, I do not concur in most of the views set forth by Mr. Maupin concerning the variety of topics about which he speaks and writes.

The really sad thing about the situation is that, it seems to me, some of Mr. Maupin's words are not really his, but originate with that Old Philosopher and Friend of the University—Jesse Helms of WRAL-TV.

Most thinking students know that the television editorials delivered by Mr. Helms would make William McKinley, Warren G. Harding, and other Great Statesmen of past Forward-Looking Eras green with envy.

Mr. Helms' proposals generally fall into three categories— (1) unrealistic, (2) unworkable, (3) absurd—with emphasis upon the latter.

Lately, however, Mr. Helms and his WRAL-TV staff of "newscasters" have taken of much valuable air time in praise of Mr. Maupin and of his efforts on behalf of the anti-boycott petition.

This fact should cause students to pause and to consider the motives behind such praise.

Jesse Helms has constantly attacked the University on a variety of topics—particularly the supposed proliferation of Communism on the campus. Now he spends his air time in praise of Mr. Maupin with the implication that there are at least a few Good, Upstanding Patriots in Chapel Hill who are willing to stand up and be counted.

Judging by what Messrs. Maupin and/or Helms admit that past, I do not feel that they really represent the views of a majority of Carolina students.

The students with whom I have talked concerning the anti-boycott petition said that they signed it, not because of a belief in segregation, but because they disagree with the methods employed by CORE or disapprove of the actions of President Lawler and the SL in calling for a boycott.

I have not heard Messrs. Maupin and/or Helmes admit that they do favor some of the aims, if not the means, of the current civil rights struggle.

The publicity which is being given to Mr. Maupin concerning the petition is alarming in that it may very well give the incorrect impression of the attitudes of most UNC students.

Also, the fact that there is a connection between Armistead Maupin and Jesse Helms should cause concern among those who value the freedom of the University and of the academic community, not to mention the image and future of North Carolina.

Whether he realizes it or not, Mr. Maupin has in effect become the campus mouthpiece of Jesse Helms, thereby allowing the Raleigh broadcaster to get his foot further into the door in his campaign to subvert the University of North Carolina.

I would ask Mr. Maupin to take stock of his position and to clarify it for the student body. He may be a victim of "guilt by association."

If so, he should strive to correct the impression of a child who has found a new toy, i.e. the Jesse Helms brand of 'conservatism." If not, the students who feel as I do should take pen in hand and show to the people of North Carolina that Jesse Helms and Armistead Maupin are not representative of their feelings in this area.

Hooray!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I read your "editorial" on kite flying which appeared in the DTH Saturday, February 21. You said that you made a wonderful kite out of some back issues of the Daily Tar Heel, so I must write and congratulate you on your great achievement. I must admit that I had almost begun to believe that you were not going to find even ONE constructive use for the paper this year.

Rejoicingly yours,
Charles Murray
323 Ehringhaus

Letters

Editors, The Tar Heel:

It was with some interest (and no little amusement, I must confess) that I noticed, in today's DTH for the first time, the little box near the foot of the editorial page in which, in bold print, you stated that letters to you should not be more than two double-spaced, typewritten pages in length, the implication of course being that you would not print any of greater length.

Now you have gone to great length recently to impress upon everyone the "fact" that the ordinance limiting picketing hours is unconstitutional (characteristically without stating why and how for the benefit of those of us not blessed with your keen insight). I found myself, therefore, somewhat baffled by your restriction on letters. It seems incongruous that a newspaper priding itself on "70 years of editorial freedom" should so abridge the freedom of speech of contributors to the editorial page. Undoubtedly you are working under straitened circumstances—cuts in salaries, editorials to be written, and shortage of space because of all the racial developments being among your many problems — but such sacrifice of principle to expediency as this is hardly to be expected of such a staunch advocate of taking a firm stand on conviction. Perhaps some compromise can be reached satisfactory to both parties, but one of two things should be absent in future issues: the offensive statement aforenamed, of the "70 years, etc." on the masthead.

Haywood Smith Jr.
505 Ehringhaus

(Ed. Note: The notice to which Mr. Smith refers did not imply that we would not run letters longer than two pages. We will attempt to run ALL letters which are of acceptable quality, but space requirements may make it necessary for long letters to be held until space is available.)

Cunningham 'Player Of Year'

Billy, Jeff, Ronnie Head All-ACC Team

By LARRY TARLETON

The ACC Player of the Year, Billy Cunningham, heads the annual, DTH All-ACC Basketball Team. The Kid is joined on the first team by Jeff Mullins of Duke, Frank Christie of Wake Forest, Jim Brennan of Clemson and Ronnie Collins of South Carolina.

Cunningham, Mullins and Collins were unanimous choices of the five-man DTH selection staff. The Kid nosed out Mullins, for player of the year honors by a 3-2 vote.

The second team is made up of Chip Conner of Virginia who was barely edged out of a first team berth by Christie, Gary Burniskey of Clemson, Butch Hassell of Wake Forest and Ray Respass of UNC.

Cunningham has been the bright star in an otherwise disappointing season for the Tar Heels. The Brooklyn junior is currently averaging 25.5 points per game and 6.2 rebounds. Although snubbed by the early All-America teams, many coaches and sportswriters consider Cunningham the best basketball player in the South. His season highs have been 40 points and 28 rebounds against Maryland at Woollen Gym. The 28 rebounds broke his own school mark of 27 set last year against Clemson.

Billy's value to the team does not lie solely in his rebounding and scoring ability. He has a great knack for hitting teammates with passes for easy baskets when the defense gangs up on him.

The biggest problem facing Vic Bubas' Blue Devils at the start of the season was the loss of Art Heyman. There was a question as to whether Mullins could be the leader that Heyman was. The "Kentucky Rifle" soon proved equal to the challenge.

Currently Mullins is averaging 23.9 points per game and has led his team to an 18-4 record. Many observers believe this Duke team is actually stronger than last year's unit. Mullins is the main reason for all the optimism on Duke's chances for the NCAA championship.

Collins, South Carolina's "Blond Bomber" from Winnsboro, S. C., is probably the best shooter in the ACC this season. Fans at the North-South Doubleheader will agree that this kid is fantastic. They stared in amazement as Collins almost single-handedly destroyed Dean Smith's Tar Heels with a 29-point second half. He finished the night with 35 points, breaking Billy Cunningham's 24-hour North-South Doubleheader record of 33.

Collins has scored over 30 points six times this season with a personal high of 37 against Georgia. He is averaging 23.6 points per game.

The other guard on the first team, Brennan of Clemson, is averaging 18.2 points per game for the team which has twice defeated the Tar Heels. In the two games against UNC Brennan scored 29 and 20 points and directed his team like an All-American. However, in an earlier game against Furman he was held scoreless. His coach, Bobby Roberts, says that when Brennan is playing up to his ability, he is the best guard in the conference. The DTH staff saw him twice when he was at his best and agrees with Roberts that he is the ACC's number one backcourt man.

Christie has led a late-season Wake Forest surge which seems to have clinched second place for Bones McKinney's boys. For the season Christie is averaging 15.7 points per game and about 10 rebounds, but during the last six games Christie has been nothing short of sensational. He was the leader in his team's 72-71 victory over Duke, ending the Blue Devils' ACC victory streak at 28 games.

Pete Worthen Leads Attack On Freshman Splash Marks

By PERRY McCARTY

In this Olympic year swimming records are as vulnerable as a boxer's glass jaw. Monday night was no exception as some 13 teams gathered for the Freshman Invitational Championships.

Six meet records perished; two of these six are Pete Worthen's 50 and 100 times, new NCAA freshman marks. As expected the personal feud between Worthen and Maryland's Phil Denkevitz was the top attraction.

In their initial encounter, Denkevitz had emerged the victor. But Monday night shaven, oiled, and resplendent Worthen mounted the blocks with a single aim—to finish first.

He did just that winning the 50 in 21.0 and the 100 in a blistering 47.7. A check of Worthen's former times reveals what a tremendous personal effort was involved. He choped five tenths off his best 50, and a full second off his 100 clocking.

Denkevitz swam 21.4 and 47.8. Worthen's dazzling wins have a number of important aftermaths. First, he takes the pressure off himself and places it squarely on the Terp in the freestyle foray, which is likely to rage between the two for three years to come.

Second he establishes himself as one of the outstanding freestyle sprinters in the nation. His 21 flat tied an American record. Also by his remarkable showing in the championship meet swimming he demonstrated his ability to fuse intensive training and mental composeure and, under fire of heated competition, produce peak performances.

NC State's Ron Wirth has to be considered before awarding Worthen individual honors. Wirth set three new meet standards—55.7 in the 100 back, 2:03.9 in the 200 back, and 2:04.7 in the 200 individual medley.

Dan Danielson also of State won both the 1500 meter and 500 yard freestyle events. His teammate Dan Fellows won the 200 free and edged Danielson, or so he thought, in the 500. Actually Fellows stopped a lap too soon and virtually conceded as he eased the last 50 thoroughly disgusted.

To add to State's fortunes, John White posted a meet record of 53.7 for the 100 fly.

Beta, DKE Advance To Semi's

By PETE GAMMONS

Beta nipped Chi Psi, 46-45, in the highlight of the Monday intramural action, to earn a place in the semi-finals of the Blue division. Ted Sills with 17 and Larry McDevitt with 14 led the winners, while Gene Barrier led the Psis with 14. The game was nip and tuck all the way, with the score knotted at halftime, 31-31.

Also reaching the finals were the powerful DKE's, who rolled over SAE, 65-24. Mike Barnes and Tom King led the onslaught with 19 and 17 respectively.

In the Grad division the Phys-Ed Peacocks kept rolling with their 55-36 win over the Dental School 3A. Joe Johnstone (16) and Paul Roth (13) led the scorers as the Peacocks moved into the semi-finals. Gaining a qua

Billy The Kid

By PAT STITH

Lennie Rosenbluth, Pete Brennan, Lee Shaffer, Doug Moe—and now Billy Cunningham. All pretty fair basketball players in anybody's league. But mirror, mirror on the wall, who's the fairest of them all?

Answer—The Kid.

Mirror says he's 6-5½, 210 pounds, with pogo sticks for legs. And the record book says he's the greatest scorer-rebounder combination ever to suit up in North Carolina blue and white.

That's saying something. Brennan, Shaffer, Moe and Rosie were All-America at UNC. Together they molded Carolina into a national power in the late fifties, winning 159 games over a period of seven years. Between them they held practically every Carolina record—until Cunningham came along.

The Kid took his share of those while still a sophomore. Against Clemson he established a one-game high of 27 rebounds. Rosie had held that one since 1955. For the season, Billy captured a total of 339 loose balls (in 21 games), which erased All-America Brennan's old mark set in 1957 (32 games). And he knocked Moe out of the records with his 16.1 per game rebounding average. Doug averaged 14.0 during the 1961 campaign.

This year, as a junior, Billy threatens to up all three rebounding records again. He's already established a new one-game rebounding high of 28 (vs. Maryland) and the other two should fall in due time.

No one argues that Billy is not the finest rebounding Tar Heel ever. His 16.1 average grabs per game last year turned the Atlantic Coast Conference race in that department into a chase for second place. And this season he's upped the pace to 16.2.

In scoring, only Lennie Rosenbluth, the Helms Player of the Year back in 1957, surpasses Billy's 24.1 career mark. Rosie averaged 26.9 for 76 varsity contests.

None of the others won career averages of 20 points or more. Closest is Pete Brennan, the Dixie Classic's Outstanding Player in 1958. He left a mark of 16.6 a game.

But basketball is not just rebounding or shooting. It's both. And that's where Cunningham establishes his clear superiority. His career totals in those two departments read 24.1 points-16.2 rebounds. That compares with Rosenbluth, 26.9 - 10.4; Brennan, 16.6-10.5; Moe, 16.5-10.6; and Shaffer, 14.0-8.1.

Yet the best for Cunningham is still to come. Moe, Brennan, Rosenbluth, and Shaffer all had their best years as seniors. And from here, there's no reason to think that Billy will break with tradition.

Bob Lewis once again paced the frosh with 34 points. Ian Morrison added 22. Jim Connelly, who didn't play in the previous meeting of the two teams, was high for Virginia with 32. Big John Naponick had 27 points and 20 rebounds.

. . . don't pour it down the side?
(We'd rather you wouldn't)

Of course, a lot of people do pour beer down the side of the glass. They say it keeps the head down.

It sure does. And we think that's a shame.

Maybe it sounds silly, but we spend more dollars on just the bubbles than any other brewery in America. Instead of pumping them in mechanically, we let Budweiser create its own bubbles with our exclusive Beechwood Ageing and natural carbonation. It takes a lot longer to do it this way. But it's worth it.

When those bubbles get together at the top of your glass you've got a better head, a cleaner taste, a smoother, more drinkable beer. Budweiser even smells better (really . . . just take a sniff next time you pour).

So let that Budweiser fall right down the center of your glass. Let it splash around and froth and foam. We went to a whale of a lot of trouble brewing the finest beer on earth, and we'd hate to think you'd missed even one little bubble.

Gerstein Smells A Rat

MIAMI BEACH Fla. (UPI)—The Florida state attorney's office joined the Miami Beach Boxing Commission Wednesday in a double-barreled investigation of Cassius Clay's startling heavyweight title victory over Sonny Liston Tuesday night.

State Attorney Richard Gerstein of Miami announced that his office has asked the boxing commission to "make available all records and medical papers pertaining to Liston."

Meanwhile, the commission still was officially holding up Liston's purse until two orthopedic specialists could examine his left shoulder and decide whether an alleged first-round injury was the reason for Liston's failure to come out of his corner for the start of the seventh round.

The 22-year-old Cloy of Louisville, Ky., captured the crown from the 30-year-old Liston on an upset seventh-round technical knockout when Liston remained on his corner stool.

At a news conference Wednesday at Convention Hall, where the scheduled 15-round fight was held Tuesday night Liston said: "I wanted to come out although I couldn't feel anything in my left arm, but Willie Reddish (trainer) and Jack Nilon (advisor) wouldn't let me."

Morris Klein, chairman of the boxing commission, said he was investigating Liston's defeat in order to make certain that Sonny "could not have continued his title defense."

Liston was favored at 7-1 for this bout in which he suffered the first knockout of his career and only his second defeat in 37 fights.

Nilon told a news conference that the boxing commission had not notified either him or Liston about the purse being held up and claimed:

"Sonny has picked up $100,000 of his purse."

It is estimated that Sonny will receive about $150,000 more from his portion of the $625,000 paid by co-promoters Bill MacDonald and Chris Dundee for the privilege of staging the fight here. The co-promoters will lose about $400,000 in their guaranteed purse price and promotional expenses since the gross gate was only $402,000. The paid attendance was only 8,297.

Barney Felix, the fight referee, disclosed Wednesday that he came within "one split second" of stopping the bout at the start of the fifth round and disqualifying Clay.

Felix said that when the bell rang for the fifth "Clay wouldn't come out—he kept sitting on his stool and blinking his eyes." Felix said he ordered Clay to come out immediately and that Clay's handlers pushed him bodily off his stool.

"Had they not done so, Liston still would be the champion today," Felix said. "That's how close he came."

Felix said Clay's handlers were claiming at that time that Liston had liniment on his gloves which was getting into Clay's eyes, but the referee said he inspected Sonny's gloves and found it wasn't so.

Clay held a news conference, and although pretending to be considerably subdued by the responsibility of being world champion, managed to get off one good joke on the boxing writers. He said:

"I'm considering retirement—at 22."

Pay Raises Given Four UNC Officials

Gov. Sanford has given $3,000-a-year pay raises to three chancellors of the Consolidated University. The boosts raise their salaries to $23,000 annually.

The raises were granted to John T. Caldwell of N. C. State at Raleigh, William B. Aycock of Chapel Hill and to Otis Singletary of Greensboro.

A salary increase of $1,500 also was given to University President William C. Friday. The increase, made by the Governor, brought Mr. Friday's salary to $24,000.

The salaries of the three chancellors had been increased $1,500, from $18,500 to $20,000, by the 1963 General Assembly. Mr. Friday's salary was not increased by the Legislature.

The pay-raise funds are part of a $50,000-a-year fund which the Legislature's Advisory Budget Commission has put at the governor's disposal to supplement salaries of officials of the university. The money represents portions of foundation-supported research programs on the three campuses of the institution.

Gov. Sanford discussed the pay raises briefly when asked by a reporter at the Capital yesterday.

The Governor indicated that he raised the chancellors' salaries in order to make the positions more attractive and to bring them more in line with the pay at comparable institutions out of state. A committee of the Consolidated University Board of Trustees is currently looking for a chancellor to replace Mr. Aycock.

Mr. Aycock announced last year that he would return to a teaching position in the UNC Law School.

Applications Due Friday

The Secretary General of next year's mid-South Model United Nations General Assembly will be chosen after written applications are accepted tomorrow.

Applications should be turned in at Student Government office in GM. A recommendation will be forwarded to the Continuations Committee at Duke University for final acceptance.

Persons interested in applying for the position of Secretary General should have experience in the field of administration, an interest in and knowledge of the United Nations, a familiarity with the structure and function of the Mid-South SGA and a knowledge of the details and major events concerning the development of an effective UN Model General Assembly.

Notification of acceptance will be received by March 5.

CUSC Adopts Constitution

The Consolidated University Student Council adopted a new constitution and passed a resolution on civil rights at a luncheon meeting last Saturday in Raleigh.

The new constitution, drawn up by a committee chaired by Anne Prince of Greensboro, will change the name of the organization to the Consolidated Student Council of the University of North Carolina.

In speaking for the new name, Mike Chanin of Carolina noted that it is now improper to refer to the University as being "consolidated," but the new name will retain the idea of conjunction of the three campuses.

Other major changes resulting from the new constitution are attendance requirements for delegates and a reduction in the size of each delegation from 15 to 10 members.

The new constitution must be approved by the Student Legislatures of the three campuses before it can take effect.

The civil rights resolution, in-

Police Use Dogs To Quell Student Riots

PRINCESS ANNE Md. (UPI) —State police, using snarling dogs, clubs and automobiles as battering rams fought a pitched street battle with Negro students Wednesday and sent them fleeing in terror.

The dogs bit an estimated 20 demonstrators on the legs and arms. State policemen clubbed dozens of others and kicked some that had fallen in their tracks.

One state trooper said that a student threw acid in his face.

The battle erupted when the state troopers used their cars to bump demonstrators off the streets and onto the curb. Newsmen and even one state policeman were struck by the cars.

Within seconds, a pitched battle erupted and two dogs were used to charge into the crowd. Screams of terror filled the air.

A group of 150 to 200 students broke and ran back to the campus of Maryland State College, a half-mile from town, the dogs at their heels.

At least 15 of the demonstrators were clubbed, kicked and shoved into police cars and taken to the Princess Anne jail where they were charged with refusing to obey a police officer and with disorderly conduct.

A fire truck was brought onto the scene and a high pressure hose was hooked up. It was not used immediately.

The Negro students fought back, using sticks, bottles and stones to hurl at the state troopers and the dogs.

Moore Here This Week

Moore, Preyer And Lake To Speak Here This Spring

Gubernatorial hopeful Dan K. Moore will speak here Tuesday in the first of a series of appearances by the three major Democratic candidates for Governor.

Moore will speak at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. The public and students are invited.

L. Richardson Preyer and I. Beverly Lake will make campus appearances later in the spring. All three candidates are being sponsored jointly by the Orange County and UNC Young Democratic Clubs.

Moore's topic has not been announced, but he is expected to touch on the Speaker Ban Law and other matters directly affecting the University in a question and answer period following his address.

Students and the public will have a chance to meet and talk informally with Moore at a reception following the address.

The former Superior Court Judge from Canton resigned that position to become the first man to enter the Democratic primary. Almost immediately, he was endorsed by U. S. Senator Sam J. Ervin, Congressman Roy Taylor and many other members of what is termed "the old guard of the Democratic Party."

Throughout his campaign, Moore has advocated "that philosophy which would best unite the different factions of the Democratic Party in North Carolina."

An executive of the Canton Paper Co., Moore has been very active in western North Carolina politics.

The Campus Chest Helps And Gets Help In Return

The Campus Chest helps many worthy organizations, but it is not often that one of these organizations in turn helps the Campus Chest.

Such is the case with the World University Service, one of five charities which will benefit from this year's Campus Chest Drive. Paul Gustafson, a WUS traveling secretary, is on campus this week to explain the functions of the World University Service and also to train the Campus Chest solicitors for the upcoming fund-raising drive.

"To train them," said Gustafson, "you've got to get them enthusiastic and that will take care of it. But getting them enthusiastic can sometimes be quite an assignment."

Despite his modesty, it is hard to be around Paul Gustafson and not become enthusiastic about the Campus Chest and the World University Service. Gustafson, a 1963 graduate of Boston University, is a short, friendly young man whose smile and zest for WUS is nothing short of contagious. He begins his statements with, "Why?" and then he tells you why.

"Why the World University Service?" Gustafson begins. "Well, in an underdeveloped area, the college community is a very small component, although a very crucial one." He stresses that this is because many of a country's business and government leaders get their training in colleges and universities.

"WUS is an international student service trying to develop the college areas," he goes on.

"It is non-sectarian and apolitical—it doesn't deal with governments, but directly with the college and universities.

"WUS is based on principles of mutual assistance and self-help. Our main rule is that the local area being helped must match half of the contribution which we allot to it."

In training the Campus Chest solicitors, Gustafson stresses three things. Not only is he concerned with getting across the techniques of charity canvassing, but he also emphasizes the reasons for the Campus Chest and the philosophy behind charity.

"Why the Campus Chest?" Gustafson asks. "The Chest tries to encompass the charities which the college students are the most concerned with. The university community is the proving ground for a person's ability to get along with other people. And working on the Campus Chest gives a person experience in leadership and in working with others.

"Then, you ask, why charity?" he continues. "It is a basic part of our Judo-Christian heritage, it is humanistic, and through it a person can register his concern for his world. Charity ties in with the democratic way of life because it is completely voluntary."

Gustafson is quite pleased with this year's Campus Chest staff. "You have one of the best-organized and best - functioning groups I have ever come across."

Anne Queen Named Y's New Secretary

By JOHN GREENBACKER

After eight years service as chairman of the staff, Miss Anne Queen has been appointed executive secretary of the YW-YMCA.

Miss Queen, a small woman with a ruddy complexion, has led a varied and unusual life. After graduating from Bethel High School in Haywood County, she worked for 10 years in a paper mill before enrolling at Berea College in Kentucky.

She attended Southern Baptist Seminary upon graduation from college and left after a year to attend Yale Divinity School. After two years she received her Bachelor of Divinity degree.

Miss Queen worked for five years as secretary for the American Friends Service Committee in Greensboro before coming to Chapel Hill.

In her new capacity, she will have to work with the Cabinet, Executive Committee and the various programming and administrative branches of the Y, beslides attending to her old duties.

"I suppose my greatest hindrance in this job is learning to discipline myself so I don't spread myself too thin; when you do that, you will never do anything well," Miss Queen said.

Though she doesn't like to speak of it, Anne Queen is frequently called the "unofficial hostess of Chapel Hill," and is a personal friend of many newsmen and politicians.

She has a way of resting her head on her hand and leaning near you as she talks, giving a touch of intimacy to her words.

"I feel this University has an important role in the state and nation, and when I work with the Y's international and local programs I feel we are helping achieve this role," she explained.

Slim Turnout Hears Panel

The University Party heard a panel speak on the topic of the student boycott controversy Tuesday night.

Panel members were former UP chairman Don Curtis and UP Legislator Don Carson.

Curtis, in giving his position on the boycott, said, "There can be no other role in the integration situation than as an individual. The reason I am against the boycott is because it is so weak it won't work."

Clark Crampton asked from the floor how "Mike Lawler could consider his mandate of the students valid considering the expressed views of his constituents were to the contrary."

SP chairman Paul Dickson answered from the floor saying, "I feel an elected leader has to lead, not just represent. In this respect," he continued, "Lawler

A Gift: $11.5 Billion Tax Reduction

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress yesterday enacted an $11.5 billion tax cut that will put extra cash into taxpayers' pockets early in March. President Johnson promptly signed it into law and urged Americans to spend as much as they can.

The result, he told a nationwide radio-television audience, will be to strengthen the United States by bolstering the economy.

"No one can bury us, or bluff us, or beat us so long as our economy remains strong," Johnson said in an obivous reference to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's oft-quoted promise to "bury" capitalism.

Johnson signed the historic tax cut bill in a special White House ceremony at dusk, just hours after the Senate put the final stamp of approval on the measure by a 74-19 vote.

Johnson was obviously pleased at this election-year bonus, but he noted early in his broadcast remarks that the measure was "inspired and proposed by our late beloved Presiden Kennedy" and passed with bi-partisan support.

Kennedy had urged Congress in early 1963 to enact a tax cut as a way of stimulating consumer's spending and investments, creating more jobs and averting a recession.

Ruby's Jury Gets Two-Thirds Full

DALLAS (UPI) — Moving swiftly as the end neared, attorneys seated a salesman, a mailman and a stylish lady bookkeeper as jurors in the Jack Ruby murder trial Wednesday and had only four to go.

The sixth, seventh and eighth jurors were chosen on the ninth day, to make the jury two-thirds complete. It appeared the end of the bickering, maneuvering and quarreling over jury prospects might be in sight.

The second man up at the afternoon session, Juston Glenn Helton Jr., 31, a mailman, was quickly accepted by both sides.

Helton said he had seen a rerun of the telecast of Ruby shooting Lee Harvey Oswald. He agreed with the defense that the shooting itself was not a crime, it was the "intent in a man's mind.

Robert J. Flechtner and Mrs. Gwen L. English were chosen without argument before the sessions erupted in quarrels.

Ruby sat nervously through the ninth day of his murder trial for slaying Lee Harvey Oswald. He rubbed his jowls, blinked his eyes and engaged Belli in intense whispered conversations.

A Little Chaos, A Little Shouting, But Not Music

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

"Rock n' Roll music is nothing but a chaotic sound combined with great shouting—it's just beyond the definition of what you call music."

That statement comes from a man who ought to know—Benjamin Swalin, 62-year old director of the N. C. Symphony.

Swalin is no newcomer to the "wonderful world of music." He began violin lessons at age six.

"The earlier children start music lessons, the better," Swalin says. "This is true not only in music but in everything. Many of us are deficient because we started too late."

Benjamin Swalin is a lanky gray-haired gentleman who looks as much like a lawyer as he does a symphony director.

"As a matter of fact, I have taken several law courses," Swalin said. "I guess I would be considered a sophomore in Law School if I were in regular classes."

Swalin is a meticulous dresser—black suit, grey vest, orange and blue necktie. He removed his brown frame glasses and cleaned them with his handkerchief as he spoke again of the younger generation.

BENJAMIN SWALIN

"Young people today aren't as patient as they should be," Swalin said. "They don't want to take the long road, but are always in a hurry to get started.

"A young person should get as much education as he possibly can," Swalin declared. "I studied the violin for years and years so I could work for years and years. That still holds true nowadays.

"We should develop a love for learning and do away with the quest for a fast buck."

Although Swalin's major love is the symphony which he has been conducting since 1939, he still enjoys other kinds of music.

"I enjoy good dance music," Swalin said. "I used to play in a dance band. I like other kinds of music too.

"But I don't like rock n' roll—it's terrible. Those people are just big fakers."

Swalin leaned back in his swivel chair, glanced around his office which is located in Bingham X, a "temporary structure" built on the UNC campus during World War II.

"Did you know we are a symphony without a rehearsal hall?" Swalin asked as he thumbed through a book of past symphony programs.

"We have one week of solid rehearsal before our tour, and the rest is done in the respective towns."

Suddenly, as if he had forgotten something important, Swalin got up from his swivel chair, walked over to the other side of the rooms, looked at a big map of North Carolina, and then walked back to his swivel chair and sat down.

"Music is one of the true values of life today," Swalin said. "It has a basic and permanent value.

"But today, the artist still has not won the position in American life commensurate with his

'Ankle's Okay But The Knee's Got To Go'

The recent decision of the budget committee to withdraw the Student Government subsidy for The Carolina Quarterly next year represents a flagrant breach of common sense and a fundamental misconception of the magazine's function on this campus. Because of a lack of student interest in the Quarterly and the magazine's precarious finances, committee chairman Dick Akers explains the proposed cut by saying: "We hope by taking away the money, interest in the magazine will revive." In analoguous terms, we hope by undermining the foundation of the magazine, the structure will not collapse. But this latter will most assuredly be the case. If the committee's decision is in any way a critical comment on the indifference of students toward the issue, the committee is itself guilty of the indifference they would wish to point out in the student body, for rather than coming to grips with the problem, they hope to solve it by destruction. Last year the Legislature voted down a $200 request for publicity and sales; now holocaust seems imminent.

But the loss will be a great deal larger than they suspect. For sixteen years the Quarterly has been the only permanent literary magazine with relatively consistent quality standards not only for this campus but for the State of North Carolina. It is subscribed to by almost every state university in the country, by the City of Cincinnati, the British Museum, etc., etc. Yet for the past several years the editors have been forced to defend the need for a subsidy, and, in fact, the existence of the magazine at all.

Much of this debate has been over the question of why the Quarterly does not print more student writers. The answer, of course, is simply that student writing often lacks the skill and thoughtfulness of the best national submissions. Thus the editors have rightly chosen to include the best material they receive regardless of its origin. Sometimes this includes writers from Chapel Hill, but the writer's status has not been the criterion for publication.

In fact the magazine was instigated, as stated in a Quarterly editorial in 1949 (Vol. 1, No. 2), "to reflect the thoughts and ideas of the contemporary South and to afford new, young writers an opportunity to present a literature indigenous to the region." But this does not mean that UNC students are the primary source of good writing; rather their work is printed when it coincides with the overall quality of other material. However, the Quarterly has always attempted to fulfill the educational function of offering constructive criticism to students and has always welcomed them on the staff.

We have too often seen the results of student efforts to sustain student writing purely on the basis of publication. The response is small, the editors unselective, the contents largely execrable. Spectrum and Parlance, previous UNC literary publications, are notable examples. The issue is clearly before the Legislature: either they will support a magazine solely of whatever student contributions can be turned up for the occasion or they will decide on a quality magazine of potentially national scope. The one requires money and the hit-or-miss efforts of occasional students; the other requires money, courage, vision and sacrifice on the part of all concerned. Whether the Legislature can muster up the latter attributes remains to be seen.

Others have done so. The Northwest Review, one of the best-known little magazines in the country, is published by the Student Publications Board of University of Oregon. But it is absurd to expect such magazines to be money-making organizations. With the exception of such goliaths as Harper's and The Atlantic, literary magazines generally cost more to publish than they can yield in returns. They are printed for pride and prestige and because men still believe in the power of beautiful literature to inform us of our existence, to teach us what it means to see feelingly. The loss of the Quarterly would be a serious blow to the University and the State, a serious blow to the vitality of our academic world.

Some Poetry Of Our Times

I hope I won't sound radical or else conspiratorial:
the Southern Part of Heaven has been turning Purgatorial.

The air, it's full of more and more confusing obfuscation.
The core of the matter isn't CORE:
it's really segregation.

We're told that children run the show, that hate for law we're learning, and Carolina's full of smoke from martyrs (almost) burning.

Have college students any right to make a real decision?
Why don't they stick to beer and sex and grow in adult vision?

"Obey the law! Enjoy your rights from seven unto seven," say the discriminating few who guard this part of Heaven.

If picketing can't make the point, or months and months of talking, why blame a man for sitting down
when nothing's gained by walking?

We all want peace and quietude, plain living and high thinking;
but who can sniff tranquility when civil wrongs are stinking?

To think the issue's tactical is very much mistaken:
how long, how hard must gadflies sting till ostriches awaken?

Winter In New Hampshire

The Feds Talk About VD

(Ed. Note: The following is a release from the U. S. Dept. of Health, Education, and Welfare, released through the Venereal Disease branch of the Public Health Service, Atlanta, Ga. It proves beyond a doubt that the Federal Government just isn't what it used to be.)

When Lord Byron's Don Juan said, "The small pox has gone out of late. perhaps it may be followed by the great," he wasn't just whistlin' Dixie. There hasn't been a confirmed case of smallpox in the United States for the last 14 years, but thousands of cases of the great pox are being reported to the Public Health Service now, each month, from farm areas, small towns, large cities, and major metropolitan areas all over the United States.

What on earth is the great pox, you say? Come now. You're all familiar with Robert Greene, the English poet and dramatist—sure you are—who called the great pox, "the French marbles." And likewise, you've all read Hudibras by Samuel Butler who called the great pox, "the amorous French aches." And certainly all of you can quote from memory Erasmus' famous statement, "A man who did not have the pox was accounted a rustic and not a polished gentleman." What's more, you know about the many famous people throughout history who've been afflicted with the great pox. Hugo Wolf and Donizetti, just to name a composer or two. Heinrich Heine, Verlaine, Guy de Maupassant, and Friedrich Neitsche, just to dash off a few writers. Henry VIII, Frederick William IV, just to toss out a few kings. We could name many more, but who are we to gossip, nobody likes a name dropper anyway. For those of you who haven't yet made the Dean's List—and there are a few on every campus—the great pox is none other than (you guessed it) syphilis.

The history of syphilis dates back many centuries, perhaps to the very beginnings of mankind. Plagues of syphilis have been responsible for millions of the world's crippled, blind, insane, and dead. Throughout history, the germ which causes syphilis has infected young, old, rich, and poor, showing no more respect for princess than for beggars.

Many scholars — and even a few history majors—believe that Columbus' crew got syphilis from the natives of the West Indies, and brought the disease back to Europe in 1493. At the time of Columbus' return, the Renaissance as you know was rolling merrily along. Da Vinci, Galileo, Newton, and Michelangelo were doing whatever they were doing, gentlemen were composing poetry at the drop of their ladies' handerchief, poets praised the sexual excesses of the time. Syphilis was a natural. It fit beautifully into this climate, took hold and spread with the virulence of a forest fire fanned by 100 mile-an-hour winds (and remember, these were the days before penicillin and Smokey the Bear). It wasn't long before syphilis was as common in Europe as body odor and the family vermin. Benvenuto Cellini boasted when he was infected, Shakespeare wrote about syphilis and alas, poor Columbus died of it. If he had only stuck with the world is flat routine, but some people are never satisfied.

Still other scholars—and still other history majors—say the whole Columbian theory is just so much bunk. They say that syphilis was in the Old World long before Columbus was a pup. Experts have said, for example, after carefully examining the bones of mummies, that syphilis was present in early Egyptian days. The mummy of the famous Egyptian pharoah, Rameses V, showed that this ancient ruler probably had syphilis and perhaps was even born with it. The famous Greek —not Nick—but Hippocrates, in 460 BC described syphilis—like sores which appear on the reproductive organs after sexual exposure. Many scholars claim the Bible gives strong evidence that syphilis was widespread in ancient times. They point to Job's boils from his crown to toe and numerous other symptoms in various chapters of the Bible as evidence that syphilis existed in the Old World way before Columbus. The scholars have been arguing the pros and cons of the Columbian theory for hundreds of years and probably will continue for another couple of hundred. At any rate, the point is that syphilis has been around for a long time. And while the history of syphilis dates back at least five hundred years, valuable scientific knowledge about syphilis is a very recent occurrence.

It was only as recent as 1905 that Schaudinn and Hoffmann identified for the first time, the Treponema pallidum, the tiny corkscrew germ which causes syphilis. Two years later, Wassermann added the complement fixation tests and in 1910 when Dr. Ehrlich discovered the famous magic bullet, Salvarsan, the anti-syphilis arsenal was completed. The road to final eradication of syphilis lay ahead. In 1943 when penicillin was introduced into syphilotherapy those in the know thought the great pox would soon be a thing of the past. The public let down its guard. An era of optimism and complacency arose.

Unfortunately, in 1957 the reported early cases of syphilis began to rise sharply and continues to rise today. The great pox is making a comeback. The tiny corkscrew, thought to be dying a rapid death, is very much alive and wiggling.

What's being done about it? Plenty! A new profession has arisen which in many ways is closely related to the oldest profession of the world. A special breed of person, the Program Representative, has recently come into being. Hundreds of these well-trained epidemic detectives have been hired and the Public Health Service is continuing to comb the nation's campuses for still more capable people.

What's so special about these people, you say? Lots. Let's take a look at some of the things they do.

A person who has early syphilis must be interviewed for his sex contacts so that the source and possible spread of his infection may be found, treated, and the chain of infection broken. But in almost every syphilis case, guilt, and fear—involving family, job, and social status—reinforce the patients' natural reluctance to discuss his innermost secrets. Rapport with the syphilis patient must be established, all of these fears and reticences must be overcome. The Program Representative interviews the syphilis patient, then he traces the source and spread of the infection; his work may take him from the most rugged two-fisted bar in town to the plush office of a private physician with a select clientele. In an average working day the Program Representative may speak to a laboratory pathologist, a hospital administrator, a biology teacher, and a TV station program director interested in a VD commentary show. Sounds easy? You're crazy!

The VD Program Representative is a new professional in the federal service (Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare). The job is one of the most demanding positions in or out of government. While the work is fascinating, the pay is excellent. A starting salary of $5035 may be more than doubled—much more —in a few short years. This job is one of the many important—really important—jobs now being offered at the campus placement office.

The great pox has been given 10 years to live by the VD Branch of the Public Health Service and the VD Program Representative will play the decisive role in the eradication process. If you are a person with imagination and not afraid of hard work, you may qualify as a member of this profession. You may be one of those who will soon tell Lord Byron he simply will have to write about something else.

Micksup

By Mickey Blackwell

I don't usually worry very much, unless I really run into a problem that requires a lot of thought and care in making a decision.

I don't believe in worrying. If you do the best you can on whatever you're doing, and do what you think is best when you have to make a choice of courses of action, you'll almost invariably find that you have done the right thing in the end.

And if you find that you haven't, worrying about it won't help one single bit.

I didn't mean to slide into a philosophic discussion when I sat down to turn this one out. I meant to bring up something that worries me.

I'm worried about people who spend hours of their time for the benefit of their fellow students here and get no appreciation for the job they do. They get no pay or compensation of any kind; they get no honor or glory, and what makes it bad is they rarely even get a pat on the back from the people for whom they are working.

I'm talking about the little people, in particular, who write the headlines, the "Campus Briefs," the stories on the Di-Phi debates, and the many minor items that go to round out this newspaper's coverage of the campus.

Take photographer Jim Wallace, the Daily Tar Heel Night Editor, who goes to work early in the evening, gets his hands (and not infrequently his clothes) full of greasy printer's ink, sweats out a late-breaking story that means a complete remake of the front page at a time when the rest of the student body is preparing for bed, shoulders the responsibility for getting the newspaper on the press with a minimum of errors, gets a few hours of sleep, drags himself to a full load of classes, eats a quick lunch, heads back for the office where I chew him out for letting an error slip through on the front page, and starts the whole damned process all over again.

When I said this man gets no pat on the back from the people from whom he works, I wasn't talking about myself and the other editors of this newspaper. I was talking about his real bosses, the members of the student body who pay the expenses of printing the paper, choose the editors, and reserve the right to boot the editors out on their tails if they foul up—those are the owners and publishers of this paper.

Many students even take a sneering approach to their newspaper. They think it is a "waste of time" to fool around in such extracurricular activity as newspapering. But they are the first ones to squawk if the Daily Tar Heel is late in delivery the next morning.

These people have no idea of the hours of labor and sweat that some of their fellow students donate out of the goodness of their hearts and the love of the game to bring them this journal by 7:30 in the morning. They take the paper for granted, as if it put itself out. They have no comprehension of the enormous number of man-hours each issue of their paper requires.

It's like so many other things. I find myself, now and then, taking my school for granted. Then I'll take a walk across the campus and realize how lucky I am to be attending as fine a school as Carolina.

On that walk, as I begin to wake up again, I look at Old East Hall with a new respect—and I'm proud of the fact that it is the oldest building on the campus of any state university in the nation.

I look at South Building and realize how fortunate I am to be in an institution, run by as respected administrators as William Friday and William Aycock. And I remember with warmth how privileged I am to have met and known the great man, Frank Porter Graham, who was formerly president of the University.

I look at Davie Popular, and the Old Well, and become fully conscious of the fact that I am a part of the glorious heritage that is the University of North Carolina.

And I remember to appreciate the things that I had begun to take for granted.

Letter To The Editors

'A Third Person'

Editors, The Tar Heel:

As a third person, I have been following the local civil rights fiasco closely. I say "third person" because, although I was one of the few the "anti-Lawler" petitioners found in their hurried sweep, my student government choose to ignore my stand, and because of it I am labeled "indifferent" by my school newspaper. The fact that it is supposed to be representative student government is beside the point, and the fact that I am not indifferent seems too trivial to mention, but it is comforting to know that a cause exists that is so morally perfect that to pay homage to it puts the student government above answering to the expressed sentiments of the student body, and the student newspaper magically transcends facts . . . zap! All opposition is not only sterile but indifferent!

Like the DTH, I was surprised by Chi Omega President Bev Hanes' evasive answer to your queries of why Chi Omega dares eat at the Pines. I'm surprised she didn't tell you to go to hell. Perhaps, just perhaps, no members of Chi Omega questioned eating at the Pines because, like many of us, they believe in the ideals of civil rights but not with you or their government; the two aren't necessarily synonymous. Despite what you say, this isn't indifference.

It will be interesting to see if Chi Omega bows before your thinly veiled editorial blackmail and crocodile tears or stands up and tells you and their nonrepresentative representative government, who they've so wronged, to go fly a kite.

It is inspiring to see those members of the avant-garde unhindered by convention, armored in The Right, regimented uniformly in their odious dress, shaggy heads, lack of personal hygiene, and stench) so ready to battle for The Cause. At great personal sacrifice, they force nasty narcotics upon themselves and leap under vicious Chevys and red-neck Fords. Be it for the New Left, Banning the Bomb, or The Cause, this flotson is to be found polluting, or being mistaken for, the wave of the future perennially.

Now Lord knows that if I put on my best suit and fell down in a drunken stupor on a Chapel Hill alley, I'd catch hell from the Honor Council. But if I went without showering two or three weeks, dressed like a chimney sweep, and laid full stinking length in Franklin Street singing drunkenly that I wasn't afraid of nasty society bent upon tearing me apart, I'd suddenly transcend all campus rules. Interesting. Could their lice-ridden manes conceal crowns of thorns that didn't naturally take root there? Or, like superman, if one stripped off the rags they effect, would one really find this moral perfection? It must be so because the Honor Council said they aren't bound by the codes of mere mortal gentlemen. They are, then, something special, above man-made rules, sort of a mass Second Coming.

The effect of all this righteousness upon the DTH puts one in mind of another great noconformist, a Mr. D. Quixote. Unlike Mr. Quixote, 75 per cent of your targets aren't even windmills, and for a little Southern community, that's a pretty sad average to get your lances up over. DTH logic is also Quixote-like. Mr. Lawler rates huge editorial and objective coverage, yet the stand openly embraced by 1500 students in a rushed list of signatures, and by many others the petition didn't reach, hardly merited comment. Is that about the ratio? Fifteen hundred students don't quite balance one Lawler? Or is it because we can't be goaded out of our "indifference" to throw rocks and play into the calculating hands of The Cause? I fear a few minds, some editorial, some supposedly representative, have been clouded by their fervor.

"Seventy years of editorial freedom." Just how free are you?

Concerned

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The Committee of Concerned Citizens is a group of individuals who hope to contribute to the resolution of the present racial crisis in Chapel Hill. We know that we are but another in a long sequence of organizations which have held that desegregation is an urgent requirement for our community. Over the years these have included the Fellowship for the Integration of the Schools, the Committee on Open Business, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and others as well as numerous AD HOC groups which have formed around some specific project or need.

For the past few months the initiative in this effort has been maintained by the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee. The methods which have been employed by this group have been controversial to say the least but, in fairness to them, it must be acknowledged that demand for action at the level of government did not start with the formation of this organization nor will it end should they cease operations in Chapel Hill.

In initiating our efforts for peaceful desegregation we do not take a stand either belligerently against or enthusiastically in favor of all actions of the is somewhat more militant than Chapel Hill Freedom Committee. While it is clear that this group its predecessors we believe that the very existence of this militancy documents the intensity of the demand of many Negro and white citizens for the removal of the blight of racial barriers. We know full well that in taking this position we will appear overly "moderate" to some and too "extreme" to others.

We do not plan any projects which involve violations of ordinances which are currently in force. We do expect to continue to point up the incongruous features of segregation and to make repeated efforts to persuade those who are in a position to affect policy to take action to eliminate segregation. We will spare no effort to reach the conscience of those who practice segregation and of those who benefit from its continuation.

In these days of rapid technical progress we are painfully aware of the improved means that man has develped to maim and to devitalize his fellow man. We feel the urgency that reasonable men will match this type of progress with progress in moral and legal law to the end that man live together in peace and dignity. This has been the promise that American democracy has repeatedly made to oppressed men everywhere. We hope that our generation in Chapel Hill will win its place in history for its contribution to the fulfilment of that promise.

Very respectfully yours,
Joseph W. Straley
Chairman, Committee of Concerned Citizens

Suggestion

Editors, The Tar Heel:

A humble suggestion: why don't you take all that advertising that occurs on the last page of our Daily Tar Heel and put it on page two since that's not being used for anything anymore. Then bring Mr. Kirkpatrick back to his post. It is not necessarily that I consider sports more important than issues, national and civil, you see, but if the sport's page is going to be the only place where we are going to witness good journalism, then better than no journalism at all. By placing ads on page two, this would leave space for intelligent, balanced writing, only, which is currently at a premium it seems. Thus, by cutting down the writing space for editorial comment, your subconscious or mislead responsibility to fill up all the rest of page two with worthless drivel would be relinquished. If you recall, Mr. Kirkpatrick did a marvelous job with what little space he had . . . now let's see what you could do under similar circumstances.

Sincerely,

Courage

Editors, The Tar Heel:

This is in response to the letter in the Feburary 22 issue of the DTH from the gentlemen on the fourth floor of Manly. These gentlemen suggested that they would not move to stop an impeachment of Pres. Lawler because of his actions regarding the racial issue. I would like to refer the gentlemen to a book currently on the best seller list PROFILES IN COURAGE, by the late President of the United States, John F. Kennedy. In his book, Pres. Kennedy cites numerous examples of men in high offices who have had courage to act for what they believed to be morally right, without regard to the popularity of their actions among their constituents. I cite espicially the story of Senator Edmund G. Ross, who DID move to save a President of our country from impeachment. Gentlemen, Mr. Lawler has taken a courageous stand, regardless of whether or not any of us agree with him, and he should be applauded for his courage.

Sincerely,

The Doors

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Since coming to UNC a very "unlightened," unsophisticated freshman in 1960 I have been forced to re-evaluate my political and social beliefs. Everyone in this day and age should realize that the sun has set for the small businessman. Property rights just aren't the vogue these days.

Everyone who is anyone knows that it is morally right to impede the freedom of those who don't agree with our noble principles. Of course we have laws—but laws must suit our purpose. Talk about a great land governed by law is nonsense. The constitutionality of an anti-trespass law should not be tested in a bonafide court of law but in the enlightened streets of Chapel Hill.

In this courageous march for the rights of all men, our own Chapel Hill has taken giant strides. However in our never ending crusade there has been one stunning defeat. This tragedy is not really related to the current civil rights struggle, but it should be rectified. The doors to the stalls in the Men's Room in the library have been taken down. By doing this we are persecuting a minority group. Let us all join in the hope that Student Government will take action so long overdue to right this wrong. Then Chapel Hill will truly become THE ENLIGHTENED CENTER OF THE UNIVERSE.

Clothes

Editors, the Tar Heel:

I strongly agree with Dick Akers. Someone once said something about clothes making the man. This is quite true; in general, one can measure the degree of responsibility of a person by the neatness of his dress. It wouldn't be surprising if we taxpayers would up supporting most of these unkempt, unwashed, unshaven, undeodorized, unblack Negroes, while they contemplate their collective navel, among other things. If they're going to take on the responsibilities of the world, the least they could do is dress like responsible citizens.

"If we do our job in the University community carefully," she said "we can help maintain an environment in which students can ask any kind of question."

Miss Queen emphasized the necessity for not discounting the Y's religious activities.

"I hope we bear in mind our own needs and those of humanity when we do our community work," she said.

Miss Queen said she hopes the Y will continue to recognize its needs and modify its programs as necessary.

What does she think the Y can accomplish on campus? "I can't really answer that," she replied. "In an educational institution, you can never predetermine where the truth will lead."

The members of the council expressed the hope that all elements in the current civil rights dispute would work together for a peaceful and fair solution.

Swalin said the juke-box and automation have eliminated some of the positions of aspiring young artists. However, Swalin thinks the state and country are on a cultural upsurge and cites the Symphony as being an example of the upsurge.

The symphony director said his wife has been his main inspiration through the years.

"This operation has been a Joint Suffering," he said. There is one thing you learn when you work with something like the symphony for such a long time —whatever arrogance you had at the beginning is knocked out of you rather quickly. You run into a lot of big forces, big problems and big decisions. You learn a great deal of humility."

How does a symphony director work off the tensions of memorizing and directing long scores of classical music?

"I love to hike," Swalin said. "I am especially fond of mountain hiking."

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

THIS COULD EASILY be the greatest week in the history of North Carolina swimming. It could also be a week of disappointment, and it all depends on what happens in the ACC Swimming Championships which open this afternoon in Bowman Gray Pool and will run through Saturday.

To say that Coach Pat Earey's swimmers have had a good season would be an understatement; to say that the Blue Dolphins have the ACC meet all wrapped up would be foolish. The fact is the conference meet is so different from dual-meet competition anything could happen.

Last year NC State had a 7-0 mark in dual competition while UNC was 6-1 and Maryland was 5-2. Who won the championship meet? Maryland. And where did State finish? Third, behind the second-place Blue Dolphins. Thus the overall championship ended in a three-way tie between these three schools since both the final meet and dual-meet competition are added together to get the grand champion.

This winter it is North Carolina which enters the tournament with the top dual-meet record. Earey's swimmers seemingly have the strength to go all the way. But Earey says "Beware."

Beware of the Maryland Sea Turtles because of their depth. In the meet which starts today, points are awarded for the first five finishers (as opposed to the first three finishers in dual meets) on a 7-5-4-3-1 basis. Thus a team with many strong swimmers in a particular event stands a better chance of picking up a lot of points in tourney competition than in dual-meet competition. Such is the case with Maryland.

Maryland has as many as seven men entered in some events. Some of these will be scratched, but it gives an indication of the Terps' overall strength. This is what is keeping Earey and assistant coach Tom Cannon awake these nights. For planning the strategy for a swimming tournament is no easy task. Whether the Dolphins come out on top may well depend on Earey's decisions on when to race whom.

The Winner And New Champion (Oh No!)

JUST WHEN IT looked like we might have a little peace and quiet look what happens! Cassius Marcellus Clay is very much alive and babbling today, and now we must listen, and even believe.

At least we'll believe a little more than we did before. For the Louisville Lip became more of the Louisville Slugger Tuesday night, dazzling Sonny Liston as well as millions across America with a lightning-like quickness which brought him the world heavyweight crown .

This guy who says he's the greatest didn't do anything to disprove himself at Miami Beach. Except for that weird fifth round when he looked like Mister McGoo, Clay was on top. The challenger threw punches with a quickness and grace which hid their real power. Just when he jolted Liston's left shoulder is hard to say. He landed a flurry of assorted blows late in the first round, and this could have been it.

At any rate the sprained shoulder took a lot of ammunition out of Liston's No. 1 weapon—the big left—and probably prevented Sonny from finishing Clay in the fifth round when Cassius was having more trouble with his eyes (it is said that some lineament got in them while the trainer was fixing him up after Round 4) than he had had with Liston.

Actually we aren't complaining, as Clay is "good copy" and sportswriters will dote on anything they can get a good story out of. Besides, he may mature into the great heavyweight he can be a lot sooner than most of us thought he would. Clay still has a lot to prove, but he got a good start Tuesday night. Another Liston-Clay battle is sure to come, and we await it with renewed interest. We'll probably pick Sonny again, but we'll think a little more seriously about just what this World's Greatest Human can do.

Another Success Story In Florida

NOT SINCE A BUNCH of Pilgrims landed on that rock up in Massachusetts some 250 years ago has Plymouth looked as good as it did last Sunday in Daytona Beach, Fla.

The Chrysler car finished one-two-three in the Daytona 500, and, quite frankly, the Ford Motor Company is worried. Because a new era in stock car racing began last Sunday, and right now Ford is on the outside looking in.

Richard Petty, hitting 182 mph on the straight-aways, shattered the Daytona 500 record with a 154.334 average as he won in a breeze. And there is little doubt that Petty's average couldn't have been higher had not the yellow flags slowed him down. The old mark was Fireball Roberts' 152.529, set in a 1962 Pontiac two years ago—with no caution flags.

But as big as the Petty success story is, the real success story belongs to the Chrysler Motor Corporation and its newly-developed "hemi."

What is the "hemi?" As best can be explained, it is an engine, the revolutionary feature of which is the hemispherical combustion chamber. It has upped Chysler's horsepower by 50 to 75, and quite obviously has proved superior to Ford's wedge-type chambers.

Ford, which has always given full support to the stocks and has reaped many benefits from the top performances of its cars in the last three years, is on the spot. The company had planned to use this year's Daytona race in a big publicity drive. Now, that's all off. Instead Ford must conduct a different kind of drive—a drive to get back in the race. Whether it will do this by coming up with a "hemi" engine of its own, or by modifying its Fairlane model for stock racing remains to be seen.

Dolphins Go For ACC Title

By PERRY McCARTY

UNC hosts the ACC Championship Swimming Meet beginning today and running through Saturday. Some 100 or more swimmers are expected to churn the waters of Bowman Gray Pool during the three day competition.

For a myriad of reasons this year's championship looms as the best ever. Times throughout the league have been consistently faster than in previous seasons.

Surely the fact that this is an Olympic year contributes to intense interest in grooming outstanding swimmers to represent the United States in Tokyo this summer. Then too, each year more and more age group swimmers, boys who have been in the water almost since they could contributes to a host of seasoned performers.

If the old feudal adage that the host should be the best prepared still holds, then it is fitting indeed that UNC should assume the role this go-round. The Dolphins vanquished all ACC opposition for a sparkling 7-0 dual meet chart.

walk, enter the circuit and this

But several roadblocks remain if the UNC is to lay sole claim to the ACC diadem, a prize which has been shared piecemeal for the past two years. Coach Pat Earev quite frankly concedes Maryland the favorite's role on the strength of numbers alone.

While the contest for high point honors will be strictly a three-way affair between UNC, NC State and Maryland, the weaker squads are in a position to pick up fourth and fifth place finishes where they would have stood a chance a year or so ago.

Coach Earey and assistant Tom Cannon have fabricated a complex network of meet strategy. First they look to All Americas and Olympic hopefuls Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill for several seven point productions each.

Skilful juggling may offset Terp depth with NC State powers, namely Pat Gavagan and Bill McGinty. This will be the pivotal point, whether or not UNC entries will find their way into the event where they will be most effective.

Going for a win in the 400 medley relay today and a big 14 points probably will be Mann, Rick Forum, Fred Lipp and Davis Roberts. Merrill will swim either the 500-free or the 400-individual medley.

Dave Moody and Ernie Oare will compete in the one meter diving. Maryland has four top performers entered in this event. Chip Smith will swim the 50.

If the Dolphins are to win, they must rely on a number of swimmers whose recent showings give every indication that they can be counted on. Freestyler John Sheldon did a remarkable job at Maryland slicing a full five seconds off his 200 time and five more off his 500 mark.

Backstroker Scot Smiley is coming strong as are breaststroker Dick Boardman and distance freestyler Mike Bissell. If the Dolphins can contain the Terps in the first two days of competition they stand an excellent chance of annexing the crown in Saturday's shorter sprints and the 400-freestyle relay.

BREAKING A RECORD is nothing new for these Blue Dolphins. They've been smashing swimming marks all season. Left to right: Chip Smith (22.4 in 50-freestyle); Rick Forum (2:21.9 in 200-breaststroke); Harrison Merrill (1:48.2 in 200-freestyle); Thompson Mann (2:04.1 in 200-indiv. medley); and Freddie Lipp (2:02.1 in 200-butterfly).

Afterthoughts On The Fight

With DENNIS SANDERS

It's hard to determine who did the best job of summing up Clay's seventh-round TKO win. The first to try, naturally, was the brash Louisville Lip himself, who screamed into the radio mikes after the decision: "I am the Baby, I am the Baby. I'm the greatest . . . I am the King."

Joe Louis took a turn and came up with a classic understatement: "I think everybody in the building was surprised."

Everybody was surprised, especially the prognosticators who predicted that Liston would polish off Clay much in the same fashion that he handled Floyd Patterson.

But the post-fight interviews were not over. Liston, the man who didn't want to talk more than anybody in Miami Beach's Convention Hall, did manage to answer the few questions put his way.

Asked what happened, Liston grunted, "I hurt my shoulder. It felt like it was broke."

Did the ex-champ feel that he could take Clay in a rematch?

"I don't know. I'd have to think about it."

Clay's trainer, asked if his coaching had turned the tide, replied, "No, it was Cassius' style in the ring that won it." Clay carried it further: "I was too fast for him . . . I was just too fast."

In points, it was all even going into the seventh. Referee Barney Felix scored it 57-57, one judge favored Liston 58-56 and the other had Gaseous Cassius on top by the same score. The A.P. scorecard favored Clay in rounds, 4-2.

The forewarning might have come one month ago when Cincinnati sportswriter Pat Harmon columned: "I like Clay's chances of knocking off Liston."

Forewarning or not, winner or not, Clay wasn't through. He had one more question, this time for his mother, who stood quietly beside the ring with Clay's father.

"'Mom, didn't I tell you I was the greatest? What do you think now?" What could a mother say to her son, the heavyweight champion of the world?

700-Point Club Is Possibility For Billy, Jeff

GREENSBORO (UPI) — North Carolina's Billy Cunningham, premier point-maker of the Atlantic Coast Conference, and Duke's Jeff Mullins moved to within shouting distance today of the ACC's exclusive "700-point club."

Either could gain admission to the select circle should their teams reach the finals of the ACC Tournament at Raleigh.

If North Carolina wins the ACC championship and gain admittance to the NCAA Tournament, Cunningham would go into the national tournament with 662 points by maintaining his current average.

By the same token, should Duke win its second straight ACC title, Mullins would enter the NCAA Tournament with 646 points by maintaining his current pace.

Heels Aim For 3rd Without Shaff's Aid

By LARRY TARLETON

Believe it or not, UNC's Tar Heels still have a chance to finish third in the ACC race. All they have to do is beat Duke Saturday and hope that Clemson loses both of its remaining games, while South Carolina and Maryland lose at least once. Simple, isn't it.

To make matters worse cocaptain Charlie Shaffer suffered a sprained ankle in Monday's loss to Virginia. Shaffer will definitely be out of the Duke game, but hopes to see some action in the ACC tournament next week. The injury came on a night when Shaffer was the lone Tar Heel playing up to his ability. He collected 23 points and 12 rebounds.

The ACC season closes with two games Friday night and four games on Saturday. Friday night Virginia travels to South Carolina and Maryland is at Clemson. Saturday's games have Virginia at Clemson, Maryland at South Carolina, State at Wake Forest and Duke playing the Tar Heels at Woollen Gym. The 2 o'clock encounter with the Blue Devils will be regionally televised.

The Tar Heels must finish third or sixth to avoid a second round tournament meeting with Duke (assuming the Devils will get by the first round). Duke will be in the same bracket with the fourth, fifth and eighth place finishers, while Wake Forest, who has clinched second place, will be in the bracket with the third, sixth and seventh place teams.

The outlook isn't good for Dean Smith's boys. A win Saturday would help matters considerably, but they could still finish in a fourth place tie with South Carolina if the Gamecocks get by Maryland and Virginia. The Heels can't possibly finish any worse than a tie for fifth, however, so we really do have something to be thankful for.

Phi Kap Sigs Stun Phi Delt In Thriller

By PETE GAMMONS

Every thrill imaginable highlighted Tuesday's basketball action in one of the most heated days of the playoffs.

In the Fraternity Blue division, Phi Kappa Sig and ATO moved into the semi-finals. Phi Kap stunned Phi Delt in overtime, 31-29. John Alexander was the Phi Kap high scorer with 10, while John Poole led Phi Delt with 15. ATO rolled over PiKa with relative ease, 52-28, led by Sammy Simpson's 19 points. Phi Kap meets Beta and ATO meets DKE in the semis.

The Navy scored the most impressive win of the day, reaching the semi-finals of the Dorm Blue, by crushing the Town BB's, 67-18. Bill Vick with 24 and Jim McKinnon with 20 led the Navy. Led by Pat Harvey's 20 points, the Town Toughies toppled Everette, 53-31. Ehringhaus-B kept its hopes alive with a 56-36 voctory over Winston. Junior Edge had 21 for the winners, while Dan Taylor led all scorers with 22 for the losers.

Mangum was the fourth team to make it to the semis as it edged Alexander, 53-48. Nathan Ray with 17 led Mangum, which will meet Ehringhaus in their semifinal match, while the Town Toughies meet the Navy.

In other scattered action, David Adeimy poured in 35 to lead the Winston Waterboys to 61-47 win over the Alexander Prussians. The Avery Agrravators were the top scoring unit of the day as they whipped the Parker Pack, 77-39. Mike Spain and Bill Young each had 28 for the winners.

In the Graduate division Med-4 topped Dental-1A, 51-28, and Dental-5 likewise toppled Law-5, 58-28, to earn semi-final berths.

Big Sports Weekend—Frosh Host Duke At 9

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Why not beat Duke three times in one season? That's exactly what the North Carolina Tar Babies will be attempting to do tonight when they clash head on with the Blue Imps in a nine o'clock Woollen Gym attraction.

The battle between the two freshman quints is tonight's feature presentation in a big weekend of sports here in Chapel Hill. The ACC Swimming Championships, which started yesterday, will continue today and tomorrow in Bowman Gray Pool. Today's schedule calls for trials in the 200-butterfly, 200-backstroke, 200 - breaststroke, 200 - freestyle and 200 individual medley at one o'clock, with finals in these events tonight at eight.

Also on tap for tonight is a wrestling meet between Coach Sam Barnes' grapplers and a tough mat crew from NC State. The frosh meet at 5:45, with the varsity matches following immediately on the main floor of Woollen Gym. After the grunts and groans, it will be time for basketball.

The Tar Babies, who saw their 11-game victory string snapped by Virginia's one-point triumph Monday night, have already disposed of the Duke yearlings twice this year. The first time Ken Rosemond's boys won in thrilling come-frome-behind style at Durham, 81-78. The second time the Tar Babies opened up a big lead and held on to win, 90-82.

Both times it was Bobby Lewis (36.7) who was the big gun. He hit for 40 over there and 48 here. Tonight it may be 50! The jumping-jack already has two 50-point-plus games to his credit.

Joining Bob in the starting line-up for tonight's finale are the same four who have done so much all season long in bringing the Tar Babies to their present 12-3 record. Ian Morrison (20.2) and Tom Gauntlett (13.0) are the wings, and Donnie Moe (6.6) and Danny Talbott (5.8) are the guards.

Two key reserves on the squad are front courtmen Ben Thompson and Tom Parrish.

Duke is led by a high-scoring whiz from Seagrit, New Jersey, named Bob Verga. The dead-eye guard can really pop from the outside, and to Moe will fall the task of guarding him. The No. 2 man in the Blue Imp offense is center Bob Riedy, who also is the team's top rebounder.

Rosemond, who has seen his team knock off State twice, Wake twice and Duke twice, feels that this year's squad is the best ever in the shooting department. The team has crashed the century mark six times this season, and has been held below 80 only three times. Percentage-wise the team is 50.7 from the floor and 74.3 from the foul line.

Tomorrow the big sports weekend continues with the Duke-Carolina varsity basketball game at two, and the final day of the swimming championships, with trials at 9:30 a.m. and finals at 4:30 p.m.

FIREWORKS—Head cheerleader Tom Gruehn scrambles toward the top of the Chapel Hill Fire Department's hook and ladder to get a good view of tonight's fireworks display starting at 8 in Emerson Stadium in connection with a Beat Dook Pep Rally. The rally will be over in time for the UNC-Dook Freshmen game at 9.—Photo by Jim Wallace.

In Special Session

SG Reviews Year Before Legislature

The Mike Lawler administration passed in review before a special session of Student Legislature Tuesday night, and from all indications the 30 legislators present were impressed.

Lawler outlined the purpose of the presentation in his introductory remarks, and 15 of his committee chairmen gave a short review of their work this year. Each also prepared a written report which had been mimeographed and distributed to the legislators. It was the first time such a presentation had been held.

"The purpose of the presentation is two-fold," Lawler said. "We want to communicate to the Student Legislature and the electorate the work of the Executive Branch of SG this year, presenting a fair, critical vew of our work.

"In addition, we want a chance to properly evaluate our work so we can make appropriate changes in the present system."

Committees which reported on their activities include State Affairs (John McMillan, Toronto Exchange (Kellis Parker), CUSC (Johnsye Massenburg), International Students Board (Parker), University Abroad (Pete Range), Editors' Roundtable (Jeff Davis), Coop (Bob Jones), Academic Affairs (John Morris), Attorney General (Tim Oliver), Elections Board (Arthur Hays), Carolina Forum (John Ulfelder), and Communications (Fred Seely).

Two committees did not report to SL. The National Merit Scholar committee, chaired by Allison Webb, had not had a chance to evaluate their work, as the final stage of their job—bringing some 75 Merit Scholars to the campus—was not scheduled until the week before the presentation.

The Orientation Reforms committee underwent a change in chairmen and its report was not ready by Tuesday night.

A condensed version of the committee reports will be carried in the Daily Tar Heel at a future date.

Ehringhaus President Faces Impeachment

Dave Rendleman, president of Ehringhaus Hall, faces possible impeachment at a Men's Residence Council hearing Monday.

Gerry Good, MRC president, who charged Rendlemen with "mal performance of duties" as Ehringhaus president, called for the special hearing. Good made the charge at Wednesday's MRC meeting.

The MRC president charged Rendleman with not having attended the last five MRC meetings, allowing residents to open a keg of beer in the social room on Sunday night and not answering any official mail.

After the meeting a letter was circulated throughout the Residence Hall claiming Rendleman was being railroaded because he was a member of the Student Party. Good is a member of the University Party.

In other action, the MRC voted unanimously to revise its by-laws. At the next meeting, the Council will vote on an amendment to require dormitory newspapers to be approved by the Editor's Roundtable to receive funds from the MRC.

Point standings in dormitory competition were released. Everett Hall retained its number one position with 1442 points while Ruffin took second place with 862. Other dorms near the top were Ehringhaus, Alexander, Avery and Mangum.

Jerry Droze was elected to the MRC Court and Sonny Pepper was elected to replace Ed Burt as treasurer.

A motion by Paul Dickson to invite the student body president or vice president to speak on the civil rights boycott failed.

Solicitor May Fix Docket

By JEFFREY DICK

District Solicitor Thomas Cooper said yesterday he would try to give students a break after the grand jury decides whether to indict them.

Cooper explained that "nothing can be done until the grand jury has heard the cases and returned a bill. I don't even know which cases the grand jury will try next. All I do is hand them the bills of indictment in a big bunlde."

Cooper and Judge Raymond Mallard have come under criticism lately because the present court docket requires all defendants to be present throughout the entire term of Special Session of Orange County Superior Court until their cases are brought up for trial.

The solicitor added he will try "to inconvenience students less than others" when trials are scheduled. He said he hoped to do this by bringing up all the cases involving high school and college students first.

"I believe the grand jury might decide to try to take cases in groups according to where they occured." Cooper continued. "For example, the grand jury may decide to hear all the cases involving Clarence's one after another."

When asked if all prosecution witnesses would be required to appear in court every day until their cases are called, he replied "I would think so."

"We may find," he added, "that it will be possible to excuse some of the witnesses if the grand jury decides to take these cases in groups as I said before."

"I just don't know if the defendants will be able to appear in the same way. We're working on something now."

Hart Smells A Rat, Too

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Philip A. Hart (D.-Mich.) chairman of the Senate subcommittee which has investigated boxing, said Thursday his group will take a look at the arrangement which gave Sonny Liston promotion rights over heavyweight champion Cassius Clay's first title defense.

"This is not the kind of situation that to an impartial observer is calculated to improve confidence in the boxing business," Hart said.

He cited a United Press International story which said that for $50,000 a promotion firm headed by Liston obtained promotion rights to Clay's next fight even before Liston was dethroned by the brash young Kentuckian Tuesday night.

National Crackdown Ordered On Letters

An upsurge of college campus chain letter schemes involving United States Savings Bonds, Postal Money Orders and cash has prompted Chief Postal Inspector Henry B. Montague to order a nationwide crackdown on violators of the postal lottery and fraud laws.

The Chief Inspector noted a step-up in chain letter activity in college towns across the country. The participants, he said, appear for the most part to be college students.

He cited reports of chain letter schemes at colleges in Mississippi, Wisconsin, Indiana, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and New York, among others.

Montague warned that even though some of the chain letters involved are transferred hand-to-hand, and state "Do Not Mail," the schemes may be violations of the postal lottery and fraud laws, in that the proceeds from the chain letters are usually mailed.

The terms of 18 U.S.C. 1302 are broad enough to encompass anything concerning the conduct of a lottery, including bonds sent pursuant to an endless chain scheme even though the letters may be distributed by hand.

Montague noted that the U.S. Treasury Department also disapproves of the use of these schemes as a means of selling savings bonds. As early as February 1955, the Secretary of the Treasury asked all Federal Reserve Banks to advise all issuing agents to reject applications for savings bond purchases when the applicant states or where the agent has reason to believe the applications were made in connection with a chain letter scheme.

A reminder of this ruling has recently been sent by the Treasury Department to all of its state directors.

The typical chain letter provides for a monetary item to be sent to the name on the top of an enclosed enclosed list, after which that name is removed and the new participant's name is added to the bottom of the list. Copies of the chain letter are then sent to two or more people.

Generally, when savings bonds are used, the letter is purchased with a bond and another bond is sent to the person at the top of the list, whose name is then removed. The new participant adds his name to the bottom and tries to sell the letter to two additional participants in order to continue the chain and recover his investment.

CPU Ratifies New Charter

Hancock Is Elected Chairman Wednesday

The Carolina Political Union, a reincarnation of one of UNC's most prestigious organizations of the past, ratified a charter and elected a chairman last night.

Gerry Hancock, a junior from Charlotte, N. C., was elected chairman of the Union. Election of the other officers was postponed until the next meeting.

The Union's membership is now closed to the public. Since the membership can be as high as 30, additional persons will be considered to fill out the group.

The Union, founded in 1936 by political science students of Dr. E. J. Woodhouse, was discontinued in 1954.

It consisted of a limited membership, which met weekly to discuss major political and social questions and hear distinguished speakers.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Earl Browder and the Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan were a few of the speakers secured by the Union.

"I urge all persons interested in the Union to contact me," Hancock said. "We are interested in having persons of all political views in this organization."

Charter members include Hancock, Chuck Neely, Mike Chanin, Phil Baddour, Brick Ottinger, Neal Jackson, Don Curtis, John Ulfelder, Don Carson, Lane Brown, Nick Nicholson, Warren Ogden, Harold Berry, Bob Spearman, Paul Dickson, Bill Schwartz, Gerry Good, Sherry Stanley, and Fred Seely.

SSL Votes In Lawler

RALEIGH — The 27th Annual State Student Legislature (SSL) yesterday voted Mike Lawler in, Carolina graduate student Karen Rawling nearly in, and the Speaker Ban completely out.

Lawler, president of UNC's Student Body, was elected Speaker of the House by a 50-45 vote over Lynn Spruill, a male student at N. C. State.

Miss Rawling, UNC graduate student in political science, lost the election for President of the Senate to Bill Eyerman of East Carolina College by three votes.

Also at the opening joint session or plenary, a bill sponsored by Chowan College to repeal the controversial state Speaker Ban Law was passed unanimously.

The second bill on the agenda, sponsored by the UNC delegation, was presented last night. It would transform the N. C. General Assembly into a single or unicameral body rather than leaving it in its present House and Senate form.

Delegates representing 35 state colleges and universities are attending the conclave, which lasts through Saturday afternoon.

Pete Wales, chairman of the UNC delegation, said Carolina has 14 delegates, seven alternates and about 15 observers in attendance.

Carolina Symposium Hears Prof. Benoit

Emile Benoit, research economist and author, has accepted an invitation to address the Carolina Symposium.

Professor Benoit's speech "If Peace Breaks Out" will be given Monday, April 6. It will be centered about the question, 'Can the United States economy adjust to arms control?'

The economic aspects of disarmament and arms control is the special field of Professor Benoit. He has published extensively about this subject, and his latest major work, Disarmament and the Economy, was published in 1963.

Benoit was educated at Harvard (B.A., MA, Ph.D.). He was later senior Economist in the U. S. Labor Department, Attache in the U. S. Embassies in London and Vienna and an economist for the McGraw Hill publishing company.

Benoit has also served as consultant to the U. S. Department of State and to the U. S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

In recent years Professor Benoit has been directing an extensive research program on the economic aspects of arms reduction. He is a Professor at Columbia University on the Faculty of the Graduate Schools of Business and International Relations.

Disarmament and the Economy is a preliminary report on the material uncovered by the research program which Benoit directs.

In this report Benoit and his colleagues attempt to confront the great difficulties which disarmament would cause. Modern armament technique has created a highly specialized arms industry which is no longer the result of a conversion from peacetime production. Benoit considers the greatest problem to lie in the nature of the arms industry.

Ian, Tom Oscar-Winners Too

By LARRY TARLETON

The Bobby Lewis Show has been the brightest new show to premiere at Carolina this year. Now that the time is near for the annual awards, it seems certain that Lewis will walk away with the "Best Actor" award. However, fans of the show may have overlooked the fact that two performers are battling for the "Best Supporting Actor" award. Ian Morrison and Tom Gauntlett have complemented Lewis well in making his show such a success.

Morrison, a 6-2 guard, was the terror of Florida high school basketball while playing for St. Petersburg High School. Ian averaged 35 points a game his last two years in high school and was one of the most highly-sought athletes to come out of the state. Assistant freshman coach Donnie Walsh practically camped on Ian's doorsteps last spring, and with the help of visits by Dean Smith and Ken Rosemond, finally convinced Morrison that Carolina was the place to exhibit his basketball abilities.

Ian had never played competitive basketball until he was in the ninth grade. Baseball had always been Ian's favorite sport. He was an outstanding Little League and Pony League pitcher, and had even received Christmas cards from the Detroit Tigers (while he was still in Jr. high). He hurt his arm playing baseball the summer before he was in the ninth grade and decided to go out for basketball to stay in shape. Since then, basketball has been Ian's sport—he never returned to baseball.

Track coach Joe Hilton is anxious for the basketball season to end so he can get Morrison on the cinders, but Ian is not sure he will go out for the track team. He is thinking of giving baseball another whirl after a four-year layoff.

The St. Pete track team won the Florida state championship the last two years with Ian starring in three events. He ran the 440 in 49.3 seconds, a mark that is better than the Carolina record. He was also the anchor man in the mile relay and the sprint relay.

Rosemond says, "Ian is one of the finest outside shooters we've ever had here," and points to his 90.2 per cent accuracy at the foul line to illustrate his point.

Morrison is averaging 20.1 points per game for the Tar Babies, but Rosemond is quick to note that his average would be much higher with most clubs. Morrison has had some low-scoring games (10 against Elon and 15 against Duke) but in these games Lewis has done most of the scoring. Rosemond says that when the opponents are playing a zone, Ian will score a lot, but when they are in a man-to-man, the Tar Babies will try to work the ball to Lewis.

The best game for Ian came against State at Raleigh when he hit 13 of 20 from the floor and 7 of 8 from the foul line for 33 points. The State goons were ganging up on Lewis inside so Morrison calmly began popping from outside. Ian showed his value to the team when State cut the lead to three. He prompt-

This One Bears Watching, Monsieur-Senor

A friend of ours recently took a test to determine his proficiency in French, as part of the entrance requirements to a graduate school.

Like many of his classmates in similar situations, our friend did quite poorly. Not that he couldn't make general sense out of what he was given to read; he could and did. And it's not that he couldn't translate the material, after a fashion. He could do this also. But, as his examiner noted, our friend couldn't think in French—he couldn't therefore, qualify as anywhere near proficient in language.

Fortunately for our friend and many other students bent on continuing their education on the graduate school level, this lack of proficiency wasn't disqualifying in itself. It just meant that he'd have to get to work in the months between now and fall and learn how to think in French.

This situation would be understandable if our friend hadn't studied French in college. But he had—for a year and a half, the required length of time. Nevertheless, he wasn't anywhere near proficient in the language when the chips were down.

This is not to knock the French department. But it is to suggest that the level and mode of instruction in foreign languages, at UNC and elsewhere, is inadequate. Or that the standards for passing such courses are too low, and that too many students are being allowed to skim through. Or both.

We note this state of events by way of pointing up the need at UNC and elsewhere for close attention to the results of an experimental language program underway at Indiana University.

According to last Sunday's New York Times, the program is based on the principle that one becomes proficient in a language by using it—not just for three hours a week in a more-or-less rote manner, but by using it rather than English in the study of some regular subject.

Indiana plans to offer a special section of the History of Western Civilization in French, and Latin American History in Spanish. Robert F. Byrnes, chairman of Indiana's History Department, said that such language training will be extended to include a number of other courses in specialized fields of history if the experiment proves successful.

Clearly, this is one experiment whose results UNC ought to be vitally interested in. Success should pave the way for upgrading the effectiveness of UNC's foreign language instruction.

Recalcitrant, Old Moss - Backed Editors

One of the things we shall never mourn, if it ever passes from the scene, is the era of computerized education. Computers are obviously a boon to mankind, and a boon to scientific and not-so-scientific research, but in some departments on this campus the faculty seems to have stumbled upon computers and embraced them the way a small child finds a new toy.

We would never deny that every discipline offered at this University should be reviewed and scrutinized with every new approach to knowledge available, but it is cause for serious concern when a department emphasizes the use of computers to the point of partially neglecting the old, perhaps, but classical approaches to knowledge and learning.

The day of the computer has been with us for quite a while in the scientific fields, but only recently has it received extensive acceptance in such fields as Journalism and Political Science. Certainly the use of computers can aid the study of these subjects to some extent and can facilitate the teaching of the subject, but as a point of personal prejudice we would much rather get our facts and theories filtered through a man's mind than a bunch of tubes and wires.

Of course this is all just railing against reality since we are quite convinced that it is only a matter of time before we will be subjected to a computer's analysis of a Bach chorale or a Carravagio painting.

This recalcitrance in the face of the inevitable naturally puts us in the camp of such fearless organizations as the Anti-Digit Dialing League, the Anti-Zip Code League and unalterably opposed to such far-sighted organizations as SINA (Society for Indecency to Naked Animals).

But then, we're supposed to be unpopular.

Heroic Courage At Auburn U.

By DREW PEARSON

AUBURN, Ala.—When you get off the plane at Columbus, Ga., enroute to Auburn University, the first thing you see is a large signboard which reads: "Impeach Chief Justice Earl Warren and Save the Republic."

The sign is painted in striking colors, obviously an expensive job, and below in bold letters is the sponsoring signature: "The John Birch Society."

One of the next things you see on the streets of Columbus is a teenager in a Beatle wig. The Beatles that very same day had finished their tour of the U. S. A. and arrived back in London. Fads travel fast.

But at Auburn, things had changed. Not only is the Negro student, Harold Franklin, going about his business without a bodyguard and without insult, but the student leaders of Auburn have shown such courage in thumbing their noses at Gov. George Wallace's high-handed racial policies that he has put at least four of them on his black list.

The governor, in addition to taking time to speak all over the 49 states outside Alabama and running for President in some of them, also has time to keep a list of so-called subversives. Their chief crime has been opposing his views of race relations, and the chief criminals at Auburn are Harry Wilkinson, editor of the hard-hitting university paper, "The Plainsman"; Diane Snoddy of Huntsville, his associate editor, Bobby Boettcher who comes from Texas and is one of the Plainsman's columnists, and John Jeffers, son of the Baptist minister who fearlessly preaches better racial relations and, who despite a lot of criticism, preaches to the largest number of people in Auburn every Sunday—with one possible exception.

The one possible exception is Rev. Powers McLeod, a Methodist who has also bucked the policies of Governor Wallace and is high on his black list.

All of this points to the fact that there is a courageous white minority in Alabama which dares buck the Ku Klux Klan, the White Citizens Councils and ruthless segregationists led by Governor Wallace. To say that this minority is courageous is an understatement. It actually takes courage of a heroic brand to stand out against the majority.

Rev. Mr. McLeod, for instance, was abused and excoriated when he had the first Negro student in history, Harold Franklin, stop by his office en route to his first class at Auburn. Real purpose was to make sure no gun had been planted in Franklin's baggage—which would have given university authorities an excuse to throw him out.

Franklin attended his first day of classes without mishap, partly because Bill Van Dyke, giant all-star guard on Auburn's football team, came up to him, stuck out his hand and said: "I'm glad to have you here."

For befriending Franklin, Rev. Mr. McLeod has had pressure from some members of his congregation to leave town. At one point opposition became so intense that he called his wife and children together for a family conference, fearing life had become too disagreeable for his children.

The decision was summarized by his son Lewis. "Daddy," he said, "I want you to stay here until they run you away."

McLeod's brother Fletcher, also a Methodist minister, has received threats from the Klan. The first threat came when he was preaching at Brewton, Ala., and a warning voice came over the phone: "Preacher, you've been out mixing with the niggers. We're gonna burn a cross in front of your church."

"I'll be glad to have the publicity," McLeod replied.

The second warning came in the form of a threatened whipping party.

"Be sure to bring at least three men," said the Methodist preacher.

"Why?" asked the Klansman.

"Because I've got two barrels on my shotgun and I'll take care of the first two."

The Central Methodist Church in Montgomery also showed courage when it invited Auburn's Negro student to speak. Two of Governor Wallace's private snoops were in the congregation with tape recorders to report to the governor on what he said.

Foot In Mouth

Dear "Sonny in One,"

"I wouldn't get in a ring two miles wide with the guy. Unless you gave me a machete. Or a gun. And six bullets. It would take that many to get Sonny down on one knee."

We thought, as we read your article Tuesday morning, how stupendous it would be if Gaseous Cassius could disprove the snide remarks from that elementary gibberish:

"The Champion will win inside of three. Seconds not rounds. . . . Don't look for a long fight. One guy parked his car in a twenty minute zone to watch the second Liston-Patterson fiasco. I wouldn't even turn off the ignition for this one . . . The betting here is not whether clay will win or lose, but whether he will show up . . . The only way Clay can survive the eighth round is by hiding under the ring until the ninth."

Look familiar, Mr. Kirkpatrick? It should! At exactly 10:50 p.m. on the same Tuesday, "The Greatest" threw all of that sarcasm into your face. He did exactly as he predicted only it happened in seven rounds.

Yes, the impossible had happened! Clay had put his fist where his mouth was and made truth of sarcasm.

Someday, Mr. Kirkpatrick, you will learn that a certain amount of common sense must form the foundation of sarcasm. A "foot in the mouth" is a common ailment of sarcastic commentators.

We read your article again at 11:10 p.m. We enjoyed it much better the second time. As a matter of fact, we even chuckled to ourselves. The chuckle was at your expense, Mr. Kirkpatrick.

Shocking

Editors, The Tar Heel:

It was a very shocking experience to see on the Sunday news page (Durham Morning Herald, February 9) a destructive piece of propaganda regarding those who have the courage to fight the "speaker ban law"—an article which used the name of Duke University in the wrong context. It was doubly shocking to see that error repeated in Duke's own student Chronicle, February 11th, with the headline: "University architect, Butler praises gag law."

A University is a front line of defense of freedom of speech—of the right of a Mr. Butler to express his views, as well as those of his opposition to express its views. The error in this instance is in categorizing the speaker inaccurately because this inaccuracy leads to the false conclusion that he is an official spokesman for Duke.

I think a great deal of the Chronicle. I enjoy it and admire those who work so hard to turn out an imaginative newspaper with a great deal of information and in general a progressive, constructive point of view. My reason, then, is not to carp but to say that this paper means so much that we hate to see it sacrifice accuracy for the price of a sensational news story—at least about Duke University details. Students have been inquiring about this particular affair and have been confused and disturbed.

One of the most upsetting aspects of this distorted picture is the unkind statement about Chancellor Aycock, an intrepid educator, respected and highly regarded by the Duke faculty.

If there are those who have any doubt about Duke's belief in freedom of speech one has only to remind them of the Trinty College tradition, the Bassett case, Dr. Few's masterful handling of the Norman Thomas visit in the days when Thomas was considered controversial, and President Emeritus Hart's and President Knight's words championing academic liberty.

Legislature

Editors, The Tar Heel:

For the first time in my three years of residence at this University I attended a session of Student Legislature. The occasion which moved me from my usual skeptical and indifferent attitude toward student government was the special session held last week concerning a resolution on civil rights.

For those who have never witnessed a session of the Student Legislature, I recommend that they do. Perhaps confusion is innate in politics or perhaps I just never realized that representing people could be a complex task. Nevertheless, amid the noise of many talking and few listening, there was a certain subtle display of political fireworks apparent.

Case in point was one vote on the controversial "boycott" provision. On this particular vote there was a tie which threw the decision to Speaker Bob Spearman (UP) as to whether the "boycott" provision would remain in the resolution or be taken out. For the first time of the evening Spearman seemed to be at a loss for words.

Out of the political shuffling which followed a UP legislator, Dotson, stood up, was recognized, and asked, "Is it too late to change my vote?"

Spearman gladly granted permission. Dotson changed his vote in favor of the boycott provision advocated by most of the SP legislators, thus breaking the tie, giving the SP a victory, and relieving Spearman of the necessity to make the decision.

There is nothing particularly unusual about a fellow changing his mind, but it was apparent to many of us on the back row that Dotson had changed his vote against his will, for immediately after changing his vote he stalked out of the room in disgust, leaving an obscene explotive ringing in our ears!

Why did a UP legislator change his vote apparently against his will to give the SP a victory? Why did he make this sacrifice? What political maneuvering on the UP side of the aisle could have prompted Dotson to give the victory to the SP and take the decision out of the hands of Bob Spearman?

Was it because the UP leaders wished to save Spearman from the necessity of committing himself on the boycott issue, and if so, why?

While I can not claim to be on the "inside" of either political party, I do suspect that there was more than the boycott issue at stake in the above drama. I hope that those of us who have heretofore been indifferent about the way we are "represented" will attend some of these sessions and find out just what shenanigans are going on.

Four-Oh

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The other night in a Student Party meeting, I understand that some reference was made "To shooting down the Great 4-0."

The only person I can associate with that number 40 is Ken Willard. Now Ken is a damn good halfback, and a pretty fair outfielder too. Why anyone would want to shoot him down is beyond me completely.

Perhaps the student party member who made that statement would like to clarify it for me . . . I'm kinda dense at times . . . especially on campus politics.

'Puritan Resolve'

The Greensboro Daily News

CHAPEL HILL — Those who ask themselves why C.O.R.E chooses the university village for an "open city" showdown may need to update their memories of Chapel Hill. The home base of Southern racial heresy (as some have thought it) is certainly an unlikely candidate for the first American version of what Madame Nhu calls "barbecue shows"—yet even they have been threatened.

One explanation is obvious: Today there are two Chapel Hills—an old Chapel where Horace Williams tethered his goats and everybody knows everybody else, and a Chapel Hill the trading town. With the Research Triangle drawing thousands of non-university people, the old town is lined with haberdasheries and flanked with costly restaurants. Suddenly, too. One place, for instance, which refuses to admit Negroes to its soft lights and $12 steaks was ten years ago little more than a gas station vending barbecue on the side.

As a dual city, then, Chapel Hill has not even a trace of that "business power structure" which is elusive in the most commercial town—for much of the power remains with the university and the university is officially neutral. The "Freedom Committee," however, holds up to Chapel Hill merchants the "progressivism" of the university, demanding that the mercantile city conform to an ethos long attributed to academic Chapel Hill.

This is not to suggest that the mercantile reaction is entirely orthodox. The mayor of Chapel Hill, to hear the demonstrators tell it, has taken a do-nothing, wait-and-see attitude; but he has also delivered himself of the fairly startling view that it is "criminal" of a business to deny a Negro service.

Yet agreement is slight between the merchants and the "Freedom Committee." The merchants, increasingly put off by lawless tactics, insist that the town is roughly 90 to 95 per cent "open." The demonstrators say that figure depends too largely on places where racial bias is not at issue. The student paper, in a survey of over 100 businesses where racial bias is pertinent, claims it found some 25 per cent in some way discriminatory.

To find the other explanations, one might look in on the demonstrators—the "Chapel Hill Freedom Committee." Though it is only a few blocks from affluent Franklin Street, the side street committee headquarters, in a large dusty room over a run-down funeral parlor, is another world—a world presided over by John Dunne, a young Ohioan who gave up his Morehead Scholarship and dropped out of UNC to lead the demonstrations. The "freedom committee" is a coalition of protest groups, ranging from CORE—his own—to the student Non-violent Co-ordinating Committee to the NAACP.

The movement's architects and leaders, as well as its boosters among the students, wear their zeal amiably enough. But it is, one must admit, a rather foggy sort of revolution—for the demonstrators say quite frankly they are not protesting any one thing in particular but a condition—a whole spectrum of grievances. Their attitude, indeed, is less zealous than it is categorical and politically ingenuous.

Many of the demonstrators and their supporters would seem to have awakened relatively recently to racial injustice, and to many it has the outrage of novelty.

"Heck," one of the student pundits confessed, "I was in the Navy for four years and never thought much about the race question until fairly recently."

Shakily grounded as they would seem in the intractable historical postulates about race politics upon which most of their elders, segregationist and integrationist alike, proceed, their vision of the future is both refreshing and frightening. They are, for instance, politically defiant — vastly impatient with "moderates" who plead the slow ways of the political bartering system, as with legalists who insist that their use of scofflaw tactics undercuts their most vital weapon—law and order. In its extreme form, this view emerges in statements such as, "to the average Negro, Sanford and Lake are little different—both simply 'white governors in Raleigh.'"

The Chapel Hill Freedom Movement burns, finally, with an almost Puritanical resolve that the demonstrators will either bring the old town into the kingdom of the enlightened or they will soundly thwack its reputation for racial progress and invite the world outside to hear the hollow sound.

Doubtless they exaggerate this reputation and misunderstand its sources. But they think they have leverage here, for if they change the racial climate they believe they can reduce the state's industrialization prospects. Certainly the symbols of slow but sure change upon which white North Carolina — increasingly comfortable white North Carolina—plumes itself are ashes on their tongues. Racial injustice, in their pristine vision, is staggering: It must be changed drastically. That is the formula, like it or not.

'Favorite Game'

By BILLY KEATING

"The Favorite Game", by Leonard Cohen. The Viking Press, New York. $4.50.

This touchingly lyrical first novel by Leonard Cohen is the soul-revealing epistle of a young man. The young man in question is localized in time and place—the present time in Montreal. The almost disconcerting present and the heretofore much unpublicized Canadian city blend to make the book contain an even more astonishing revelation. The protagonist is the author, who describes himself in a section to be identical with the dust jacket picture. It is the story of an unduly sensistive youth who makes his way through the "hard, cruel world" with remarkable ease and with a great variety of people helping in his search for the upstream spawning ground.

Judaism, and Lawrence Breavman's saturation with it, forms an important part of the book that distinguishes it from others of its kind and puts it in a class different from others of an almost similar nature. Breavman's childhood, his friends Krantz and Lisa, and the games they played change the tone of the book, and the reader learns of the would-be sexual experimentation of Lisa and Breavman in a childishly comical seriousness. Krantz serves as a measure of Breavman's vibrant awareness, and it is Krantz who offers the practical service of those who are put into the position of curbing the over-active imagination of their best friends and at the same time provide a basis for their friendship to continue.

Breavman's home life is brought so impressively to the reader's mind that he is entranced at the thought of the inquisitive young boy who at his father's funeral notices that his bearded uncle doesn't wear a tie. Breavman's attitude to death is the unsullied, morbid interest of the naive. When his white rat dies, he buries it under the pansies which flourish, and the young boy takes new interest in smelling the pansy that his father wears in his buttonhole.

It is this quality of reality-compassion with a macabre viciousness—that makes the hero appealing throughout the book, long after one's interest would have flagged at the well known adolescenta dventures. These are much more—Breavman is susceptible to more intense feelings and betrays them with a disarming honesty that is remarkably successful with the many understanding women in his life. If he can be said to be promiscuous, it is an explained promiscuity, one that is understood by this man's, and every man's, capacity for living and feeling needed. Paradoxically Breavman makes quite a fetish of his need rather than that of those around him. His detachment from his hypochrondiac mother and his egoistic relationships are symptoms of his self-infatuation that draw the thin line this side of callousness.

Breavman's affair with Shell is handled with such poignancy that had there been any doubt as to the autobiographical quality in the book it would surely be demolished by the account of the delightful hedonistic adventure between two kindred souls.

Breavman takes a job at summer camp, courtesy of his old friend Krantz, and he finds another kindred soul in one of his small campers, Martin Stark—capital S, small t, small a, small r, small k, no e. It is this affinity for the young orderly mind that indicates Breavman's wish for freedom and individuality more than anything else in the book. He excuses the boy from the boring round of camp activities so that he can satisfy himself by counting blades of grass and killing large numbers of mosquitoes in a nearby swamp. This episode is so powerful in style and content that the reader must take some time to recuperate before finishing the book.

Sensual and intelligent, the book places itself on the "altar of love" to be sacrificed (corny as it sounds and probably is if thought about in this manner too long) in the same manner as does Cohen himself. The reader can realize with what motivation the author has asked his question and found the answer.

A Proclamation

To the editors of the Daily Tar Heel:

We, the undersigned, would like to have it known that, even though we may, or may not, approve of the tactics of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, we agree with its basic ideals, those of racial equality. Although some of us have no desire to become involved in the Civil Rights Demonstrations and have never so much as carried a picket's sign, we intend to at least do our own small part by boycotting those businesses which refuse to admit that all men are equal, regardless of race, creed, or national origin.

Foilers Edge Law-I In OT

By PETE GAMMONS

In Wednesday's most exciting Intramural activity, the Dental School Foilers nipped the Law I in overtime, 40-34. Glen Howdon led the Foilers' scoring with 14, and led the rally that led to the tie and eventually to the victory. Next the Foilers play the Med 4 in their semifinal match.

In the Dorm White division, the Ehringhaus-B Queens tipped the Parker Pubs, 45-43, to advance into the quarterfinals. They were led by Tom Newman with 13. They will face the Craige-B Alkaceltics, who reached the quarters by routing the Ehringhaus-B Jacks, 57-33. Robin West led the Alkaceltics with 18.

In a quarterfinal match, the Winston Waterboys crushed the Craige-A Ballhawks, 44-25. High scoring Dave Adeimy again led the Waterboys with 19. In winning, they earned the right to meet the Joyner Jokes in the semis, who defeated the Winston Skirtchasers, 43-37. Jimmy Dean led the Jokes with 16, while Gary Guthrell, also with 16, led the Skirts.

In the only handball action, the Phys Ed Peacocks won the right to meet the Physics Fiends in last night's finals in the Grad Division by stopping the Physics Finks, 3-0. Fred Mueller in singles, Paul George and Bennett Williamon, and Dan Roth and Tom Parham in the doubles were the Peacock winners.

Matmen Host State Tonight

By PETE GAMMONS

The Tar Heel grapplers face another stern test tonight as they host NC State. Unofficially State has already beaten Carolina once, January 9 at Blacksburg, Va. But the Tar Heels won't concede a thing, for the winner gets the second spot behind Maryland in the ACC.

State brings in three fine veterans and some talented sophomores. Pete Sawhill, Steve Barnes, and Jeff Fountain are all three year vets. Fountain (heavyweight) will meet captain Jerry Cabe, who is finishing out his Woollen career. Barnes (137) will meet either Russ Simmons or Dick Sargent, while Sawhill will probably meet Steve Lister (177), if Lister can meet his weight.

Paul Wellstone (123) will be shooting for an all-time UNC scoring record, and tries to keep his perfect record going. Ken Furr (130), Roy Haggerty (147), Dick Blackmon (157) and Elliott Dworin (167) are the other Carolina starters. This will also be Blackmon's last home appearance, and he would like to make it a good one.

The Frosh will put their 6-1 record on the line in the preliminary at 5:45. Tom Fremusisyn (123), Gary Meyers (137), Jake Jacobson (157), Ed Spencer (167), Bill Quarrles (177) and Jim Munday (mw) will all have to do well in order for the team to top the Pack. It is expected that Jimmy Goodwin (130) and Wayne Verlenden (147) will continue their perfect records.

The varsity match will be immediately after the frosh match, and will precede the frosh basketball game against Duke. Coach Barnes is expecting a good crowd, and hopes that it will spur the matmen on in their last regular season meet.

–Gauntlett 72 Man On Links–

ly took charge by settling everyone down, and hitting five straight jumpers from 30 feet out.

Gauntlett, a 6-4 forward from Dallas, Pa., also deserves much credit for the Tar Babies' 12-3 record to date. Tom is averaging 13.0 points per game, but the coaches agree that his greatest asset is his passing ability. His beautiful feeds have given Morrison and Lewisnumerous easy baskets.

Rosemond says, "Tom hasn't gotten the recognition that he deserves. He is our top defensive player and always guards the opposing team's best big man. Tom deserves a lot of credit for Bob's high rebounding aberage. He blocksthe big man out making it easier for Bob to get the ball."

Gauntlett is another victim of springtime in Chapel Hill. He was being wooed by several major colleges and was having trouble making up his mind until he visited the Carolina campus last spring. Tom says he really made up his mind then, but adds that he and his parents were also impressed with the Carolina recruiters.

Tom was also an outstanding pitcher for his high school baseball team, and freshman coach Bill Lovingood is anxious to take a look at Tom's southpaw slants.

A lefthander on the basketball court and baseball field, Tom plays his best game, golf, righthanded. The second time he played the course at Finley he shot a 72.

Coach Smith says that at the moment it is hard to determine how these two boys will fit into the varsity plans next year. He says that there will be plenty of competition for the starting berths next season, and adds that this competition will produce better depth.

Smith says, "Ian's outside shooting should stop the defenses from jamming the middle on Cunningham, but he will have to improve his defense and ball handling."

On Gauntlett, Smith says his exceptional ability for spotting the open man should also help the varsity next year, but adds that Tom will have to improve his rebounding.

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Here are a few facts concerning scratchy, non-catchy Erythema solare—better known as sunburn. A leading dermatologist had this to say.

"Sun ages the skin. Too much of it over long peroids destroys the elastic fibers, or connective tissues, and they become degenerated.

"These fibers are like rubber bands and hold the skin taut. If you overdo it, even with a tan, the rays get down into the connective tissues."

Forgetting skin and sun for the moment, let's speak of your hair. Is it a problem — a lank, limp, spiritless problem? Actually, you don't have a great problem at all. There are always the excellent facilities and stylists of Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin to serve you. Try us. Phone 943-4335.

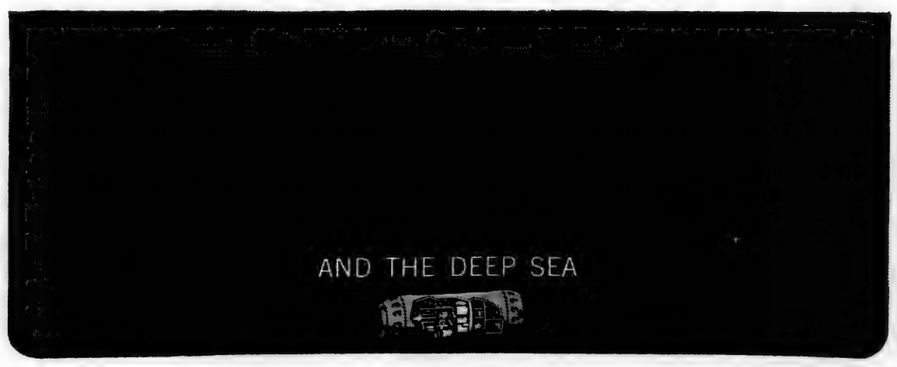
BETWEEN OUTER SPACE



THERE'S A WIDE RANGE OF OPPORTUNITY IN THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES

To outer space and into the deep sea, we take the sum total of our scientific and managerial knowledge. A case in point is Telstar, which represents the first step toward a worldwide communications system. Another example, the new deep-sea amplifier that simultaneously transmits two-way messages. Both communications triumphs stem from Bell System planning, research and development.

Such trailblazing projects command the best of managerial and scientific talent. That's why you'll find, throughout the Bell System, men with college training as diverse as the responsibilities they shoulder. Their backgrounds run the gamut from liberal arts and business courses to science or specialized engineering majors.

Admittedly, the work is demanding. It requires that unusual caliber of man who finds a greater satisfaction in challenge than in ready solution . . . who is eager to see his education yield dividends . . . who wants an immediate opportunity for leadership.

Men with this kind of impatience will discover the stimulation, welcome and rewards they seek in the telephone business.

Meet Mighty Duke At 2 O'Clock

Can Tar Heels Pull A Cassius Clay Today?

By JOHN MONTAGUE

A dark, dark cloud hangs over the North Carolina basketball scene. If there is a silver lining behind that cloud, we'll know it by four o'clock this afternoon.

Powerful Duke — the nation's fourth best basketball team so the writers say—comes to Woollen Gym at two this afternoon owning a 19-4 record, a 12-1 mark in the ACC and five straight victories over the Tar Heels.

The Blue Devils are a good bet to make it six in a row this afternoon. But then Sonny Liston was a good bet to smash Cassius Clay, the Yankees were favored in the last World Series and the Giants were a solid choice over the Bears for the NFL title.

Coach Dean Smith's squad could be in better shape than they are. As if the current slump wasn't enough, the Tar Heels have also been hit by the injury bug. Charlie Shaffer is definitely out with a sprained ankle. Bill Galantai had his enflamed knee drained yesterday and will see little if any action. And the bench is even shorter with the illness of Jim Smithwick and Bill Harrison.

"This is the worst physical condition we've been in," said Smith yesterday. "We were held back some by the illness of some of the boys in early January—the Notre Dame game and the first Wake Forest game—but I believe this is worse."

How will the Tar Heels make up for the rebounding of Shaffer in a game in which rebounds may be at a premium?

"It's impossible to make up for Charlie's offensive rebounding," Smith said, "but, in the main, we'll look to (Bob) Bennett, (Bryan) McSweeney, and of course Billy (Cunningham) for good work under the boards."

The coach, who admitted the last two weeks have been his biggest disappointment as a coach, also said that Mike Cooke will be playing in Shaffer's offensive spot with either Ray Hassell or Johnny Yokley handling quarterback chores (normally Cooke's duty).

Cunningham, who'll be trying hard for a personal comeback after two off-games, is set for the pivot, with McSweeney and Ray Respess at the forwards. Bennett is likely to be the No. 1 front court sub, with Pud Hassell ("real good defensively") and Artie Katz ("did good rebound job at Virginia") also ready for reserve duty.

In the first meeting with Duke (won by the Devils, 84-64), Smith tried a somewhat different offense which saw Cunningham bringing the ball up court, setting up the play and then going for the basket. It was only partially successful, and Smith says he probably will not use it again unless it is necessary to avoid a tight Duke press.

"Duke has great reserve strength at the guards," said Smith. "Often they'll try to wear the other team's guards out, by pressing them all over the court. With Cunningham back there, we thought they'd have to put a big man on him and thus loosen up their defense a bit. But (Hack) Tison really surprised us with his defensive ability last time."

The bench is just one big strong point of a balanced Duke Club which has many strong points. Coach Vic Bubas has the big men under the basket in 6-10 Jay Buckley (12.6) and 6-10 Tison (12.3). He has able backcourt leadership in Buzzy Harrison (8.5) and Denny Ferguson. And he has a guy named Jeff Mullins.

"Jeff is a tremendous shooter," said Smith on the All-American forward who is second only to Cunningham in ACC scoring with a 24.0 average. "He's got great speed and jumps a lot like Bobby Lewis. And he follows his shots beautifully."

The 6-4 Mullins is a top-notch offensive rebounder, and it has been the second shot along with the wicked fast break which has made the high-scoring Blue Devils what they are.

When you look at that Duke roster, you know the Tar Heels are the underdogs. But as long as the Tar Heels themselves don't know they're beat, anything can happen. This game this afternoon will find the UNC boys on their home court. After a disastrous road trip (5 losses in 6 games) it will be a welcome sight.

Smith squelches all rumors of disunion on the club. He also doesn't make excuses.

"We've shot poorly in some games, rebounded poorly in others and worked the ball poorly in others. But there's nothing wrong with this team that a good win won't cure."

That win could come today. But the Tar Heels will have to play their best game of the season to knock off the mighty Blue Devils in this, the one hundredth meeting between the two arch-rivals.

Suicide Of Duke Student May Be Key To Thefts Here

By JEFFREY DICK

DURHAM — One of four Duke University students possibly implicated in a series of thefts at UNC was found dead in his car here yesterday morning, an apparent suicide victim.

The death of William George Prathey added a mysterious note to a theft ring uncovered by Duke campus policemen Thursday. It has not been determined that Prathey was connected with the ring, but officials indicated he may have been.

Duke officials would not release the names of the three Duke students who have confessed to the string of thefts at UNC during semester break.

UNC Campus Safety Officer A. J. Beaumont said he is trying to determine who owns a $600 portable Garrard stereo phonograph which Duke police say was stolen from UNC.

The Duke officers said they have recovered 30 record albums, a sunlamp, a suitcase, an electric shaver and a large variety of men's clothing. The officers said the stolen articles were found in the rooms of the accused students and several of their friends.

Duke Police Chief W. C. A. Bear said, "An investigation is still in progress. We have no idea at present how many more students are implicated."

Durham police said Prathey's body was found in his car, parked in the picnic area of Duke Park here. They said a hose had been strung from the exhaust system into the car.

Everett Hall Hears Baker

Quinton Baker, vice president of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, Thursday night told some 30 residents of Everett Residence Hall of the background, methods and goals of the civil rights movement.

Baker, a Negro, is president of the state youth NAACP organization and a senior at mostly-Negro North Carolina College in Durham. He has been arrested several times in connection with the recent wave of racial protests in Chapel Hill.

Aycock Is Top Citizen

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock was named last night as the "Citizen of the Year" at the first annual awards banquet of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Chamber of Commerce.

Aycock, who will leave the Chancellorship July 1 to return to his old job as Professor of Law, received the award in "surprise" ceremonies at the Ranch House. Aycock was unaware that he would receive the award.

Aycock was chosen by a secret committee of community leaders appointed by Charles M. Shaffer, president of the new Chamber of Commerce.

The citation presented to Aycock read:

"In recognition of his untiring efforts to promulgate the academic excellence of the University of North Carolina; to develop an attitude of personal responsibility among al clitizens and a corporate responsibiiity among all businesses; to instill an aura of affectionate understanding between the University and the Chapel Hill community.

"The Chapel Hill - Carrboro Chamber of Commerce proudly bestows on William Brantley Aycock this 1963 Citizen of the Year Award."

New Demonstrations Threatened In Md.

PRINCESS ANNE, Md. (UPI)—Negro students, aided by comedian Dick Gregory, stiffened their desegregation demands Friday and threatened new demonstrations in this racially tense college town where violence has erupted.

Gregory and student leaders from Maryland State College met with town officials.

In addition to their previous demand for immediate desegregation of all restaurants, the Negroes demanded:

—Complete desegregation of all public facilities.

—That all charges be dropped against demonstrators arrested during previous disturbances that triggered violence.

—Businesses in town begin hiring Negroes immediately.

Mistrial Called For Woman Sit-In

A mistrial was declared Thursday night in the Women's Council ing out of her residence hall over out of her residence hall over night without permission in connection with a sit-in protest.

The Women's Council gave three reasons for declaring the mistrial:

1. There was a lack of clarification of the charge against the coed. A misunderstanding arose whether "unladylike conduct" was included in the charge. The Council ruled that it was not.

2. The material witnesses did not prepare or submit adequate written statements. According to Women's Council procedure, material witnesses should prepare written statements of their connection with the case or information they wish to introduce. These statements should be given to the investigating member of the Attorney General's staff assigned to the case.

3. There was a lack of adequate communication between the defense counsel and the Attorney General's staff.

Women's Council chairman Sara Anne Trott said the trial had been rescheduled for Monday at 6:30 p.m. in room 09 of Gardner Hall.

A second coed also was scheduled to appear before the Council on a similar charge. Her trial was postponed until Monday night.

5 Students Get D. C. Internships

Five UNC students have been awarded Congressional Internships for this summer.

A Barron Holmes, David A. Lane, Peter Wales, Sidney R. Waldman and Roy L. Sparrow have been selected, according to Dr. Donald Matthews of the Political Science Department.

Holmes, from Charleston, S.C., is a political science major and a member of Beta Theta Pi Fraternity.

Lane, a sophomore from Durham, praticipates in the honors program, is a member of Phi Eta Sigma and majors in history and math.

Wales, a junior from Loudenville, N.Y. is a member of Chi Psi Fraternity and is in the honors program. He is an English major.

Waldman, a graduate student in political science, is from Highland Park, Ill.

Sparrow is a sophomore from Chapel Hill who has been in the Air Force for three years, and is in the political science honors program.

The Governor's Office reported that the State Interns would be announced sometime next week. The Governor's legal advisor, Joel Fleishman, said the interns have been picked, but not all of them had replied to the acceptance letters.

FLY!

Have you reached the end of your string?

Are you looking for something new and different to do?

Well, you might date the lovely creature shown here, but we happen to know she's unavailable. So instead, why not fly high by entering the Daily Tar Heel's first annual Kite Contest next weekend.

Hugh Stevens, DTH Kite Editor, announced yesterday that the giant spectacle will be held next Saturday, March 7 at the Intramural Field. Fly-off time is 1:30 p.m.

"Kite flying has been called a lost art," Stevens said, "and we hope to disprove this wild claim by having UNC students produce some top-flight flights next week."

"I think UNC students can go fly a kite as well as anyone," he continued.

Stevens and Mickey Blackwell, Executive Kite Editor, have made a number of trial runs from the Morehead Parking Lot in the past few days, and pronounced conditions "excellent" on clear days.

Judging for the contest will be based on four categories: the largest kite, the smallest kite, the most beautiful kite, and the kite with the most string out.

"All kites must fly," Stevens said, "and all except those for the distance category should be homemade."

A number of merchants will provide the prizes for the event, including pizza dinners, shirts, and records. The Hub, La Pizza and Kemp have donated prizes, as well as the Dairy Bar, which will give away all the banana splits that two people can eat at one sitting.

Judges for the event are not completely set, but Joel Fleishman, legal assistant to the Governor, has accepted and will be on hand to help decide the winners.

"We have invited Otelia Connor, and we are hopeful of getting Billy Cunningham, the Human Kite," Stevens announced.

Individuals or groups may enter their kites, but no more than a three-man team may actually take part in the flying of the kite. Entrants should sign up at the DTH offices in Graham Memorial not later than 6 p.m. Friday. In case of inclement or unsuitable weather, the contest will be held on Sunday. The public is invited.

As an extra attraction, Fred Seely, DTH Kite Tail Editor, and a panel of judges will name a "Kite Queen" to be on hand for the event. Judges include Rosemary Ezra and Ginny Lawler.

BEAT DOOK—Despite snow, fireworks lit up Fetzer Field last night just prior to the UNC-Dook freshmen match, as part of a Beat Dook Pep Rally. Today's varsity game will wind up UNC's regular season play and pave the way for next week's ACC Tournament in Raleigh.

MRC President Denies Statement

Rendleman Strikes Back

Ehringhaus President Dave Rendleman yesterday countered charges by Men's Residence Council President Gerry Good that Rendleman should be impeached for "malperformance of duties." Rendleman said Good's cahrges "are ridiculous with no basis whatsoever.

"This whole thing is a total surprise to me," Rendleman said. "I was really shocked at Mr. Good's absurd charges."

Good yesterday denied making the statement that appeared in the DTH. He commented "I have made no formal accusations, nor will I make formal accusations, except in the MRC hearing.

"This is MRC business, and if Mr. Rendleman desires to disclose it to the press it is up to him."

Good was quoted in yesterday's DTH as saying that Rendleman would face possible impeachment at a special MRC meeting Monday. Good said Rendleman hadn't attended the last five MRC meetings, had allowed residents to open a keg of beer in the social room last Sunday and had not answered any official mail.

In reply to these charges, Rendelman said, "I just can't understand Mr. Good coming up with something like that without doing some investigation in the dormitory."

Rendleman answered the charges individually.

"Mr. Good has called on me from the floor of those five meetings he accuses me of missing. So I couldn't have missed five straight meetings."

Concerning the second charge, Rendleman said, "If I was to be held responsible for that, why weren't charges brought against me then. Charges were brought against the dormitory secretary, but they were dropped Thursday."
